Re: MISSISSIPPI REGISTRATION

We tried to telephone J. P. Coleman in Ackerman, Mississippi, for an estimate on Negro and white registration in Mississippi. We felt that since he had just completed a state-wide campaign, he must have some idea, particularly, of the number of Negroes registered. We were unable to get him this date, but will continue trying until we do.

We tried to call Frank Smith in Knoxville. We felt that while he has not had any recent personal need for an accurate estimate of the registration in Mississippi, he doubtless retains his interest in Mississippi politics, and could, at the very least, suggest to us someone who would be willing to make an informed guess about Mississippi registration. He could not be reached in his office in Knoxville before November 25, but we will try him then.

We talked to Paul Anthony, and learned that two possible newspaper prospects, Ira Harkey in Pascagoula, and Hazel Brannon Smith, are apparently out of business. We understand that Harkey is no longer even in the state, so we are crossing him off the list of possibles.

ADDENDUM TO MEMORANDUM ON MISSISSIPPI REGISTRATION

November 21, 1963

Aaron Henry thinks our estimate of 27,847 for the Negro registration in Mississippi is probably as good a figure as any. We tried to call W. F. Minor, Times Picayune correspondent in Jackson, but he was out of town. We tried to Bill Simmons of the Citizens Council, but he was out of town, and his office said they did not know when to expect him back, or where he could be reached.

We tried to call J. P. Coleman, but his office said he was out and they were not sure when he would return. We left word requesting that he return our call.

Re: MISSISSIPPI REGISTRATION

I talked with Hazel Brannon Smith in Lexington, Mississippi, today. She said she just didn't have any idea how to estimate the number of Negroes or of whites, or both, registered in Mississippi. She seemed to feel that Aaron Henry would know more about this than anything else, and suggested that I get in touch with him. She said she seemed to recall that when he was campaigning for governor, Henry was saying that about 20,000 Negroes vote in Mississippi. She said a registration drive had been going on in her county (Holmes) and that two or three weeks ago, she was talking to some of the persons conducting the project, and they said between 60 and 80 Negroes had applied for registration during the past month or so, but that none of them had apparently been registered. She said that as far as she knows, no Negroes are registered in Holmes County at this time. (The 1963 civil rights report shows that 41 Negroes registered in Holmes County).

I asked her if she thought the Citizens Council would have registration figures for Negroes. She said that she supposed they would, and that they certainly should have them. I asked her whom I could most appropriately get in touch with in the Citizens Council, and she suggested Bill Simmons in Jackson. I asked her about Joe Patterson in Greenwood, and she seemed to think that he probably wouldn't be particularly interested in this aspect of his work, and probably would not have such information on the top of his head. She was undecided about whether or not Simmons would give me such information as he might have, and suggested that I should have a pretty good idea of how many Negroes were registered before talking to Simmons, so that I could at least ask him what he thought about the figure I had.

Dear Mr. Minnis:

I'm afraid we're all in the business of the blind leading the blind in this voter business, since the state makes such a studious effort to disguise the figures, but I would estimate the total voter strength of Negroes in the state at not more than 30,000 and not less than 20,000.

Whites who are registered probably number around 550,000 to 600,000, which is a guess a great deal closer to the truth, I would imagine, than the one for Negroes.

Sorry I can't be more precise, but there just aren't many concrete figures to go on.

Sincerely,

Hodding Carter III

Dear Mr. Carter:

Though it has been some time, you may perhaps recall that you favored me with the hospitality of your lovely home. I was in Greenville some months ago in connection with our registration projects in that area.

We are now attempting to estimate the number of Negroes registered, and the number of whites registered in Mississippi. Knowing that you are vitally interested in the politics of Mississippi, and that you are in a particularly crucial position to have such information, we would greatly appreciate it if you would estimate for us the number of Negro and white registered voters in Mississippi.

Hoping to hear from you at your earliest possible convenience, I am,

Dear Mr. Minnis:

I'm sorry I have not repolied to your recent letter. Things here are always moving pretty fast, and I guess that's my excuse.

As you know, we have no official figures on Negro voter registration, since we have no state registrar of voters. However, my own estimate, based on figures compiled in 1954 for the state legal educational advisory committee, and another survey made for the Mississippi advisory committee to the U.S. Civil Rights commisssion, is around 26,000 Negro voters.

The total voter registration in Mississippi is around 525,000, possibly 550,000.

Yours truly,

. . . Not Enough to Be Just 'Good

Negroes as Artists Must Be the Best

By CHESTER HIGGINS

DETROIT — Jon Lockard has this word for aspiring young artists: "Complacency is death—when an artist becomes satisfied with what he is doing, he dies."

Lockard, 30, who, by his own personal count, has placed portraits in more than 6,000 Michigan homes in the past two years, is a young man well qualified to speak.

Funny thing about Lockard's business is that 98 per cent of his clients are white.

"NEGROES ARE just beginning to become culturally attuned to having their portraits painted," he said, philosophically.

Lockard works in the medium of pastels (refined chalk) using paper rather than canvas as a background. His portraits are then covered with a non-glare glass.

He knows there are more than 6,000 of his portraits in Michigan homes because "I sold the clients the frames, myself," he said.

A versatile artist, Lockard has never formally studied art. He plans to enter Cranbrook Art School, Bloomfield Hills, in the near future.

BUT IN THE meantime, he will journey to Seattle, Wash., in April, to participate in the World Fair, April 21 to Oct. 21.

He will take along his bride, the attractive former Carolyn Barnett, now a junior at Wayne State University. Mrs. Lockard will enroll at the University of Seattle to complete her studies.

A furious worker, Lockard can complete a pastel portrait in 40 minutes. His sensitivity shows in the subtle expressions and moods he sees in the faces of his subjects and how he faithfully records them on portrait.

Lockard is a versatile artist. He paints in oils, does murals and surrealistic paintings, but he prefers pastels.

Presently he is all excited by working with black velvet. "I'm certain nobody else is doing it," he said.

PASTELS, HE SAID, are better, really, than oils because in time oil paintings fade. Pastels never do. "Some old masters have paintings in pastels under glass and the colors are just as true today as when they were painted," he said.

Lockard, a graduate of Eastern High School, attended Wayne State University for a year, and Michigan State University for two years. His major was education.

"But I did't want to be a teacher. I want to paint," he said.

HARD AT WORK—While his subject sits primly to be painted, Jon Lockard carefully goes to work to reproduce her in pastels The scene was at a recent Home Builders Show, at Cobo Hall, in Detroit. Most of Lockard's patrons are white. The picture at the left was done on black velvet; the center portrait is of an African girl he did in Ann Arbor, Mich., and Mrs. Jackie Kennedy's picture, at right, was reproduced by Lockard from a photo.—Sonny Edwards Photo

"There are few good art teachers who are good artists, too."

During the summer months he travels all over the country attending fairs and expositions and wherever he goes people flock around him to get their portraits made or to watch his big fingers perform magic on paper right before their eyes. He has worked all the way from California to Quebec.

At $25 per portrait, Lockard more than earns his keep. Many people upon learning he will be unable to do their portrait that day, make appointments with him to do them in their homes.

LOCKARD JOURNEYS to Jackson, Mich., about two weekends a month to do portraits of patrons at Fields, a large department store, which is a branch of Chicago's famous Marshall Fields.

"A portrait," he mused, "is the one of the most personalized forms of art. Making one is a great challenge to an artist. Because regardless of his technique, he still has to make the picture look like the subject."

Lockard's pictures do look like their subjects. For example, just for kicks and because he liked the photo. Lockard discovered a picture of Mrs. Jackie Kennedy and painted it. The portrait looks so much like the First Lady, it seems she is ready to speak right out at you.

"Do you want to paint her picture in the flesh?" we asked.

"Yes," he said. "I would very much like to do a portrait of Mrs. Kennedy.

SOMETHING OF a philosopher, Lockard emphasizes that Negro youth must be "better than good if they expect to make it as artists.

"When they go to art school they may succumb to flattery that they are good and really begin to believe it. But when they get out of school they'll be surprised to learn there are many almost too many 'good' artists. So they have got to be better than just plain good."

About his future plans, Lockard wants to open a studio in a shopping center and he wants it to supply complete portrait and framing service. "I don't think there is one in the city," he said.

About Negro faces: "I have never seen a completely happy Negro face but one time. There is nearly always that little sadness in either the eyes, the lips or the lines of the face," he observed.

Woman Claiming 122 Years Of Age Dies in Arkansas

NASHVILE, Ark. (ANP) — Mrs. Lucy Caledonia Bradford, who claimed to be 121 or 122 years old, died in a rest home, last week.

Mrs. Bradford had said she was born in Alabama in 1840 or 1841, she wasn't sure which. She was the daughter of slaves and told attendants at the nursing home of incidents that happened before the Civil War.

William Bardford, a son and the only one of her six children still living, said he was born in 1894. He said his mother stayed at Huntsville, Ala., for five years after the war, then moved to Mississippi, then to Chicago. She came to Nashville, where her son lives, in 1954.

Jacksonville Golf Course Ruling Due

By WILLIAM KENNEDY

JACKSONVILLE — The twin questions of whether or not the city was within its rights in "selling" the municipal golf courses and swimming pools to evade their integartion comes up for decision in the Atlanta U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals, March 27.

Appealing from earlier rulings by District Judge Bryan Simpson in Jacksonville, the plaintiffs are represented by Atty. Ernest D. Jackson Sr. of this city. They are Frank Hampton, Edward Joseph John B. F. Williams, and Rev. J. S. Johnson.

In the matter of swimming together, all city-owned recreational facilities, including the pools, were forbidden by U. S. court order as of Jan. 9, 1961, to segregate.

IN BRAZEN DEFIANCE of this order, the pools were opened last June 10 following articles in the local press quoting George Robinson, executive secretary of the recreation repartment, to the effect that "recreation department employes have orders to close the pools if any attempt is made at integration."

Sure enough, when Hampton and his associates appeared at the Springfield pool "for whites," the door on that and every other pool in the city was slammed shut "because of a threatened thunderstorm."

And, except for one white boy who climbed the fence and was drowned, no one has gone swimming in one of Jax's public pools since.

AT A DISTRICT court hearing last July 5, recreation director Robinson denied having made the statement about closing, and the Times-Union reporter weaseled to the extent of saying "it was not a direct quote."

Asked whether he had read the statement attributed to him, Robinson said "yes"; asked whether he had made any effort to "correct" it, he said "no."

The city commissioner in charge of recreation, when asked about the closing order, said he didn't want that "particular group, that certain bunch of them" to go swimming in the "white" pool.

"What was wrong with that particular group?" Attorney Jackson asked.

"It's a question I can't answer," the man replied.

IN THE MATTER of the "public" golf courses, Hampton was joined in his suit by D. W. Welcome and A. R. Richardson.

In this case, the appellants charge that the "sale," which was consummated at a ridiculous fraction of the value of the courses, was not a bona fide one, but actually a subterfuge seeking to disguise the links as "private enterprises."

Bearing out this contention is the fact that the deeds contain a reverter clause which provides that if the new "owners" fail to keep the links operating as such, ownership will revert to the city.

Freedom Corps Inspires Hope for New Day

Dr. King Spurs Miss. Vote Drive

By Trezzvant W. Anderson

JACKSON, Miss.—New life was breathed into the political hopes of thousands of Negroes in this state with the recent junket into the Delta by Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., with a team from his Southern Christian Leadership Conference, working in conjunction with local organizations to spark voter registration among Negroes at the grass roots level.

The young leader told The Courier he felt encouraged by the trip and could foresee some breakthroughs in future days, "if we continue vigilant and aggressive."

ON A SWIFT three-day foray during which he personally talked to thousands of Negroes and shook hands with them at crossroads, in cotton fields, at cotton gins, in school rooms and on the streets, Dr. King set off a spark of new ambition in Negro breasts.

He left behind him an army of Freedom Corps members, including trained volunteer workers, who are now pushing the campaign in the Delta area.

Others such as the NAACP Youth Council, the Federated Council of Organizations, CORE and fraternal groups are working in other areas of the state with the same goal—register.

REV. JAMES M. Lawson of Nashville, Tenn., SCLC special project director, is in Mississippi directing the coordination of Freedom Corps workers in the Delta area, with Dr. Aaron Henry, member of the SCLC board, and Clarksdale resident, as state coordinator.

The Rev. Mr. Lawson set up the program for Dr. King's visit into the state.

With every Southern state on the SCLC list for campaign visits, Dr. King said Mississippi was chosen for the kick-off visit "because it has become the symbol of hard-core resistance to desegregation."

With Clarksdale as the Delta headquarters, Dr. King and his team, including Mrs. Dorothy T. Cotton, director of citizenship schools; Rev. Lawson, and Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker, SCLC executive director, fanned out during the three days into the heavily-populated Negro areas of Jonestown, Coahoma, Sherard, and Mound Bayou, the all-Negro town founded by Isaac Montgomery.

The reception was good, with the exception of Sherard, where intimidations by whites cut the Negro attendance to just one man for a meeting where 75 were expected.

It was at Sherard, where white land-owners reportedly told their Negro tenants they would lose their homes if they attended the planned meeting. The one hardy gentleman who did come actually walked 13 miles to reach the site of the meeting. The other Negroes feared the reprisal.

Reactions at other points showed the vast interest of Negroes in young Dr. King. In Laurel, where 25 were expected, 150 showed up. It was similar in other places. Only one speech was made during the junket. That was where Dr. King spoke at a Trammell-for-Congress Rally to some 1,400 persons in Clarksdale, at Rev. Mr. Trammell's church.

THE REV. MR. Trammell is a candidiate for Congress from the Fourth District opposing incumbent Representative John Bell Williams.

The next day, Dr. King took his team to Jackson for a series of non-violent workshops at Tougaloo College, a church-supported school. Also the scene of a workshop was Coahoma Junior College, and a Baptist church where "Strides Toward Freedom," was the theme.

Informal chats with NAACP Youth Councils were also held at various points.

The first day was a busy one, with visits to a luncheon with 25 ministers in Clarksdale at the Haven Methodist Church, Rev. Mr. Trammell's church. Then came a visit to Higgins High School and 15 or 16 classrooms and chats with instructors.

NEXT VISITED was the Immaculate Conception High School, a Catholic school, where sisters and students greeted Dr. King and the entourage.

This was a significant visit, to stress the impartial nature of the campaign. The full day was climaxed by a four-hour meeting with the executive board of the Federated Council of Organizations sponsors of the Clarksdale boycott.

At this conference steps were taken to work out a long-range program for the Delta to combat fear and reprisals.

The second day found the first stop at a cotton gin owned by Negroes in a "co-op" venture. Then the team moved on to Jonestown to meet Negroes at a filling station and country store. The interest was high here.

Then came the move to Sherard and Coahoma and two elementary schools, and on to Mound Bayou, returning to Clarksdale for the rally. Jackson was the scene of the third day of activity, and then the return to Atlanta.

The team set up six volunteer workers' training schools in the Clarksdale area, and there are now 61 such schools in the South, Rev. Mr. Walker told The Courier.

Mrs. Cotton directs the big training school at Dorchester in McIntosh County, Ga. Here the volunteers learn the techniques and programs for voter-registration to put into use, when they return home.

Dr. King stressed the purely personal non-political nature of his work, by pointing out that this massive effort is to benefit Negroes in the South, not himself, since he has no political ambitions.

JAMES BEVEL, SCLC field worker, is now full-time in the Delta area to keep up the interest and activity in registering Negro voters, Rev. Walker said.

There were no "incidents" during the Mississippi junket, and Dr. King was well received in most places. There was, however, an undercurrent of resentment by whites, but none was shown openly toward Dr. King or members of his team.

The trip was considered a success, and Virginia is the next state to be covered, then South Carolina and the other Southern states. Mississippi has some 35,000 registered Negro voters at this time, with over 700,000 eligible.

Science Shrinks Piles New Way Without Surgery Stops Itch—Relieves Pain

New York, N. Y. (Special) — For the first time science has found a new healing substance with the astonishing ability to shrink hemorrhoids, stop itching, and relieve pain — without surgery.

In one hemorrhoid case after another, "very striking improvement" was reported and verified by doctors' observations.

Pain was relieved promptly. And, while gently relieving pain, actual reduction or retraction (shrinking) took place.

And most amazing of all — this improvement was maintained in cases where doctors' observations were continued over a period of many months!

In fact, results were so thorough that sufferers were able to make such astonishing statements as "Piles have ceased to be a problem!" And among these sufferers were a very wide variety of hemorrhoid conditions, some of 10 to 20 years' standing.

All this, without the use of narcotics, anesthetics or astringents of any kind. The secret is a new healing substance (Bio-Dyne*) — the discovery of a world-famous research institution. Already, Bio-Dyne is in wide use for healing injured tissue on all parts of the body.

This new healing substance is offered in suppository or ointment form called *Preparation H. Ask for individually sealed convenient Preparation H suppositories or Preparation H ointment with special applicator. Preparation H is sold at all drug counters. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded.

JUDGE COX TO HEAR CASE

Sig, Miss T-P

Federal Suit Seeks to Reinstate Teacher

7-25-62

BILOXI, Miss. (AP)—U.S. Dist. Judge Harold Cox is scheduled to hear arguments here Wednesday on a Justice Department suit to reinstate a Greene County, Miss., Negro teacher allegedly fired for voter activities.

The federal suit charges that Mrs. Ernestine Denham Talbert, 33, of Lucedale was fired after she tried to vote in George County and testified about her difficulties in a civil rights case. She lives in George County but commuted to work in Greene County.

The suit seeks her reinstatement with restoration of lost pay. County Supt. Evans T. Martin said "she was not fired, her contract simply was not renewed."

At an earlier hearing June 23, Judge Cox refused a Justice Department request for a temporary restraining order to prevent the Greene County Board of Education from hiring a successor to Mrs. Talbert until the case is decided.

U. S. Charges Mississippi Ballot Bias

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 8 (AP)—The Justice Department has asked the Federal Appeals Court here to jail Mississippi voter registrar Theron Lynd for 45 days for contempt of a court order barring discrimination in voter registrations.

The Department also asked the Court to order Lynd to register 43 Negroes who "were illegally denied registration" in Forrest ounty, Miss., or face continuing imprisonment.

Earlier this year, the Justice Department charged that Lynd discriminated against Negroes in violation of the Civil Rights Act. The U. S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans issued an injunction ordering him to cease.

Lynd has denied the charge.

A three-judge panel of the Federal Appeals Court last September asked attorneys for both sides to submit briefs. The Justice Department request was in its brief, which was filed Wednesday.

Mississippi Aide Charged With Thwarting Negro Vote

Suffrage - South

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 8 (UPI — The Federal Government today asked the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit to find Theron C. Lynd guilty of civil and criminal contempt for allegedly refusing to register Negroes.

The Government asked that Mr. Lynd, registrar of voters in Forest County, Miss., be jailed, fined and ordered to register 43 Negroes as voters in the county.

The Government said that Mr. Lynd had a duty under the 15th Amendment "not to engage in any discriminatory acts or practices on the basis of race in the registration for voting," including "applying different and more stringent registration requirements, procedures, and standards to Negro applicants during his term of office."

The Government said that Mr. Lynd had rejected Negro applicants "for formal, technical, and inconsequential errors or omissions on their application forms, while accepting the applications of white persons whose applications contained the same or more serious errors or omissions."

High Court Denies Review Of Negro Registration Order

NO 7 1962

WASHINGTON, Nov. 5 (UPI) —The Supreme Court refused today to review a temporary order barring racial discrimination in voter registration in Forrest County, Miss.

The order was issued last June 11 by the United States Court of Appeals in New Orleans. The Appeals for the Fifth Circuit Court imposed the anti-discrimination rule until it could study the Government's appeal from the failure of Federal District Judge William H. Cox of Jackson, Miss., to issue a similar order.

The Justice Department told the Appeals Court it had been frustrated in its effort to obtain action from Judge Cox ending alleged discriminatory practices in registering Negroes.

Defendants in the suit were the State of Mississippi and Forrest County's Registrar, Theron C. Lynd.

60 are excused from the poll tax.

If you haven't registered yet, you can still pay your poll tax. Although you have to do both before you can vote it doesn't matter which you do first.

$2 Or $3

In most counties, the poll tax is $2; in others it is $3. If you didn't pay your tax last year, you can pay $4—the taxes for this year and last year—and you will be eligible to vote in November. After that you must pay $2 each year. (If your tax is $3 a year, you must pay $6, if you owe back taxes.)

However, if you did not pay your tax last year, you cannot vote in the Democratic primary in August; you must wait until you have paid two taxes on time in a row.

Pay At Sheriff's Office

Poll taxes are paid at the Sheriff's office in the County Court House. (Jackson residents, for example, should go to the County Court House on Pascagoula Street.) The sheriff will give you a receipt which you must present at the polls when you vote.

If you are over 60, you should go to the county clerk's office with proof of age—such as your social security papers, driver's license or army discharge papers. He will give you an exemption certificate which will be good for every year in the future.

If you have just finished serving in the army, take your discharge papers to the county clerk. He will give you an exemption certificate excusing you from paying taxes for the years you were in the army. Then, however, you must pay your taxes for this year.

Anyone Can Pay Tax

You do not have to pay your son can collect the tax money from a group of his friends and save them the trip to the County Court House.

The last day you can pay your 1963 poll tax is February 1. Although a Constitutional Amendment presently being considered by the legislatures of all the states will probably abolish the poll tax in a few years, you must still pay your poll tax now in order to vote next year.

$2 Poll Tax Due Now; Must Be Paid In Jan.

January is the month to pay your poll tax if you want to vote next year.

If you are over 21, or will be 21 by next November, and if you have lived in Mississippi for two years and in your city or county for one year, then you should pay your poll tax and register. Only men in the armed services and people over

Here's How to Qualify to Vote in Mississippi

By JOHN EMMERICH
Enterprise-Journal Reporter

According to Mississippi's Constitution, every inhabitant of the state may vote — except idiots, insane persons and Indians not taxed — if they can meet certain qualifications.

A voter must be at least 21 years old. He must be a resident of Mississippi two years and of his election district one year. He must be duly registered. He must have never been convicted of bribery, theft, arson, obtaining money or goods under false pretense, perjury, forgery, embezzlement or bigamy.

He must have paid by Feb. 1 his $2 poll tax for two consecutive years, and he must be able to produce evidence (tax receipts) that he has done so.

He must be of good moral character.

He must be able to read and interpret the State Constitution.

And he must take an oath, in registering, that he has met the requirements as set forth in the Constitution.

SOME ARE EXEMPT

There are, however, certain exemptions from the above requirements.

For example, persons 60 years old or over do not have to pay the poll tax. Neither do persons who are deaf and dumb, or blind, or who are maimed by the loss of a hand or foot.

The $2 poll tax, which Boards of Supervisors may raise to $3, goes to the support of the public schools.

Another exception to the requirements listed above is that ministers of the gospel in charge of organized churches have to be residents of Mississippi two years but resident of their election districts only six months.

Voters also must have been registered at least four months before voting in general or special elections and 30 days before a primary election.

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following article, which explains how to register to vote, is in response to several requests from new residents who don't understand Mississippi's voting laws. January is the month during which poll taxes must be paid.

REGISTRATION

The procedure for registering is rather complicated. Those who were registered prior to Jan. 1, 1954, do not have to go through the process again if they can show evidence of their registration. Those who move from another Mississippi county in which they were registered must show only a certificate of registration from that county.

But for new residents to Mississippi or new voters, this is how it goes:

The county circuit clerk — Wendell Holmes in Pike County — is the voting registrar.

After a new resident of Mississippi has lived in the state 20 months (two years less four months), he may make application for registration.

Registration includes a written application and a literacy test which may take up to an hour to complete. The first 17 questions on the four-page form are designed to insure that the voter applicant meets all of the constitution's requirements about residence, criminal convictions, age and similar things.

The 18th question requires that the applicant write on the application form a section of the Mississippi Constitution which the circuit clerk designates.

Then the applicant must give a reasonable interpretation of the section which was copied.

The application also requires that the prospective voter write a brief essay — just a few sentences — explaining the duties and obligations of citizenship under a constitutional form of government.

OATH REQUIRED

When this is completed, the voter then must sign an oath which says: "I, ————, do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I am 21 years old (or I will be before the next election in this county), and that I will have resided in this state two years and ——— election district of ——— County one year next preceding the ensuing election, and am in good faith a resident of same, and that I am not disqualified from voting by reason of having been convicted of any crime named in the constitution of this state as a disqualification to be an elector, and that I will truly answer all questions propounded to me concerning my antecedents so far as they relate to my right to vote, and also as to my residence before my citizenship in this and of the state of Mississippi, and will bear true faith and allegiance to the same. So help me God."

The oath for a minister requires only six month residence in his voting district.

NAME IS PUBLISHED

After the applicant has completed his application form, the voting registrar then must publish his name in a newspaper for two consecutive weeks in order to give any citizen the right to protest his good moral character.

This process takes approximately 25 to 30 days, after which time the applicant may inquire of the voting registrar concerning the application. If the applicant passed the test, and if there were no protests of his good moral character, he then is ready to register to vote in the circuit clerk's office.

Then, assuming that his poll taxes have been paid for the two preceding years, he will be eligible to vote after four months in the case of special or general elections and 30 days in the case of primary elections.

POLL TAXES IMPORTANT

That means, a new resident to Mississippi should immediately begin paying his poll tax even though he is not registered.

If he has lived in the state two years but hasn't paid any poll taxes, he still will have to wait another year after registration in order to have two consecutive poll tax receipts — one for 1962 (payable this month), and one for 1963 (payable next January).

But there is a partial exception to this requirement. A new voter, assuming that he meets all other qualifications, during this month may pay poll taxes for 1962 (which is due this month) and 1961 (due in Januay 1962). He then will be qualified to vote in special and general elections, but not in primary elections.

In Mississippi, the Democratic primary normally is the important election in which county and state officials, including the governor, are elected. However, this year it appears that the general election will be important in as much as one Republican candidate for governor already has announced his candidacy.

21-YEAR-OLDS EXEMPT

Persons who are 21 are exempt from paying poll tax during the first year. Those over 21 who are voting for the first time are not exempt.

A person who is 20 may make application for registration four months before his 21st birthday in order that he will be qualified to vote by the time he is 21.

Poll taxes all are calculated as of Jan. 1, which means a person who is 60 is not exempt from paying the tax until he is 60 as of Jan. 1. If he becomes 60 on the day after Jan. 1, he still must pay the poll tax for that year.

Application for registration and registration is handled in the office of the circuit clerk in the Pike County Court House in Magnolia. The poll tax must be paid in the office of the sheriff and tax collector, also in the court house.

Three Arrested In Clarksdale

Greenwood Commonw. 6-21-63

CLARKSDALE, Miss. (AP) — Clarksdale police arrested three Negro women demonstrators today as they picketed in front of the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company.

The sign-carrying trio apparentlyw as protesting against hiring practices in the telephone exchange.

The arrests marked the sixth day of demonstrations in this Delta town.

Police arrested a 96-year-old Negro Thursday when he picketed at the city library.

The elderly Negro, John Wright, however, told police the demonstration leaders had asked him if he wanted to go to a parade.

Wright said he had no idea the leaders meant a demonstration. He explained he had been working for white persons all his life and did not want to demonstrate against them.

Wright was not held.

Justice Department Raps Miss. Town For Illegal Arrests

Brings Suit To Secure An Immediate Halt To Further Prosecution Of Six Negro Voting Registration Workers

MEMPHIS, Tenn.—(SNS)—

The Department of Justice has brought suit to secure an immediate halt to further prosecution of six Negro voting registration workers arrested June 9 on baseless charges outside the bus terminal in Winona, Miss.

Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy said a civil complaint filed in Oxford, Miss. asserted that the purpose of the arrests — for disorerly conduct and resisting arrest— was to discourage the six and other Negro passengers from attempting to use the bus terminal facilities freely.

The prosecution of the six constitutes an unlawful and unconstitutional interference with interstate commerce and with Interstate Commerce Commission regulations forbidding racial discrimination, Mr. Kennedy said.

Named as defendants were the City of Winona, located in Montgomery County, in north central Mississippi; Martin C. Billingsley, its mayor; Thomas Herrod, its police chief; and Earl W. Patridge, the county sheriff.

The complaint asked the United States District Court for the Northern District of Mississippi for temporary and permanent injunctions forbidding the defendants to interfere in any way with Negroes' use of bus terminal facilities in Winona.

The suit also asked that they be required to drop any further prosecution of the six Negroes arrested.

The six were convicted June 11 and subsequently released on $100 appeal bond. Their appeals to Mississippi Circuit Court would require new trials.

Mr. Kennedy said filing of the suit followed unsuccessful efforts by the Department to secure voluntary action by Winona officials.

The six Negroes, all from Mississippi, included one man James West, and five women, Mrs. Fannie Hamer, Annell Ponder, June Johnson, Rosemary Freeman, and Euvester Simpson.

The six were in Winona June 9 on a brief rest stop during a bus trip from Charleston, S. C. to Greenwood, Mississippi. Five of them entered the terminal restaurant, but were ordered out by Herrod.

They left and were standing peaceably outside the terminal. Herrod arrested them, nonetheless Immediately afterwards, Patridge arrested Mrs. Hamer, who had not gone into the restaurant but who also was standing outside.

There was no lawful reason or justification for any of the arrests, the complaint said.

They were convicted June 11 in the Winona Police Court with Mayor Billingsley sitting as Police Justice.

According to the complaint, Mayor Billingsley gave assurances to the Department in early 1962 that the City of Winona would not interfere with ICC regulations forbidding racial discrimination in interstate commerce. The regulations went into effect November 1, 1961.

FBI Authorized To See Vote File

Arkansas Gazette
7-5-63

New Orleans, July 4 (AP).—The United States Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals yesterday reversed a District Court and ordered it to allow FBI agents to inspect all voting records in seven Mississippi counties.

The District Court for Southern Mississippi had allowed the FBI to look at only the records of the county "circuit clerk" — but not those of the "vote registrar."

In each county, the circuit clerk and registrar is the same person. But the Justice Department had asked only to inspect the clerk's records.

The District Court's order allowed the FBI to inspect only the records possessed by each defendant in his capacity as circuit clerk—but not as voter registrar.

Meredith Hits The Nail

This may seem like heresy to some folks, but we're going to have to give James Meredith his due.

The BMOC was up in Chicago last night and made a speech at a youth freedom fund dinner during the national convention of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

"My greatest dissatisfaction today is the existence of the very low quality of leadership present among our young Negroes and the childish nature of their activities," Meredith said.

"The two great shortcomings in our youth, he continued, , "are discipline and knowledge."

Now from Meredith's past actions we wouldn't suspect that he would say anything calculated to bring aid and comfort to Mississippi so he must have been speaking about a danger he perceives as great.

He apparently alluded to the sit-ins and demonstrations cropping up all over the country, protests for protesting's sake.

As far as we're concerned he drove right to the point as far as the quality of Negro youth leadership is currently concerned. The leaders we have any knowledge of exhibit a rare combination of ignorance and single-mindedness which is mixing a dangerous concoction for members of both races.

Emblematic of the truth of what Meredith said is the way in which his remarks were received by his audience, some of whom were the Negro youth he was speaking of.

When he had his say, Meredith left the rostrum to a few grudging hand claps. Then the master of ceremonies, John Davis, 22, a senior at Rutgers University and a member of the NAACP youth division board of directors, strode to the microphone.

He criticized Meredith's talk, saying he was grieved by the things the Ole Miss student said.

His remarks were greeted by wild cheering. (T. W.)

Bolivar Clerk Ordered To Open Voter Records

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A Mississippi voter registrar was under orders of the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals today to open her records to federal inspection.

The appeals court decision Friday was the latest in the long series of court battles which started in 1960 when the Bolivar County registrar of voters refused to show her- books to federal inspectors.

She was identified as Mrs. Walter Lewis.

Earlier a U.S. District Court had ordered that the books must be opened for inspection; but only for the "listed voters" for the 1960 elections.

The Department of Justice contended that the district judge had erred in limiting the inspectors to only the listed viters: They contended that "the limitation completely denied the attorney general an opportunity to inspect the records as to those who may have been denied illegally the right to qualify."

Voting Law Complicated

By TOM OXNARD

Securing the right to vote in Mississippi is as complicated as squeezing a 500 pound hog into an orange crate. And once you have got the hog into the crate the problem is how are you going to get him to the stockyards.

Regardless of the plan to ban the poll tax for national elections, every resident of Mississippi will have to pay the tax for state and local elections, and every resident of Mississippi must go through certain other procedures before he is granted the right to vote in any election.

FIRST, you must pay a poll tax every year after you are twenty-one and up through the age of sixty.

Next, you must be a resident of the state for two years and a resident of your election precinct for one year (unless you are a minister, in which case only six months in the precinct is required in addition to the two years' state residence).

You are required to register at least four months before an election at the circuit clerk's office in your county courthouse, and you must pass a literacy test given by the clerk and answer a question on the constitution of Mississippi.

AFTER the circuit clerk is satisfied that you are eligible to be a voter, he must turn your name over to a newspaper for publication within ten days after you have passed the tests.

Then, if any citizen feels that you are unqualified to vote, within two weeks after the publication of your name he can file an affidavit to the effect that you are unqualified. You must then face a hearing and if the charge is substantiated, you cannot vote.

Payment of the required two years of poll taxes can be done in one lump sum, but not for primary elections. In order to vote in primaries, the tax must have been paid consecutively for the two years.

You can pay two years at once and vote in general and special elections.

The poll tax must be paid on or before Feb. 1.

WASHINGTON

Mississippi registrars last week were swamped with colored applicants seeking the ballot as the poll tax was outlawed as a condition for voting in elections for Federal office.

The long fight against the poll tax ended last Thursday as South Dakota became the 38th state to ratify the 24th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

The only technicality standing in the way of official recognition of the anti - poll tax amendment is formal certification by the General Services Administration.

No further legal action is required.

THE FULL impact of repealing the poll tax law, however, is yet to come as Alabama, Arkansas, Mississippi, Texas and Virginia are holding on to the bitter end.

Even before ratification, Virginia passed a law requiring payment of $1.50 poll tax to be eligible to vote in a state election.

In addition, Virginia threw in voter eligibility requirements calling for the filing of a "certificate of residence" six months before Federal election.

The "kicker" in the $1.50 fee is that a cumulative feature requires delinquents to pay back poll taxes and penalties covering a maximum of three years in order to register.

THE OUTLAWING of the poll tax has also caused Alabama to begin thinking of ways to thwart the law.

Attv. Gen. Richmond Flowers so far has come up with the possibility of holding to elections — one for state and another for Federal.

Separate election would be "terrifically confusing," he said, admitting that the best solution to Alabama's election problems would be a special session of the legislature.

A special session would be required to repeal the poll tax in the state, which yields about $300,000 a year.

Another reason Flowers favors a special session would be to give legislators a chance to deal with Congressional redistricting.

OUTLAWING of the poll tax was hailed by President Johnson as a "forward step of a modern society" and the "verification of people's rights."

W. Lester Banks, executive secretary of the Virginia State NAACP Conference, extended congratulations to "the legislature of South Dakota and the lawmakers of the other 37 states whose affirmative actions assured ratification of the 24th Amendment."

But he noted "it is perhaps too much to wish that our Virginia General Assembly, now in session, would follow the progressive pattern and also ratify the long overdue amendment."

The NAACP, he added, nevertheless "will continue to press vigorously for the abolition of the pool tax in all elections.

SECTION 1 of the 24th Amendment reads:

"The rights of citizens of the United States to vote in any primary or other election for President of Vice President, or for Senator or Representative in Congress, shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any state by reason to pay any poll tax or other tax."

Section 2 states:

"The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."

A MASS voter-registration drive was launched at Hattiesburg, Miss., last week as a long line of applicants stood in the rain waiting to be "tested" in the court house.

Some 48 northern ministers from eight cities are in the forefront of the campaign in the southeastern Mississippi town where only 53 of the 7,000 eligible colored residents are on the voting rolls.

Some 48 Northern ministered by Theron Lynd, in order to purge himself of a Fifth U.S. Ciruit Court of Appeals conviction of civil and criminal contempt for violating an anti-discrimination injunction.

Lynd, the first Southern voter registrar convicted of violating the Federal Civil Rights Act, had been enjoined from barring the vote to colored applicants.

ON THE first day of the drive some 37 colored applicants had taken the literacy test. They will be notified within 30 days whether they passed or failed.

As the ministers paraded back and forth, picketing the courthouse, helmeted police from the riot squad kept them under close surveillance.

Among the ministers picketing the courthouse was the Rev. Robert L. Pierson of White Plains, N.Y., son-in-law of Gov. Nelson Rockefeller.

ONE OF THE most interesting developments, however, resulted from the arrest of Robert Moses of New York, SNCC field secretary.

Arrested for failure to obey a policeman, the 28 - year-old freedom fighter's trial resulted in desegregated seating at Hattiesburg courthouse despite the pleas of Judge Mildred Morris.

"This rule has been our way of life for 100 years," the judge pleaded with 50 freedom fighters. "We ask you to observe it."

When it became apparent the freedom fighters would accept nothing but desegregation, the judge decided "as a courtesy we will waive this rule."

IN ANOTHER surprise, after Moses was convicted and sentenced to 60 days in jail, Judge Morris suspended sentence upon the request of Prosecutor Francis Zachary.

James Forman, SNCC executive secretary, was threatened with arrest when he demanded that applicants be allowed to wait in the courthouse out of the rain.

In refusing the demand, Sheriff W. C. Grey said it might interfere with office routine if too many were allowed in the courthouse at the same time.

MEANWHILE, a Leflore County jury convicted 12 of 45 appealing sentences growing out of their arrests at Itta Bena last June while attempting to register to vote.

The 12 were convicted of breach of peace on charges by the sheriff's office that they threw bottles and brick as they approached the home of H. F. Weber, deputy sheriff and town marshal.

Witnesses said, however, they were fleeing to the deputy's home to seek protection after the church had been tear gassed.

Suit Is Heard On Harassment Of Negro Voters

HOUSTON, Tex. (AP) — The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals Tuesday heard arguments in a government suit charging harassment of Negroes seeking to register as voters in Rankin County, Miss.

The Justice Department charges that former Sheriff Jonathan R. Edwards Jr. and one of his deputies, J. B. Collum, beat up three Negroes because they were trying to register Feb. 1, 1963, at the county courthouse in Brandon, Miss.

U.S. Dist. Judge Harold Cox had denied an injunction against intimidation of Negroes. He ruled the alleged assault was not intended to interfere with voter registration.

"One would have to assume that by sheer coincidence Sheriff Edwards was beating (one Negro) for failing to move when requested while at the same time his deputy, Collum, also happened to be independently beating two other Negroes for some reason while all three Negroes just happened to be involved in registration activities," the Justice Department brief said.

A total of 6,865 of the county's 13,246 voting-age white residents are registered, while only 43 of 6,944 Negroes are registered, the brief said.

Judge Charles Pollard told the Negroes, attorney, Cars ie Hall, Negro of Jackson that he did see how the court could sentence the defendents in absentia.

Hall told the court that he was not aware that all the defendents would have to be in court this morning for the passing of sentence.

Pollard then announced that the sentencing would be delayed until Monday and that all the defendents would have to be in court.

"Those that are not here will have to forfeit their bond", judge Pollard ruled.

The Negroes were all arrested on April 4 last year when they refused to disperse after being ordered to break into smaller groups by police chief Curtis Lary.

They were all originally tried in city police court and found guilty. They field to appeal the case and their appeal cases were tried before a jury last week.

Hall has indicated that bond will be posted for the ten Negroes after sentencing and that the case will be appealed on up to the Circuit Court.

Judge Says Holmes Sheriff Promised Not To Block Voting

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — A federal judge has refused to issue an injunction to halt discrimination in Holmes County against prospective Negro voters, ruling discrimination has ended.

U.S. Dist. Judge Harold Cox ruled Wednesday that Holmes County Sheriff A. P. Smith had discriminated against Negroes, but apologized and pledged to abide by requirements.

The ruling came in a government suit against Smith and other Holmes County officials charging they engaged in practices "designed and intended to intimidate and coerce Negroes and to prevent them from registering and voting in the county."

Judge Cox ruled Smith alone had discriminated and he had changed the practice.

Under the circumstances, the judge said, he felt the "extraordinary writ of injunction is not now necessary. . .'

A court order had been asked by the federal government to force officials in the county to comply with civil rights laws.

Others named in the suit were county attorney Pat Barrett and Dist. Atty. Parham Williams.

At the time of the filing of the suit, Smith was chief deputy sheriff and his wife was sheriff.

Smith had been sheriff from 1956-60, was chief deputy under his wife the next four years, and became sheriff again this year.

Hartman Turnbow, a Holmes County Negro whose house burned May 8 last year, charged he had been a victim because of his part in a drive to register Negroes to vote.

The court noted Turnbow claimed to have had a gun battle with a white man shortly before gasoline was thrown into his house.

Cox said "no bullets from the pistol (allegedly used by the white man) were found lodged in back of the house.

"Six discharged .22 (caliber) cartridges were found on the ground near the back steps. . ."

Cox said six hours after the alleged shooting "Turnbow was still carrying his gun on his arm and having his picture made (by another civil rights worker) very dramatically defending his home.'

The ruling opinion said the court "does not believe that Turnbow . . . had anything to do with this fire . . . neither does the court believe from the evidence that Turnbow had any gun battle with any white man."

The federal judge said he felt there was no evidence to connect the fire with Negro registration efforts.

Smith said he did not know Negroes could pay poll taxes since he did not think any of them were registered.

"Smith frankly admitted his mistake," Cox said, "and very sincerely and convincingly stated to the court that he did not intend to make that mistake again. . ."

Negroes Line Up In Canton Drive

Dennis said M. Floyd McKissick, the CORE national chairman, will be on hand. Also to be present are representatives of the National Council of Churches.

A civil rights spokesman said ministers scheduled to observe included:

The Revs. Arthur Thomas, Durham, N.C., NCC Commissi on Religion and Race; Joseph H. Dwinnell, Cincinnati, Ohio; Huber F. Klemme, New York City, United Church of Christ Council of Christian Social Action; Ora Huston, Elgin, Ill.; Ian McCrae, Indianapolis, Ind.; Ed Wright, Cincinnati, Ohio; Norman Simmons, Hays, Kan.; Joseph W. Atkins Jr., Wichita, Kan.; Andrew Gutierrez, Wichita, Kan.; Robert J. Stone, New York City, United Presbyterian Commission on Religion and Race; Frederick Maier, New York City, United Presbyterian Church of U.S.A., Board of Christian Education; John Sherman, Chicago; George W. Buckner, Chapel Hill, N.C.; and an attorney, Howard V. Vail, Westfield, N.J.

A spokesman for the Council of Federated Organizations said the ministers were "under the auspices of the National Council of Churches to act as observers in Canton rather than to participate."

Norman Thomas, a man who ran four times unsuccessfully for president of the United States on a socialist ticket, announced Thursday night he would not attend as planned.

Thompson said about 24 city and county officers would seek to preserve order.

Under a recently-enacted state law, municipalities confronted with racial disturbances can call to nearby cities for law enforcement aid.

Police, Deputies Keep Order As Over 200 Follow CORE

CANTON, Miss. (AP)—Groups of helmeted, armed police pa- trolled around the Madison County courthouse today watch- ing the vanguard of an estimated 200-300 Negroes who launched a new style attack on vote registration practices.

Police said the Negroes would be permitted to register one at a time.

Police were armed with rifles, shotguns, electric cattle prods and had large trucks ready for removal of any persons arrested.

Negroes began forming a line into the courthouse shortly after 10 a.m. There was no incidents.

The Negroes stood in orderly line under two giant magnolia trees.

Police and Madison County sheriff's deputies directed the flow into the three story courthouse in the center of the town square.

The line began growing with authorities standing by. Small groups watched silently from across the street.

Some of the ministers that civil rights leaders said would be here, milled around the registering Negroes.

The Congress of Racial Equality spearheaded the vote registration drive.

A civil rights spokesman said there would be no pickets, just a long, long line.

David Dennis, CORE field representative, said "we have sent a letter to registrar Foote Campbell to have deputy registrars on hand for the extra people expected to try and register.

"We have not gotten a reply."

Meanwhile, law enforcement authorities in this town of 9,707 met and mapped [redacted] the planned voter push.

The Madison County population is 32,904, of which 9,262 are white and 23,637 are Negro. Canton, the county seat of government, has a population of 6,220 Negroes.

Unofficial estimates put about 250 of the 6,220 as registered voters.

The Negroes were scheduled to meet at a local church at 9 a.m., CST, and then begin lining up at the courthouse at 10 a.m.

"We are trying this mass effort," Dennis said, "because the people have to do something to combat the tremendous pressure that they have to go against.

"If the registrar chooses not to register these people, we would expect that the federal government would find that reason to file a suit."

Police Chief Dan Thompson said his men and the Madison County sheriff's office, headed by Sheriff Jack Cauthen, hope to control the situation without violence.

"If there's any trouble," Thompson said, "it'll be caused by agitators and outsiders."

Civil rights leaders have publicized the fact a number of outsiders will be on hand at the vote drive, but only as observers.

Voter Showdown Will Be Sought In Mississippi

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — The integrationist Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee hopes to "force a showdown between the federal and state governments" over Negro voter - registration in Mississippi. its leader says.

John Lewis, chairman of the committee, said Wednesday the group was seeking between 500 and 1,000 volunteers to work in Mississippi this summer urging Negroes to try to register.

The committee hopes a mass outpouring of Negroes will bring about a governtal showdown, he said.

The 23-year-old Negro said that "in Mississippi, more than any other state, the Negroes are more organized on a state-wide basis. We can have more than 75,000 of them go to jail of we have to."

Numbers May Change But Outcome Shouldn't

A radio broadcast being played at various civic clubs around town has created quite a stir and with good reason.

The broadcast indicates that the Mississippi Delta will be the focal point for an all out racial drive and names the National Council of Churches of Christ as the guiding force behind it.

Talk that the Delta will again be the target of racial agitation this summer is nothing new, but this tape which uses the words "Revolution in the Delta" over and over, seems to be creating more confusion than is necessary.

The plans of the National Council of Churches of Christ for the Mississippi Delta still weren't clear to us after listening to a tape of the broadcast in question yesterday, but undoubtedly the organization will be active in this area if the plans of various "civil rights" groups materialize this summer.

One of those plans, according to John Lewis, national chairman of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee, is to invade Mississippi with thousands of civil rights demonstrators. Lewis told reporters in San Francisco a few months back that SNCC hopes to jam Mississippi jails with up to 75,000 Negroes at one time. He hopes that the situation will become so acute that "the federal government can't ignore it."

So far the National Council of Churches has confined its activity in the Greenwood area to posting bond for Negroes arrested here. According to the broadcast being played, funds to put up bond for arrested demonstrators is still one of the key points in the organization's plan for the Delta. The organization will also undoubtedly encourage youthful demonstrators to travel to Mississippi.

But at the present time, it seems, nobody should let that phrase "Revolution in the Delta" lead him to believe that the racial agitators are coming up with anything new. Negro organizations may be able to exert more pressure in the way of numbers of people demonstrating, but as is obvious from the plans of the groups to bring in students during the summer, they will be the same kind of people who showed up last lice and sheriff's deputies will again be equal to the task. Plans are being made for eventualities, even to the construction of a riot car from the bus which was used last year to haul some of the demonstrators to jail and others back to headquarters.

Speaking of not arresting some folks, Negro comedian Dick Gregory was made to look like several kinds of a fool here last summer. While he was at it, he gave a lot of us some good belly laughs.

Unless he reads this and gets mad, we'll bet a bale of cotton he doesn't come back to Greenwood this time. If there's anybody who can't stand being the object of ridicule, it's a comedian who thinks he's funny.

Summing up, we'd say that there's a better than even chance that Greenwood and the Delta will be in for some racial fuss this summer.

But there's an effective answer for it. Greenwood formulated that answer last summer, and with all lawabiding citizens working together under duly constituted authority, there is no reason in the world why the outcome won't be the same.

During last summer's demonstrations here, Greenwood developed a strategy which not only paid off in the local situation but which has been copied with good effect in several cities across the state. The latest example of the Greenwood plan was carried out in Hattiesburg and from talking to people who saw it work, it seems that the demonstrators laid about the same kind of egg there as they did here last summer.

It seems logical to assume that Greenwood again will be one of the focal points of racial agiation when the nation's schools let out and youths out from under college and parent discipline again begin to ride on their trouble making sprees.

There may or may not be as many in Greenwood as during the first demonstrations, but regardless of the numbers there is a tried and effective method of dealing with the situation.

Actually about the only thing we can see that Greenwood could add in the way of counteracting the summer silliness is to follow a suggestion made the other day by Governor Paul Johnson who said he'd like to see the lawabiding citizens of Mississippi "laugh these people right out of the state."

If anything gets the goat of a racial demonstrator better than ignoring him, it must be derision and the governor had a good suggestion there.

As to law enforcement, it seems a safe bet that the Greenwood Police Department, backed by auxiliary po-

Frustration Marks Miss. Voter Drive

CANTON — The almost unbelievable obstacles which a Negro must overcome in order to vote in Mississippi were illustrated here last week on "Freedom Day" when nearly three hundred patiently stood in line at the Madison County Courthouse in a generally futile attempt to register.

Encouraged to do so by the Council of Federated Organizations, which is conducting a major vote registration drive through the combined efforts of CORE, SNCC and NAACP, Negro hopefuls were confronted with armed sheriff's deputies who constantly, pranced back and forth along thier single-file line.

Only one applicant at a time was allowed in the office of Registrar L. F. Campbell. Therefore, only 50 made it in and merely seven got to take the test. On the door of the office was a sticker bearing a Confederate flag, and a reminder to "Support Your Citizens Council."

The few who were permitted to take the test were confronted with complicated questions dealing with constitutional interpretations, all of which had to be answered to the satisfaction of the registrar.

The fact that they were allowed to progress even that far was attributed to the new governor's, Paul B. Johnson, policy of avoiding racial violence. Yet, this does not mean that they will be allowed access to the ballot box.

There were other factors, too. It is known that Negroes who register to vote may be fired from their jobs or faced with destruction of their property.

That is, more than likely the reason why only 121 Madison County Negroes were registered in 1962, although they compose 72 per cent of the population of 32,904.

This situation is considered proof of the failure of the civil rights bills of 1957 and 1960. Furthermore, there seems to be no indication that matters will improve, even if the Senate approves the voting section of the House-passed civil rights measure.

David Dennis, 23, assistant program director for COFO, and head of the vote drive, revealed that though efforts have been intensive in this area of 1,000 Negroes who have attempted to register, only about 30 have been successful.

At one time, there were 475 Negroes on the vote rolls, but the registrar who put them there, quickly was defeated.

Wiley A. Branton, project director for the Southern Regional Council Voter Education Project, said that he and other officials of the drive had become so discouraged over the situation in Mississippi, that they had decided to withdraw financial support from the campaign.

He stated that even the most optimistic results showed that only 3,228 new voters had been added to the rolls in the state as a whole, at a cost of $52,958.

One of the main reasons is that for those who are brave enough to take the chance of even going to the courthouse, the literacy tests given Ne- that administered to whites.

Drive officials contend that discriminatory standards are used in judging the answers. A highly educated Negro may be eliminated for the slightest error, while a barely literate white will be allowed to pass.

The new Civil Rights Bill would give the Justice Department additional powers to investigate situations of this sort, but enforcement would be limited to the Federal Courts, entailing a long process, which might require years and years before even the slightest progress could be realized.

Presbyterian Ministers Helping In Hattiesburg Racial Struggle

A steady stream of Presbyterian ministers has gone from St. Louis and central Illinois to Hattiesburg, Miss., in the last eight weeks to picket and to help Negroes register to vote.

Three ministers have gone from St. Louis and 11 from the Decatur area, where a Central Illinois Freedom Fund has been established.

Departing one or two at a time, most of the ministers spent a week in Hattiesburg working with clergymen from other parts of the country and with the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee.

Some Opposed in Churches

All but one of the 14 clergymen are white, most of them pastors of predominantly white congregations. The participation of the ministers has been controversial in some congregations, and at least one went over the opposition of elders of his church.

Last Feb. 23, in a countermove, five leading citizens of Hattiesburg traveled to Charleston, Ill., near Decatur, to state their point of view on the home grounds of their antagonists. The five included three ministers of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, the southern branch of the denomination.

The "Ministers' Hattiesburg Project" began in January after the Rabbinical Assembly of America and national Presbyterian and Episcopal bodies acceded to a request from a joint council of civil rights groups in Mississippi for assistance in a voter-registration drive.

About 50 Northern clergymen took part at the outset, but the number has dwindled to 15 at a time or fewer in recent weeks. Most have been Presbyterian ministers. Central Illinois has been a principal center of support.

St. Louisans Involved

The Rev. Donald B. Register, assistant pastor of Berea Presbyterian Church in St. Louis, was one of nine Presbyterian ministers arrested Jan. 29 for refusing to obey restrictions on picketing outside the Forrest county Courthouse at Hattiesburg.

The Rev. Mr. Register, a Negro, spent six days in jail. He and the others forfeited $400 bail each on breach of peace charges.

Other St. Louis ministers who have participated are the Rev. William G. Lorenz, pastor of Grace Presbyterian Church, an integrated congregation, and the Rev. Frank M. Hutchinson, pastor of Clifton Heights Presbyterian Church, which is in south St. Louis and has an all-white congregation.

Report on Progress

The Rev. Jay Logan of Decatur, who has spurred much of the ministerial participation from his area, said 12 Negroes in the Hattiesburg area were registered voters before the project began. More than 600 have since applied to register and at least 100 of these have passed tests, he said.

"The ministers have been going in to try to provide an umbrella for the SNCC workers, who are safer with white people around," the Rev. Mr. Logan said. "They don't know how to take care of people who have other home grounds."

The ministers said Hattiesburg police have been permitting picketing at the courthouse and have not harrassed demonstrators. The local registrar is under orders of the United States Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals to accept registration applications from Negroes who wish to vote. Department of Justice agents are frequently in the area.

Economic Pressure

The St. Louis ministers said that fear—especially fear of losing jobs—has prevented many of the 7500 Hattiesburg Negroes of voting age from attempting to register in the past. At present, names of applicants are published 10 days in succession.

The visiting ministers are quartered in a former radio-television repair shop in the Negro residential section of the city. They bring their own bedding and sleep on cots.

They put in full days—picketing, canvassing Negro residents and, at night, taking part in prayer meetings.

"I went into 40 homes and never found a person who did not want to vote," the Rev. Mr. Hutchison said.

The five Hattiesburg white residents who attended the meeting at Charleston argued that the action of the out-of-state ministers was unnecessary. They said that they knew of no reprisals against Negroes who sought to register in the past, and contended that the matter was not the business of church men. One of the five conducted a minor filibuster, talking for almost and hour and a half on a two-hour program.

The Rev. Mr. Logan said that the reaction of the audience of 600 persons was mixed. He believed about 50 per cent of residents of the Decatur area favor the program.

The Rev. Newton Cox, pastor of Westminster Presbyterian Church in Hattiesburg, told the Post-Dispatch that the town is more open-minded than many other Mississippi communities, but residents "just aren't going to get used to outsiders coming in and telling them how to do things." Most white moderates have abandoned their own efforts to improve the lot of Negroes until the northern clergymen leave town, he said.

The Rev. Mr. Cox was reared in a suburb of Philadelphia and attended college at Wheaton, Ill.

Voter Activity By Older Negroes Noted

By TOM OXNARD

The most impressive fact about yesterday's Negro voter registration demonstration in Greenwood was the large number of elderly Greenwood natives who took part.

Standing patiently at the door to the Leflore Circuit Clerk's office from 10:15 a.m. until I left Greenwood at 1:15 p.m., scores of Greenwood Negroes, most over 50, waited for the chance to take the voting test.

News Analysis

Outside were pickets.

Most of the picketers were either under twenty-one, white ministers or out-of-town leaders of the civil rights movement.

ACCORDING to a Greenwood newspaper man, last year's demonstrations were largely made up of young people, both in the picket and the registration lines.

The fact of this year's concern by older residents of the town should have large significance to the city, the Delta and Mississippi as a whole.

Civil rights workers in the past have never been able to affect local sentiment except through the young and hot-headed of the Negro population.

It has been the high school and college students who pushed the drive, often to the consternation of their parents and older Negro leaders.

IF YESTERDAY was a gauge of the feeling in the Negro community in a strong Mississippi segregation town, then there is a distinct change from the past.

One newspaper man at the scene yesterday said he doubted if most of the people lined up for voter registration were aware of what they were doing.

But if one man can be an index of the determination of the crowd at the courthouse, C. L. Jordan, a Greenwood Negro and a resident of the city since his birth 60 years ago may be some sort of harbinger.

Jordan told a reporter that "he planned to die in Greenwood."

He was vociferous in his charges that "we can't get justice in this state."

OTHERS WERE not as articulate as Jordan but their presence seemed to indicate a feeling similar to his.

The demonstration as a whole was calm.

Leflore County Sheriff George Smith only asked that demonstrators not block the path elading from the street to the courthouse door and he put a ban on cameras in the courthouse.

Greenwood Police Chief Curtis Lary said his chief concern was "to keep the peace."

The fact that pickets were present was an important sign in the shifting strategy of the Greenwood authorities.

The night befoer the demonstrations, the Greenwood mayor had issued a statement in the local newspaper saying that pickets and marches would not be permitted.

The authorities evidently changed their minds before the action began.

Vote Registration Drive Continues In Miss. Today

By ED MCCUSKER

GREENWOOD, Miss. (AP) — A renewed Negro vote registration campaign in cotton-rich Leflore County — where whites are outnumbered 2-1 — was launched without incident Wednesday.

Civil rights leaders said more Negroes would show up today at the buff-colored courthouse in Greenwood to take oral and written voter qualification tests —prerequisite to voting in Mississippi.

The 1964 registration drive started in marked contrast to one exactly a year ago. Police used a trained dog to disperse Negro marchers. Shots were fired at civil rights workers and many demonstrators, including Negro comic Dick Gregory, were arrested.

Nearly a hundred persons, including several white clergymen, circled the courthouse Wednesday carrying signs supporting the registration campaign.

Police and FBI agents were stationed outside the courthouse. There were few spectators.

40 Apply For Registration

Some 40 persons applied to register to vote during yesterday's Negro voter drive here.

Mrs. Martha Lamb, circuit clerk, administered the voting test to applicants three at a time in her office while keeping it open for all other business.

Since the Negro vote drive began over a year ago, some 2,000 persons have applied for registration. Mrs. Lamb said yesterday she has always taken applicants three at a time when the numbers waiting warrant it.

Ministers Go, Negroes Keep Line Moving

Two dozen Negro pickets resumed their walk in front of the county courthouse today.

The group started out with several white ministers but shortly before 11 a.m. they had all left the line to return to their homes The line then contained all Negroes and most of these appeared to be teenagers.

During yesterday's demonstration at the courthouse there were close to 100 pickets circling the building being led by Negro druggist Aaron Henry of Clarksdale, state president of the NAACP. Henry was not taking part in the picket line today.

The group continued its picket line up until the time Mrs. Martha Lamb, circuit clerk closed her office at 4:30 p.m. They then left the courthouse in groups of fours and fives.

During the day Mrs. Lamb received applications from close to 40 Negroes taking them three at a time.

As the ministers left today, they issued a statement saying that they "are not outsiders."

Hugh H. Annett, director of urban church work of the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., handed the prepared statement to the Commonwealth. He said it represented what the ministers had to say after a meeting they held last night following their observations in Leflore County.

"Today we must return to our churches where we will continue to work for racial justice in our own communities," the ministers said. "We want the people of Greenwood to know we have not come with a sense of moral superiority, but with a deep sense of the tragedy of racial division and injustice today. We appeal to the ministers of Greenwood to open channels of communication between Negroes and whites in Leflore County."

Upon leaving, the ministers said they would reccommend that "the National Council of Churches organize another clergy task force for Greenwood."

Suit to open vote records is continued

B'ham News

file Mem. Reg.

OXFORD, Miss., Aug. 23—(AP)—A Justice Department suit to open Bolvair County voter registration rolls for inspection has been continued until next Monday by U. S. Dist. Judge Claude Clayton.

State and federal attorneys were asked Tuesday to submit authority in behalf of their cases on two technical points. They concerned whether or not the action obstructs due process in the case of federal and state authority and whether the federal government can order a state official to keep voter records.

"It seems a rather dangerous idea to permit a federal officer to have this much control over a state officer," Clayton said, commenting on the second point.

The state has maintained that the Justice Department should prove prospective Negro voters are being discriminated against in Bolivar County if it wants to inspect the county's registration records.

ATTORNEYS ARGUED on whether proof of discrimination was needed before inspection of the records allowed. U. S. Attorney John Doar said the case was similar to others and the government believed Mrs. Walter Lewis, Bolivar circuit clerk, was discriminating.

However, Asst. State Atty. Gen. Dugas Shands said the case was not the same. "The registrars in the other cases have not denied discrimination," he said, "but Mrs. Lewis has made a complete denial that there was any discrimination against Negroes attempting to register to vote."

New Bars to Negro Vote Set by 'Moral' Amendment

atl Journal-Con
6-3-62 Jackson, Miss

By KENNETH TOLER
Memphis Commercial-Appeal
Special to Atlanta Journal-Constitution

MISSISSIPPI

JACKSON, Miss., June 2—Additional obstacles to registration of Negroes as voters were erected by the 1962 General Assembly which adjourned sine die Saturday after a record-setting 22 weeks session. It was the longest session since 1870.

The series of proposals are designed as added legal barriers to slow down the current U.S. Justice Department's drive to remove discriminations assertedly faced by Negroes seeking voter status.

One of the new statutes places in the law a previously voter-ratified constitutional amendment which requires an applicant for registration to be "of good moral character" and to demonstrate that fact to the county registrar.

COUPLED with that law is one permitting a third party to challenge the good moral character of an applicant for qualified elector status. When such a challenge is filed, the county registrar must inform the applicant and provide for his appearance at an "administrative hearing to determine the sufficiency of the application or challenge."

TIED-IN to the challange statute is a requirement that an applicant must publish his intentions in a local newspaper before it can be considered by the registrar. After the application is filed with the registrar, that official has it published once a week for two weeks. If no challenge is filed within 14 days of the last publication, the registrar then puts the application through the necessary "tests" as to "good moral character" and, ability to intrepret any section of the Constitution submitted by the registrar.

Inclusion of the "good moral character" prerequisite is additional to an existing requirement that the applicant "be able to read and write any section of the state constitution and give a reasonable interpretation thereof and demonstrate a reasonable understanding of the duties and obligations of citizenship under a constitutional form of government."

ANOTHER requirement to gaining voter status is that the applicant shall have "never been convicted of bribery, burglary, theft, arson, obtaining money or goods under false pretenses, perjury, forgery, embezzlement or bigamy and who has paid all poll taxes for the two proceeding years and have paid them before the first day of February of the year in which he offers to vote." There is no "catching up" on back poll taxes in an election year.

On the application blank for registration, the applicant must give his age, occupation, where business carried on, if employed, by whom, place of residence, date such residence began, previous place of residence, whether applicant has been convicted, and if so, when and where, of the crimes outlined in the constitution.

Jim Foreman, SNCC, called this morning to report that the Shady Grove Baptist Church, 1½ miles outside Leesburg Georgia (Lee County) on State Hwy. 195, was bombed last night. No one was in the building and there were no injuries. The church has been used in recent weeks as the regular meeting place for SNCC's voter registration work in Lee County. Forman said he had reported the bombing to the FBI office in Atlanta this morning and had also sent a telegram to Burke Marshall's office asking for an investigation.

Burns never bothered to get a divorce from his first wife but for 15 years their present situation has been mutually agreeable. He has lived with his present wife for 15 years and has two children (ceremony unknown at this time). Recently a white lawyer approached his first wife and asked if she had ever obtained a divorce. No. He asked if her husband were taking care of her. No. She signed a statement. Bigamny charge.

Nowkpeople where he is living have asked him to move out.

The police came last night and later one car with 18 white men. All the white men got out and started up the stairs while the boys watched them. The boys then jumped out the window and fled.

Civil Rights Suit Denounced

State Officials Pledge Defiance

JACKSON (UPI) — Top Mississippi officials have reacted defiantly to a Justice Department civil rights suit filed here Tuesday and have sworn to fight it.

Gov. Ross Barnett called the suit "an attempt to win the Negro vote."

Sen. James O. Eastland said it was a "political document. . . which reads more like a speech prepared for delivery before the NAACP or in a lunatic asylum, than any legal document."

Sen. John C. Stennis said it was an "unwarranted direct assault upon the laws of Mississippi."

State Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson, who along with Barnett was one of the defendants named in the suit, would make no comment about the complaint, but said, "You can say we will defend the acts in the courts."

The suit, filed in U. S. district court, would nullify two sections of the Mississippi constitution and five state laws which the department says are used to keep Negores from voting.

It asks that a three-judge panel hear the case and issue anti-discrimination injunctions against registrars in Amite, Coahoma, Claiborne, Lowndes, Leflore and Pike counties, who also were named defendants.

Eastland said the suit "is a polemic designed purely and simply as a political document to further partisan politics. This is a brutal grasp for political power through the prostitution of the federal judiciary."

Circuit Clerk Is Away As Charge Against Him Filed

Coahoma Official Is One Of Six Cited In Justice Department Action

Coahoma County Circuit Clerk J. W. Smith was out of town today and could not be reached for comment on the Justice Department suit which was filed in Jackson yesterday and which named him as a defendant.

His office deputy, Mrs. Lelia W. Thistle, said Smith started his vacation last Wednesday and that she did not expect him to return to work until next Monday. She said she did not know where he had gone on his vacation.

Smith is one of six Mississippi county registrars listed as defendants in the suit.

About 40 Negros filed complaints against Smith, saying he would not attempt to register them during the last two weeks of July. They said Smith told them he was too busy with court duties — circuit court then being in session — to handle the registration at that time.

Meanwhile, U. S. Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy released voting registration figures for the six counties in the state involved in the civil rights suit.

It alleges that in Coahoma County there are 8,708 whites of voting age and 8,376 registered; that there are 14,604 Negroes of voting age and 1,371 registered.

In Leflore County, the only other Delta county involved — the others are Amite, Claiborne, Lowndes and Pike — the Kennedy report showed 10,274 whites, with 9,803 registered; 13,567 Negroes and 258 registered.

Mrs. Martha Turner Lamb of Greenwood is a defendant along with Smith and registrars in the other four counties.

Discrimination Ban Expected In Washington

Federal Housing Would Be Affected

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy said today President Kennedy might issue an executive order before Jan. 1 banning racial discrimination in federally assisted housing.

Kennedy was asked by newsmen when he expected the President to sign the long-awaited order, which he promised on several occasions during the 1960 presidential campaign.

"There is no time set for it," the attorney general replied. "I know the President is giving it consideration. I think it is very possible that it will come out before the first of the year."

Administration sources have said there was a better than even chance that the order would be signed and promulgated after Congress adjourns and before the Nov. 6 election. They said it probably would take effect on Jan. 1, the 100th anniversary of Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation.

The expected order would prohibit racial, religious and ethnic discrimination in rental of federally subsidized low-rent housing, in rental or sale of property in federally aided urban renewal areas, and in sale or rental of new housing with FHA - insured and VA-guaranteed home loans.

The White House has been studying the possibility of broadening the order. The Civil Rights Commission has urged that it cover mortgage lending by federally insured savings and loan associations and banks.

August 29, 1962 - Clarksdale Mississippi
Statement of David J. Dennis

On the evening of August 28, 1962 I attended a meeting of the Council of Federated Organizations at the Haven Methodist Church in Clarksdale Mississippi. The meeting broke up at about 12:30 A.M. I left the church in my car, a 1956 Chevrolet, the car with me were, Peter McKenney, Dave Dennis, Calvin Siddell, another young lady from Hattiesburg. As we pulled away from the Church I noticed a police car (Clarksdale Police Dept.) parked in front of the Church. We had driven a few blocks and had stopped at a traffic light. A police car turned onto the street we were on while we were stopped at the light. There were two policemen in the car. One came over to our car and the other went to the car behind us, which contained some people who had been at the meeting. The officer asked to see my drivers license. I gave him my license, in a cellophane folder. He told me to "take the damn thing" out of the folder. He walked to the rear of the car and spoke to the other officer. He came back and asked me what we were doing here. I told him I had been to a meeting and that I was on my way back to Jackson. He told me to move on and returned my license to me. We drove on and I noticed that the car behind us had stopped so I turned and went back, thinking they might have had car trouble. One of the guys from the Miss. Free Press was driving the car. He said they had decided to go back to Jackson by way of Cleveland. They didn't want to go thru Ruleville because they were afraid police there would stop them. We drove on there to get on Highway 61. We were turning off 4th Street onto another Highway (not #61) when we were stopped by another Clarksdale police car. The officer asked if we were looking for anyone. I said no, that we were going to Jackson. He told us to go on and I noticed in the rear-view mirror that he was following us. There were two officers in the police car. This was not the same police team which had stopped us before. After we got on Highway 61, we passed by a car which had apparently been stopped by two police cars. I think both these police cars were Clarksdale police. The car that had been stopped was driven by Jim Farmer. I do not know who was in the car with Farmer. Farmer was standing outside the car talking to policemen. I do not know how many policemen were there. I do not know whether or not the spot where I saw Farmer stopped was inside the Clarksdale City Limits. The police car which was following us pulled off and stopped at Farmer's car. We went on down the road about 10 blocks and pulled off and stopped. We wanted to see if Farmer would come on or if he would be detained by police. We waited four or ten minutes and then decided to go on. Before pulling back onto the road I looked behind me. I saw headlights of a car coming towards us about four or five blocks away. It was my judgment that the car was not approaching at such a speed as to make it unsafe for me to pull onto the highway. The speed limit at this point on the road is either 35 or 40 M.P.H. I pulled onto the road and had traveled about a block and a half when the car behind me rounded a siren. This was the first indication I had had that the car I had seen approaching was a police car. I pulled off the road again. Only one officer was in the car. He pulled off behind us, blinked his lights on brights and called for me to come to him. I went back to him and he asked to see my drivers license. I showed it to him. He asked whose drivers license I was showing him. I told him it was mine. He asked where I was going. I told him. During this conversation I had spoken to him civilly but had not used "sir". He told me to come sit in the car beside him. I asked him why it was necessary. He said "I told you to come" "sit" "down right here" pointing to the seat beside him. He made a gesture toward his gun, strapped to his waist. I went around the car and got in beside him. He asked me if I knew how to say "Yassuh" and "nossuh". I said I didn't feel it was necessary, that I thought it more respectful to say "yes". He explained to me that people should respect police officers. At this time he was referring to me as "nigger". Mari Jahner got out of our car and came to see what was going on. He told her "Get your ass back in that car". Mari had been looking out the car window toward the police car. At one time she said "What is that license number". The officer had heard her. During the conversation about respect, I said "Yes, I understand what you're talking about". He said "What did you say". I repeated myself. He said that he was "tired of all this bullshit". There was a billy on the seat beside him. He picked the billy up and pushed it near my face and said he would "knock

My boots down my throat". He went on to say that both white and niggers say "yes sir" to police here and that this was a mark of first class citizenship. There had been some discussion previously about first and second class citizenship. The officer spoke at some length about how he respected a "nigger" as much as a white. At this point he said it was not my fault that I was a "nigger". He shined a light on my face and asked me if I had white blood. I said I didn't know. He said I did know. Up to this time he had said nothing at all about any thing I might have done that violated any law or ordinance. He spoke at some length about how we were destroying the harmonious race relations in the South. He said we would never be able to change things. At no time did I say yes "sir". Finally he pushed up the billy and said "I see what I'm gonna have to do". Cordia leaned out of the car ahead and said something. He said say "yes" one more time. I said I had no reason to. Just previous to this, as noted above, he said "I see what I'm gonna have to do — take you down to the station and give you a going over" or words to this effect. Up to this time the officer had mentioned nothing about any offense I had committed. He asked me if I had any money. I said why. He asked if the others had any money. I said I didn't know, — why? He sat looking at my driver's license for a moment, then said "You committed a driving offense you know" I said what. He thought for a moment. Then he said "you cut out in front of me". I protested that there had been plenty of time — that I had said been guilty of improper driving. He said that I was guilty of failing to yield right of way. He said he was going to put me under arrest. I asked what would be the fine and if I could put up bond. He said the bond would be about $19. He asked if I had that much. I told him I didn't. He asked if the others had money. I said we could ask. He said it might be more. He asked if anyone of the others had a driver's license. I said maybe Tester did. He called Tester. Tester came back to the police car. He asked Tester if he had a license. Tester said no. He had Tester converred for a while and the officer rebuked him for not using "sir". After Tester showed him identification he told Tester to go back to the car.

The officer began to fumble around with my license. I asked him if there most I had to go to jail. He said yes if I couldn't put up bond. I think he was undecided about whether or not he should arrest me. He told me to follow him to the station after ~~the~~ having further remarked upon my failure to accord him proper respect. I got into my car and followed him to the station.

When we got to the station the officer and I went inside and he remarked to the other officers that this was one of those "smart aleggers" that wants to be a first class citizen. He ~~told~~ the other officers that I had cut in front of him and that he had nearly run over me. The other officers remarked that this was a very serious offense for which I probably would get some time". I asked if I could put up bond. He asked how much money I had. I told him just a few dollars. I said I could go outside and see if my companion had any money. He told me to do so. I went out and told the others to call Bob Moses & Dr. Aaron Henry and let them know what happened. The officer let me go outside alone.

When I went back in I was told that no one was there who could accept bond. They told me to go check my personal belongings to the desk sergeant. I asked the desk sergeant if I could make bond. He said yes. The arresting officer overheard this and he and another officer came over and discussed the matter of bond-making with the desk sergeant. The sergeant seemed to think he could take bond, the other officers insisted he couldn't. They called the Chief on the radio and he came and they conferred. Then I was told by the Chief that I couldn't make bond because this was a County offense. It was my impression during all this that the arresting officer was a Clarksdale City policeman. I did not understand the intricacies of the reason why I couldn't make bond.

I gave my property to the desk sergeant. He put it in an envelope and had me sign it. Then they took me back to a cell.

Kept warning about 6:30 they come and handcuffed me and took me to the County jail. I was described to the desk sergeant there as a "smart nigger". They put me in a private cell. About ½ hour later they came in with Alcohol sheets and asked me if there was anything I needed.

Around 8:30 A.M. I was released and they told me to go see Mr. Aaron Henry and instructed me how to get there. Mr. Henry told me they had agreed to let me come to him to get the money to pay my fine. At no time did anyone ask me if I was guilty of failing to yield the right of way. Mr. Henry let me use his car to take the 21.85 back to the Sheriff's office. I paid the 21.85 and was given a receipt which reads "On account of failure to yield Rt. of Way". The receipt is signed by Calvin Weeks for L. A. Ross, Sheriff and Tax Collector, Coahoma County, Mississippi.

Aug 29, 1962, Clarksdale - WB and I went to the office of Everett Connell, Judge of Municipal Court, Clarksdale. It was WB's intention to secure from the Judge a continuance of the cases of the six defendants for a week or two. Their cases are presently scheduled to come up Aug 30 at 5:30 pm. WB wants to secure the continuance in order to get time for justice to seek an injunction barring prosecution of these defendants on these charges.

The judge asked why WB wanted the continuance. WB said defendants needed time to secure counsel. Judge asked if they had tried locally. WB said that, in all honesty, and with due regard for the administration of justice, the boys could not expect to get fair and honest representation from local counsel. The judge seemed taken aback by this frank appraisal of conditions. He did not attempt to refute this interpretation of conditions in Clarksdale.

He would not agree to a continuance, insisting that a motion must be filed at the time appearance is scheduled.

WB asked him if he could represent the defendants, explaining that he had practiced some in other Miss. Counties. The judge said he would have to look up the rules on this. It was WB's opinion that the judge himself was the final authority on who could practice in his court (assuming of course that the individual in question was otherwise qualified). It seems justifiable to infer that the judge actually wanted to discuss the matter of WB's practicing with local politicians and influentials. He said he wanted call WB at 4th St. drug store in short time.

WB came to 4th St. Drugs & called Burke Marshall in DC. suggesting enjoining of prosecution of the sit lottering defendants. He explained the whole thing to Marshall. (WB concerned about position of Justice coming in either after forfeiture in Muni. Court or conviction in Muni. Court. It might be argued that appropriate remedy would then be appeal rather than injunction against prosecution. However, it could be argued, against this, that this would not actually be an appeal, but a trial de novo under Mississippi procedure.) Marshall thought that the latter argument would suffice, though he would much prefer that Justice be able to get into it at the Muni. level with a contemnor.

WB called Carsie Hall, attorney in Jackson with the idea that Hall could be the boys attorney, but he would be unable because of the short notice, to appear at the hearing on Aug. 30. Thus the judge could not preserve any semblance of judicial fairness and at the same time deny the contemnor.

Judge called WB and said he could represent them. WB told him that the students were trying to get Carsie Hall but that he was afraid Carsie might have a conflict. WB had not at this time talked to Lake Providence La. Aug 30, 1962.

Stopped at Harris funeral home. Mrs. Harris very cautious and gave every evidence of rather extreme fear. Directed us to Rev. Scott's residence and told us about Scott's shooting. Mrs Harris said she is not registered. Said she's been too busy and that she intends to register as soon as she gets the time. She did not mention herself being afraid. She said that the ones who have been active in registration work had not been scared off by the Scott shooting but that with others, fear had been intensified by the incident.

Rev. Scott was in Chicago. Convention but we talked to Mrs. Scott. She gave this account of the shooting. On the evening of August 22 she and her husband and four young children were returning in their car from a church service in Lake Providence. Their home is on the outskirts of the town. The turnoff to their home is in the middle of a long curve in the highway. Passing on the curve is imprudent and therefore they thought nothing of the fact that a car was behind them. They had been having some trouble with a wheel on their car and were driving very slowly. Just as they started their turn off the highway a car behind them swung out to pass. Because the turn is a very sharp one they had almost come to a standstill to negotiate it. As the car pulled alongside them Mrs. Scott heard what sounded like a blowout on the other car. Almost immediately her husband shouted something like "I've been shot" and threw his arms out in front of him. Mrs Scott saw blood on his left arm and saw that his left shirtsleeve was torn. Her immediate reaction to her husbands statement was one of incredulity. Then her husband told her to take the wheel of the car and drive on to the house. He jumped out of the car. She drove on a few feet and then stopped to look back, fearing that her husband might be seriously injured. She saw him running across the fields toward their house, so she drove there herself. A shot gun had been fired at the left (driver's) door of their car, blowing a hole in the metal of the door. Some of the buckshot had entered her husbands left arm, but no serious injury resulted. Her husband had been in St. Louis enroute to Chicago prior to this incident, but had returned for the hearing on Contempt Charges against the registrar of E. Carroll Parish. The Sheriff and local F.B.I. are investigating the shooting. Mrs. Scott states that she has little confidence in the F.B.I. men who cooperate with local officials. Her daughter, about 14, was on the porch with her when she mentioned the F.B.I.'s role in the investigation. The daughter, gently, displayed some ironic mirth at the implied suggestion that there was any confidence to be placed in the racial impartiality of the F.B.I. people. Mrs. Scott verbalized similar sentiments. Mrs. Scott is one of those registered by the federal Judge as is Rev. Scott. She gave no indication that she was intimidated or discouraged by the shooting but she indicated that many Negroes were. Rev. Scott and the home seem leaders, apparently, in local registration efforts. Mrs. Scott displayed a rather sophisticated knowledge about local and state political processes.

we were advised by Mrs. Scott that we should also talk to Mr. Eric Armstrong who, she said has been very active in voter registration. Armstrong owns an Esso Service Station and a dry cleaning plant in Lake Providence. Armstrong was out of town but we talked to Mrs. Armstrong.

She is a public school teacher in the parish system. She is not registered to vote, though her husband was one of those registered by the federal judge. She said she thought it would be foolish for her to register unless she could get at least 2 or 3 other teachers to go with her. She felt sure that if she went alone, she would lose her job. She did not think Louisiana's tenure law would be any protection against arbitrary discharge unless several teachers were involved. Her reasoning was that it would be to explain away the coincidence of several teachers', newly registered, being fired.

She said that those Negroes who were determined to register previous to the Scott shooting seemed even more determined now. On the other hand she felt that the apathy engendered by fear of reprisal was keeping most local Negroes from registering. She said that she would not even mention registration to the teachers except in an oblique way and then only to close friends. She felt it would be dangerous to have the word get around that she was advocating registration.

She said several federal people had talked to her and her husband about the Scott shooting. She said that she found it impossible to discuss matters with local F.B.I. with any confidence. She felt much different about non-southern justice department folk. She mentioned having one justice department lawyer over for dinner while he was in the area investigating the shooting. She felt that outside help was needed for an effective registration program. She was particularly interested in having workers come in. She said that no economic reprisals had been visited on her husband, though the town Marshall had told him recently that he'd never "lay another goddamn gallon of gas" at Armstrong's Drive station.

WB and I returned to Clarksdale Mississippi about 1:00 pm August 30. WE had just gone to Henry's house to relax a bit when WB got a dall from Bob Moses. Five of the SNCC workers had been arrested, he said, in Indianaola, Miss. WB walled the city jail there and was told that four individuals had been charged with distributing literature without a permit. The city jail told WB that the fifth person, Lawrence Surney, was 17 years old and had been turned over to the juvenile authorities. Three of the four arrested in Indianaola were due in court at 5:30 that day in Clarksdale. By the time we got all this information it was about 3:00. WB suggested that I take bail money to Indianaola, about 50 miles from Clarksdale, and try to get the individuals back there in time for the trial. I arrived in Indianaola about 4:30. I went to the city jail and found, inthe office, the chief of police and one other person. The other person appeared to exert some authority and I suppose him to have been a city councilman, probably in charge of police matters. I told the cheif the nature of may business. He appeared not to understand what it was I wanted. I spedified the names of the individuals I wanted to make bail for. The cheif acknowledged that they were in jail but still did not appear to understand what I wanted to do about it. I was finally able to get him to acknowledge that he understood that I wanted to make bail. Then he wanted to know what kind of bail I wished to make. I told him I had the cash for their bonds. He said that he could not accept cahs bonds for them without the authority of the Mayor. Asked him where I could find the Mayor and he directed me to the Pitts Coal and Steel Co., the Mayor's place of business. I went there andfound the place closed. I returned to the jail and so informed the cheif. I asked him if he had any idea where we might get in touch with the mayor. He said the mayor was not at home and picked up the microphone and informed someone (presumably a patrol car) that the mayor was to be looked for. We sat there for ten minutes or so, awaiting the results of the search. Finally the individual called back and said that he had been unable to locate the mayor but that he had seen the mayor's truck someplace and that this indicated to him the mayor probably had gone to his farm. The cheif then suggested that I wait while they tried to locate the mayor. We sat and chatted for a while about the weather, the cotton crop and the distance between Indianaola and the Mississippi River and about the venerable old jail in which the five were imprisoned. The chief said it had been built around 1900. After about 20 or so minuets of this the cheif got a phone call. He sat nodding his head and saying "yes" for five minutes or so. Then he hung up the phone, walked toward the door, truned and said to me "You just be patient, we'll get you taken careof". Then he walked out. I waited another ten minutes or so and then decided that they had no intention of permitting me to make bail for the five that evening. Since it was 5:30 there was no chance of getting the five back to Clarksdale in time for court. Bob Moses and James Bevel came in and they suggested that we leave the five in jail overnight. They further suggested that we try to get BM's people to interview the five in the jail that night. I returned to Clarksdale and informed WB that trila was to be held in Indianaola for the five the following morning at 7:30 (as the chief had informed me during our chat). WB said that when he appeared in court in Clarksdale that afternoon, the prosecutor had moved for dismissal of the charges because, he said, investigation subsequent to the arrest had revealed that the six "might" have had a reasonable excuse for being outside after the 12:00 Clarksdale curfew.

(The cheif in Indianaola had informed that the juvenile, Surney, had been released to the custody of James Bevel).

We saw BM's people that night in Clarksdale and the three gave statements. We arrived in Indianaola about 7:45 next morning. The court had already tried one of the defendants, Block, and found him guilty. The court agreed to WB's motion for a one-week continuance for the other three. The court called Surney to the bench and asked him where he was from. He replied "Ruleville". The court warned him to stay in Ruleville and not come down there and be stirring the peopledup. He further warned him he would send him to the county farm if he did come back to Indianaola. The front seats of the court room were filled with a dozen or so uglies of the Klan type who had apparently gathered for the sport. The defendants were being brought from the jail and tried one at a time. The only reason which suggested itself for this was that the bullying of the uglies would be less tolerable if the defendants were not even granted the comfort of numbers. When court recessed we went into the cheif's office and WB arranged bail and an appeal bond for Block. While we were there one of the officers came in with a deoderizing bomb and sprayed around and near us. The uglies were now in the hall way outside the cheif's office making various and sundry remarks. When bail details had been completed, we went outside to where we had parked the car. No one was there in whose custody we could leave the four (the juvenile having left with Bevel). We waited around for some time but when BM's people did not show up and we could find none of the four's associates, we decided to take them to Cleveland where BM's boys could find them. Serverl little knots of angry whites had gathered at various places around the city hall and we did not feel it safe to leave the four to their tender mercies. We met BM's boys on the way to Cleveland and they trailed us there and interviewed the four at Amzie Moore's house in Cleveland. WB and I proceeded to Memphis where we caught a plane for Nashville. In Nashville, WB called SRC and learned that Bob Moses had been arrested that same day on a charge of distributing literature without a permit in Indianaola. WB called Mayor Pitts and got him to agree to release Moses if we sent a $100 money order to cover the bail. We subseqentuly learned that ~~the~~ Pitts honored this agreement.

Collins Denies Voter Group 'Harassed'

Police Jail Six After Meeting Here

Six persons were arrested by city police last night for loitering following the close of a state Negro voter registration meeting at Haven Methodist Church.

Police Chief Ben C. Collins denied an NAACP claim today that the arrests were made to harass the voter registration campaign. He said he did not know anything about the meeting.

He said the arrests were "strictly routine," and handled just like any other of the hundreds of loitering cases which receive the attention of police during the year.

The chief also said that the individuals were warned at midnight that the city has a midnight curfew and that they were supposed to be off the streets at that time. The arrests occurred about 1:20 a.m.

Aaron Henry, state president of the NAACP, said the six along with another man arrested by a highway patrolman, attended the voter registration meeting. He said it was a meeting of paid employes in the campaign and that about 50 people attended the gathering which began about 9 and ended about 12:30.

Among those attending were Wiley Branton of Atlanta, national director of the voter registration drive, and Norman Kurland and Edgar Brown, identified by Henry as field representatives of the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights.

Those arrested included John Hodges, Samuel Black, J. L. Harris, Richard T. Gray, Albert Garner, Dewey Roosevelt Greene Jr. and Daniel Dennis, the latter by the highway patrol. Dennis was charged with failure to yield the right of way.

All the others were charged with loitering and Greene was charged with driving without an inspection sticker.

Collins said Greene was arrested in his car on Mississippi Ave. and that the others were standing on Fourth St.

The six persons arrested by police were bailed out of jail about noon, paying $51 bond each. They are due to be tried in city court at 5 p.m. Thursday.

Decision Time Nearing For Rigid Mississippi

By Robert E. Baker
Staff Reporter

JACKSON, Miss. — Ever since the Supreme Court's 1954 desegregation decision, white Mississippi has been on an official binge of defiance and racism.

Today, there is a distinct possibility that when the University of Mississippi opens its new term two weeks hence, a Negro may walk on the campus with admission papers issued by a Supreme Court Justice. Negro efforts to register to vote are being countered with arrests by white officials, intimidation and the shout of "Communist."

Clear heads and sober thoughts are needed in Mississippi now more than at any time in the past century.

But instead of sobering up, white Mississippi seems to be belting down one more for the road.

There could be an ugly crash.

Judicial Warfare Subject

A week ago, Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy entered the University of Mississippi desegregation case, which has been the subject of judicial warfare between Federal Circuit Judge Ben F. Cameron of Meridian and his colleagues on the Fifth U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Each time the Fifth Circuit has ordered the University to admit James Meredith, a Negro, Cameron has stayed the order at the State's request.

Finally, the NAACP asked Associate Justice Hugo L. Black of the U. S. Supreme Court to revoke Cameron's latest stay. Black issued an order to that effect today.

Most white Mississippians seem to think Cameron will stay Black's order.

Kennedy's criticism of Cameron's actions, said State Attorney General Joe Patterson, was "like a jackass looking up into the sky and braying at a great American eagle as it soars above."

The day after Ole Miss opens its session, the Mississippi State Legislature is scheduled to go into special session. University of Mississippi educators don't know what's going to happen.

The University has had great difficulty getting faculty members from outside the State as the crisis nears. Gov. Ross R. Barnett has shown no dilution of his vow that no desegregation would occur while he is top man in Mississippi.

Called 'Uncle Tom'

Percy Greene, Negro publisher of the Jackson Advocate, has been called an "Uncle Tom" by many Negroes who consider him too conservative on the race problem. But when Greene editorially called for Mississippi to accept Meredith in the University, white advertisers recovered from their shock enough to cancel their ads.

In 1955, some Jackson Negroes petitioned the School Board to desegregate the school system. The Board never answered. Last month, nine Negroes filed another petition and promised to take their request to Federal court this time if necessary.

mons took out after Johnston's hide.

The word is that Johnston, who three years ago handled Governor Barnett's racist campaign for Governor, will resign from the Commission after the November election.

Former Gov. J. P. Coleman, figured to be a gubernatorial candidate next year, has tried to talk sense within the narrow limits allowed Mississippi politicians in this era.

At the Neshoba County fair last month, Coleman said today's race problem is the same old problem, in a different form, that has confronted the South in the past and, in a still different form, will confront it in the future.

"Let us resolve that a whole people will not be stampeded by a handful of spooks and goblins," he said. "Let us resolve, instead, that we will, as in ages past, remain loyal Americans, loyal Mississippians, ladies and gentlemen to the core, unawed and unafraid."

And some of his advisers and supporters quivered because they thought he had gone too far out there in left field.

The McComb Enterprise Journal prescribes moderation in as big a dose as it can without the patient going berserk and attacking the doctor.

Clock Running Out

In an editorial last month, the newspaper wondered whether Mississippi wasn't undergoing a change similar to that in Arkansas, where Gov. Orval E. Faubus, once the darling of the White Citizens Council clan, had just won renomination as the "moderate" gubernatorial candidate.

"The logic of the Arkansas election is that it points up the fact that the voters recognize the futility of the extreme segregationist view and the violence and disorder which is stimulated in the

The Jackson Daily News published not only their names and addresses, but the names and addresses of their employers as well. And editorially, the Daily News called the petitioners "sick, pity-seeking" people who "will destroy Jackson's school system or bring hate and publicized horror to Jackson . . ."

Last week in the Jackson Clarion Ledger, columnist Charles M. Hill recalled and reviewed an 1857 Mississippi law that provided for the cutting off of the ears of Negroes guilty of perjury in felony cases.

"We cannot find it in us to condone such severe punishment," wrote Hill, "but will hasten to observe that our forefathers erred in that they lopped off the wrong appendage.

"Had they concentrated on the tongue, we might not have the vociferous NAACP today."

Not of One Voice

But white Mississippi isn't entirely of one voice of defiance. The White Citizens Council, the official disciplinarian of thought and action, has discovered recently that it is not so much the Negroes that must be kept in line but straying whites.

Jackson Judge Russell Moore, who handled the Freedom Riders here, began distributing petitions among officials that were interpreted as calling for their oath to go to jail rather than obey desegregation orders.

With the delighted applause of the White Citizens Council, all but three Hinds County officials signed them. But Jackson' Mayor Allen C. Thompson said that was a silly way to act in so serious a drama and refused to sign. Without the Mayor as leading man, the show flopped.

Erle Johnston, publicity director of the Mississippi State Sovereignty Commission, which uses tax money to subsidize the White Citizens Council, also has clashed with the powerful Council.

In a speech at his home town of Grenada, Johnston said the time has come for the accommodation to the facts of life, that Negroes and whites must work together for [illegible]

At the Neshoba County fair last month, Coleman said today's race problem is the same old problem, in a different form, that has confronted the South in the past and, in a still different form, will confront it in the future.

"Let us resolve that a whole people will not be stampeded by a handful of spooks and goblins," he said. "Let us resolve, instead, that we will, as in ages past, remain loyal Americans, loyal Mississippians, ladies and gentlemen to the core, unawed and unafraid."

And some of his advisers and supporters quivered because they thought he had gone too far out there in left field.

The McComb Enterprise Journal prescribes moderation in as big a dose as it can without the patient going berserk and attacking the doctor.

Clock Running Out

In an editorial last month, the newspaper wondered whether Mississippi wasn't undergoing a change similar to that in Arkansas, where Gov. Orval E. Faubus, once the darling of the White Citizens Council clan, had just won renomination as the "moderate" gubernatorial candidate.

"The logic of the Arkansas election is that it points up the fact that the voters recognize the futility of the extreme segregationist view and the violence and disorder which is stimulated in the State of Arkansas," said the Enterprise Journal.

The clock is running out in Mississippi. A few of the white people are trying to tell the rest what time it is.

Memo from Bob Moses and Charles Cobb
Re: Shooting incident in Ruleville

SEP 14 1962

Mississippi Project

1. Interview with Mr. Herman Sisson and his wife, Hattie Sisson:

Mr. Sisson says he went to Cleveland around 4:00 P.M. to pick up two girls to carry to Jackson, Vivian Hilley, his granddaughter, Mary Lee Burks, and also his daughter, Annie Laura. He says he returned to Ruleville around 7:00 P.M. They fixed a bite to eat, the two girls washed the dishes, then they sat around the living room chatting and reading, (see attached diagram) Mr. Sisson says they were talking about going to Jackson and he was saying that they had to get away at 4:00 A.M. so they should go to bed. He was reading a newspaper and the two girls were talking to each other on the couch. Then he says he heard two shots, Bam Bam, and then after a few minutes another shot, Bam. He says it sounded to him like a rifle.

Mr. Sisson says Vivian fell first, off the couch onto the floor, then Marion fell on Vivian and then rolled off onto the floor in front of the table. Then he says everybody began hollering. Mrs. Sisson called to the man across the street, "My granddaughter is shot", "Help, help, Mr. Hayward, Mr. Hayward". Mrs. Balock, from across the street, and Mrs. Ada Anderson from down the street came. Mrs. Sisson ran out on the porch and back into the house, shouting for help. Mr. Sisson said he was moving around keeping kind of a fuss- he was upset. Then he carried the girls outside to the car. Cindy and another girl helping carry them. The girls, he said kind of walked out, using them for a balance.

Mr. Sisson drove the car to the hospital. At the hospital he saw the Mayor. He said the mayor approached him and said, " You done that yourself, trying to lay it on somebody else, you done that your self, get out of here, go on out of here". Mr. Sisson said he went home then.

Mrs. Sisson, who was at home, said the mayor came by the house and said, "I was looking for this to happen, I was looking for this to happen, lot more should have gotten this" .... "This is like Carl Braden, he pulled a stunt, burned down his house to get publicity". Then the mayor left and went to the hospital.

Mr. Sisson said shortly after he came back the mayor came, saying, "Where's Hattie, where's Hattie"..."Hattie, you go over to the hospital, you shot, come onelet me take you to the hospital, let the doctor see about this arm". He said the mayor came back shortly, and said, "I'm so glad Hattie didn't get shot".

In the meantime Charles Cobb, student voter worker, had gone to the hospital, after calling Bob Moses from Mr. Sisson's house. The mayor arrested Charles at the hospital (see Charles Cobb's report) and brought him back to Mr. Sisson's. Mr. Sisson said, the mayor came in saying, "I got the evidence, I got the evidence, here it is, right on this book, I know he's guilty and shows it, take him on up there and put him in the cooler and go back by Joe's and get the other three and get the gun. (The reference here is to Mr. Joe MacDonald's house)

Mr. Sisson said he had to run over here and get Hattie, but the mayor said, "No, no, I'll get Hattie back, you don't know what'll happen, I brought her over here and I'll bring her back". Then he called Mr. Sisson over, "Jack, you be careful around here cause you don't know what'll happen." Then the mayor went and brought Mrs. Sisson back. There were 7 or 8 in the house when the mayor came back. Irene Johnson, George Jordan, Miles Foster, Charlis McLendon, Mrs. Balock, Mrs. Anderson, Charles Beazley (local student who has been very active in the vote drive).

Mr. Sisson said that all of the officers were gone then and the people began to leave.

Comments: There was one light on in the room, the fan was not on. There were nine bullet holes in the lower par t of one window, four on one blade of the fan and seven up on the wall opposite the windows. Mr. Ollie Young said they had to be bullets, that a shot gun would have torn the window and the guard over the fan out.

2. Interview with Mrs. Anderson:

Mrs. Anderson runs a small store facing East on Reden st., on North Division st.. She said she was in her home when she heard a shot coming from the direction East on Reden and after the shooting she heard a car come through. It wasn't very long before she heard a shot in the direction North from her home and some other shots and then screaming and hollering.

She said she was lying down onthe couch, got up on her front porch to see what it was. Someone was hollering, "Help, help, Lord help us " Lots of neighbors were on their porches. She walked down the street to the Sisson's home.

She said when she walked into the house, blood was all over the floor, the girl was just laying there in the blood, Mr. Sisson had gone out and got into his car to go th the hospital. His wife was trying to call her brother, she couldn't cause she was in a nervous shape and her arm was hurt too. Mrs Anderson said she called for her, but couldn't get her brother. She then called for Irene Johnson and dialed the operator and told her that an accident had happened at Mrs. Sisson's home and they needed the doctor and the law right away.

Irene Johnson came right on and Mrs. Anderson said that it was then that she got the full meaning of what happened, that someone had shot through the window.

The mayor came in then, Mr. Sisson had carried the girls to the hospital;the mayor began investigating the holes in the wall and the fan, said, I been expecting something like this, agitators had been causing this for publicity, asked Mrs. Anderson where the girls were laying; she told him right there in that puddle of blood.

The mayor called someone on the phone, while he was talking Charles Cobb and Charles Beazley came in, both are workers in the vote drive.

Another man in a white shirt, black tie, dark pants came in, a little spare made man with small face and hair combed back. He was asking who was in the house when the shots were made and where each one was sitting, he said that he knew just about where to go, just about who to pick up, that ole Moses.

Mrs. Anderson says that Milan, the night police, who had come with the mayor, went on the outside and was looking and went in the bathroom to see if any shots came through. And another one with a star stood up on the coush and dug through one of the holes, said this was buck shot. Mr. Givens, the day man came in, but Mrs. Anderson says she didn't see him doing a thing, didn't hear him say anything, just walked around and looked.

In the meantime Mrs. Johnson, who had left, came back and told them about Mr. Mac's house. They all jumped out then And the mayor said let's go find the gun, and he left with the officers.

Then Mrs. Anderson, Irene Johnson, and Preacher Storey's wife sat and talked. Mr. Sisson and Charles Beazley were also there. Someone had carried Mrs. Sisson to the hospital (Mrs. Anderson said that Milan had looked at her arm and said that she better have that treated, have that dressed, because she might get blood poisoning).

They talked about the accident - how sorry they were. Mr. Sisson was telling them that the girls were there and he was to leave at 4:00 to take the girls to college.

Mrs. Anderson says it wasn't very long after that that she got up and left, with Mrs. Sisson, Mrs. Storey and another lady remaining.

3. Interview with Mrs. Bessie Lee Green:

Mrs. Bessie Lee Green lives at 820 Washington st. She said:

> I was sitting right over here (in her house) sewing. I said well sir, I believe somebody shot in Joe's house. After the first shot I went to the back door and heard the car, it went past "Ves"(Sylvester Gray) house I saw the shadow of the light when it went past Ves' house cause it was running fast, it really was running fast. Then I came to the front door and 'fore I could see that car was passing it had passed Benny's house and I couldn't see nothing but the tail light. Then I closed the front door behind me and stood on the porch and heard some more shooting and after that shooting I heard some the hollering. I still stood there, said, well sir, I believe somebody in that house done got shot. I heard people saying, "Well let's take her to the hospital, let's take her to the hospital".

4. Interview with Mr. and Mrs. Sylvester Gray:

Mr. Gray, "Ves", said he was in bed early Monday night, that he heard the shot, but didn't pay no attention to it, he was too near sleep.

Mrs. Gray said she heard the shots, heard a car past, make the turn from Center and go down the street, that she heard some shots right after the car passed, that she just didn't know what and who." She said she asked Mr. Gray what the noise was and he said it sounded like some shots.

They live at 825 Center st.

5. Mrs. Mary Buris, 813 Center st.

She said she heard the shots up there (pointing in the general direction of the Sisson's, that she did not hear any car, but that Brother Sally, on the corner (E. Reden and Center) told her he was on the porch when the car drove down center.

6. Mrs. Zisie Bell Hurley, 815 Center st.

Says she heard a shot back this way (Pointing East in the Direction of Mr. MacDonald's home).She heard a car pass, it seemed like it was speeding pretty fast.She heard some more shooting.

She says she had the ironing board out, and after she heard the car pass, and it seemed like it was speeding pretty fast, she went to the window and looked out, but didn't see the car.

7. Mr. Edward Sally, Mrs. Lucy Sally, 820 East Reden st., corner of Reden and Center, N.W.:

Mr. Sally had been sitting on the porch with his wife and another girl, Baby Ruth, (they were not sure of the name) who stays on Mr. Livingston's plantation. They had been sitting there a long time, they said, since just a little before dark.

Mrs. Sally said a car came down Center st. from the highway, driving kinda slow, and as it turned onto Reden st. she said, "Oh, that sure is a nice looking car there!" She said it was a real black car, and she didn't see but two people (she thinks they were men) in the car.

They said the car drove on down E. Reden st., kinda slow until it reached the end and turned around, still slow, to MacDonald's house, then they shot and speeded up and turned down Center st. (heading North). Mr. Sally says the drivers window was down and the driver had his arm laying out on the window when they turned and he saw that the driver was a white man. They said the car was going so fast they like to cover the ditch on this(West) side of Center st.

Mrs. Sally says that when they left, her husband said they done shot in Bro. Mac's house. She went to the back door and watched the car go on down Center st. and around on Byrom and on down (heading West) Then she heard more shots and hollering.

8. Mrs. Louise Taylor, East Reden, across from Mr. MacDonald:

She says she was sitting at the supper table when she heard the shots, three shots. She ran to the front door to see what it was, she seen this car getting out as fast as it could and turned down Center st. heading North. (Mrs. Taylor says she saw the car backing out, and there is some question whether it turned around, or backed out.) She said she heard some more shots a little later. She said a man came in from Morehead to question her, said he was the sheriff.

9. Mr. Guy McINtosh, 800 Ob st.
Was at home sitting up listening at the ball game, imagine it was around 8:15, 8:30. Heard what sounded like three or four shots. He stepped to the door there I thought it w as round about Bro. Tuckers of the church. When he stepped to the door he saw a car go out to the highway and take a right It was a black car, a 59 Chevy, no headlights on.

10 Statement from Mrs. Leona McClendon Concerning the Shootings in Ruleville Miss. on August 10, 1962

Monday evening, kinda early but dark, I was sitting on the front porch of my home at 801 E. Reden St., with Lula Jones.

We heard a shot. I told her it was a backfire(I knew it wasn't no backfire). She(Lula) already had a headach, and I didn't want to run her blood pressure up.

We heard one shot that sounded like it came from an easterly direction.

I sat there then.

From a westerly direction, we heard two more shots. We both jumped up and ran into the house.

No cars passed here(corner of Washington and Reden Sts.). I did hear a car running.

I came back out to see what I could hear. I went back in the house. I could hear jab, jab, jab(hollering), but I couldn't understand.

There were people jab jabbing, but I didn't know whether they was crying or what.

Mary Kilbert(second house down Washington), heard some shots. She asked me did I hear the shooting. I told her I did

11. Mrs. Mary Kilbert's Statement: 804 Washington Street
I was watching T.V. when I heard a shot that sounded like it was down this way.

I heard two seperate shots and the other was just like a car backfiring. After the first shot I heard no car drive by.
After the second, I heard a car running fast. When I heard it, it was going north on the next street.

If I had looked out of the window, I could have seen it; but I was laying down on the couch. The window was open over the couch.

I didn't hear anything else; and I didn't go outside.

12 Account of the Shooting at the home of Mr. Joe MacDonald in Ruleville Mississippi, August 10, 1962

Joe MacDonald:
Mr. MacDonald came in the house(909 Reden St.) at about 8:00pm,from sitting on the porch. He had been sitting there about 45 minutes. While sitting on the porch, he saw two cars. One was Mr. Nahmer's, who lives four houses down from Mr. MacDonald on the same side of the street; and the other was Mr. Walker's,who lives three houses down from Mr. MacDonald on the same side of the street.

After comming in the house, Mr. MacDonald sat beside Mrs. MacDonald as she was reading the bible in the bedroom. Around 9:30 pm, he lay down on the bed. Mrs. MacDonald stayed up for about 30 minutes longer. Afterwards she said,"I believe I'll go take a bath and I'll lay down". About the time she began to bath, a gunshot was heard.

Mr. MacDonald asked his wife,"was that a gunshot?"

His wife answered,"yeah I believe it was, I believe that gun shot in this house."

Mr. MacDonald called his wife and said,"look a here, here's a shot through the door here."

His wife came to the door and said,"shore is."

Mr. MacDonald said,"They shot through that glass; I heard it falling on the floor from that window."

His wife said,"sure did Joe, they shot out one of these window panes." Mrs. MacDonald went back in the bedroom saying,"lets pull this light out."

Mr. MacDonald got his gun(single barrel shotgun-12 gauge), and went to the bathroom. While in the bathroom, Mr. George Jordan came to the house looking for Mr. MacDonald. Mr. MacDonald thought it was the people who had done the shooting,returning to break in.

His wife said,"let's see who it is."

Mr. MacDonald said,"no let em break in. If they break in here, then I'll have a chance to take care of them."

Mrs. MacDonald recognized Mr. Jordan's voiceand said,"Joe this is George Jordan. Come on out and let him in."

Mr. Jordan said that he heard the gunshot and wanted to know if they had shot in Mr. MacDonald's house. He had seen the car, but didn't know what kind of car it was because it was going too fast. The car according to Mr. Jordan,went 1/2 a block west up Reden St., then turned north at the corner of Reden and Center St.

About 30 minutes after Mr. Jordan left,three policemen came. One was the night policeman(officer Milan);another the day policeman(officer Givens); and the last, an unidentifiable man who didn't where a uniform. This last man was over six feet tall and looked like he weighed about 230lbs.

This third man took the pellets from the shotgun out of the walls of the house.

Milan, the night policeman, asked Mr. MacDonald if he had a shotgun. he said,"Mr. Charles(the mayor) told me to come down and get it."

Mrs. MacDonald said,"let him have it Joe; let him have it".

Milan turned and went into the living room; saw the gun and grabbed it. He wanted to know what kind of shots Mr. MacDonald used for his gun.

Mr. MacDonald said,"you look in and see that for yourself".

Milan then wanted to know if Mr. MacDonald had another gun. He saw an air rifle an wanted to know what it was. Mr. MacDonald explained. Milan then began to search the house. He went into the wardrobe closet and other closets, and overturned the studio couch.

Mr. MacDonald asked Givens if milan had any papers,"search warrant to search my house that way.

Givens answered,"I don't know about that". Givens also said,"Joe we gonna get to the bottom of this thing and find out what we can do about it. You been listening to some strange folks anyhow, to cause this trouble to happen."

Mr. MacDonald and his wife went back to bed after the police had gone. Mrs. MacDonald got up several times, but didn't go out of the house.

13. Rev. Tucker's House - as yet not interviewed.

Report from Charles Cobb:

On Monda y, Sept. 10, 1962, Charles Beasley and myself (Charles Cobb), received word that gun shots had been fired through the home of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Sisson from Mrs. Mattie Price, 617 Weber st., The time was about 10:00 P.M.

Upon arrival at the Sisson home, we found that shots had been fired about 8:30 that evening. (Mrs Anderson told us) Pools of blood lay all over the living room floor. Mayor Dorrough, police from Ruleville, and other unidentifiable men were investigating.

Two college girls visiting the Sissons had been hurt, according to Mrs. Anderson. On e of the girls, Mary Lee Burkes, had been shot in the head and in the shoulder; and the other girl, Vivian Hilley, through the leg.

Immediately I went to the phone and tried to call Amzie Moore in Cleveland Mississippi. There was no answer. I then called the office of the Jackson Nonviolent Movement. I explained the situation to Bob Moses. At his suggestion, I went to the Norht Sunflower County Hospital to make inquiries as to the condition of the two girls.

~~Immediately-I-went-to-the-phone-and-tried-to-call-Amzie-Moore-in-Cleveland-M-~~

As I was taking notes in an address book, Mayor Dorrough asked what I was doing, and grabbed the address book. I told him that I was a friend of the Sissons. The Mayor said, "How come you're asking that lady who Mrs. Sisson is?" (I didn't know what he was talking about.) The mayor then said, "go on, get out of here!"

I began to leave, and the mayor grabbed me by the collar and said, "this way, you're going to jail".

The mayor then took me to the home of Mr and Mrs. Sisson and told me to get into a police car that was parked in front of the house. He told the police officer who drove the car, to take me to Joe McDonald's house and search for a shotgun (The theory among the local police seems to be that we who work on voter registration staged the shootings for publicity purposes.) Dorrough said, refering to me, "He looks like the type of person who would do this."

The police officer then drove me to jail and locked me up.

The next morning at about 10:00 A.M. I was ta ken to see mayor Dorrough. The mayor wanted basic information about myself. I told him that I worked on voter registration for SNCC, and that the reason I was taking notes was because I felt that the shootings had a definitedconnection with the voter registration project. The mayor agreed in a way, he said, "I think you all shot at those houses, you were disappointed a t the lack of violence here; and you need the publicity to get money from the North". The mayor then asked me how long I would be here. I told him that I would be here at least until Janua ry. I was then dismissed.

Key to diagram of Sisson's living room:

The shots; nine bullet holes in the lower screen of window number 7; four of these bullets penetrated the window fan; there were seven bullet holes over the West end of the couch, #2; One bullet was fired into the middle of window #6, didn't go into the room, but fell on the window sill. Mr. Sisson says it was taken by someone, he's not sure who.

Mrs. Sisson was sitting in chair #8, her right arm was grazed in at least two places.

Annie Laura Hilley, Mr. and Mrs. Sisson's daughter, was sitting in chair #5.

Mr. Sisson was sitting in chair #10.

Mary Lee was sitting on the couch #2, at the extreme West end; Vivian Hilley was sitting next to Ma ry.

The girls fell on the floor in front of the coffee table.

One light was on, on the table #5a. and the fan was not running, according to Mrs. Sisson.

Both bottom windows were up.

The distance from the windows #6, #7, to Byrom street is about ten feet.

The guard over the fa n was not noticeably bent or dissarranged.

Larry Foster 16 yrs.	Eddie Foster 8 yrs
Rosie Mae Foster 8 yrs.	Mossis Reed Foster 6 yrs.

Willaiam Henry Foster 17 yrs.

Mr. Foster works on Mr. Sidney Livingston's plantation, driving a tractor.

On Sept. 12, 1962, Mr. Foster came to Cleveland Miss., with Rev. Jeff Surney. He arrived at Mr. Amzie Moore's house at about 10:00 a.m.

When he left Mr. Moore's house, he backed out of Mr. Moore's driveway, and went straight north on Chrisman st. He was stopped by a policeman who said, "What are you doing backing out of that road. Drive your car down to city hall".

Mr. Foster said, "I don't have any money", when he faced the Judge.

He was told, "We're going to lock you up".

Mr. Foster said, "Call my boss man".

He was told, "We're not going to call him".

Mr. Foster said, "Give me a chance to go to some of my friends".

The Judge let him do this. Mr. Foster was fined 15 dollars.

That same day, Mr. Foster talked to the fellows who drive tracters on the Livingston place with him, about registering. The drivers were:

D.H. Henderson	James Davis	Jessie Gear
Nick Vaughn	Eddie James	Eli Kenna
Tom Gear	Horace Roby	Willie Bachen
Ed Johnson	W.F. Davis	Andrew Clark	Walter Clark

Mr. Foster told them to come to St. Mary's Chapel, on the Livingston place, "to learn how to register the fomm". He also said, "If you don't understand, someone will be out there to show you" All the men said they were ready.

The next day, Mr. Foster was talking with Mr. Joe MacDonald, at Mr. Joe MacDonald's home, about getting the boys "to get ready to go down and sign".

Mr. MacDonald suggested that Mr. Foster talk it over with Mr. Livingston, because he had heard that Mr. Livingston had said that it was O.K. for Negroes on his place to register.

At about 9:30 or 10:00 that same morning, Mr. Foster asked Mr. Livingston about registering. He was in Mr. Livingston's Ruleville office. Mr. Livingston said, "Hell no, whoever told you that story is a Godamn liar. If you or anyone else on this place try to register, I'll put all of your stuff on the road. Who told you this?" Foster said, "I just heard it; no harm in asking." Livingston then said, "You heard a damn lie".

Interview with Mr. George Jordan:

On Monday night, August 10, the night of the shooting, Mr. George Jordan was driving around the Negro sections of town, notifing people about picking cotton Tuesday.

At the home of Mrs. Zisie Bell Hurley, 815 Center St., Mr. Jordan was playing with the baby for 2 or 3 minutes when he heard something that sounded like a car trunk being slammed.

Mrs. Hurley said,"that sounds like a shot".

Mr. Jordan replied, "no it doesn't....yes it does sound like a shot". After the shot, he heard a car running fast.

Mr. Jordan then went to Sylvester Gray's house to notify him of cotton picking Tuesday.

After leaving Gray's house, Mr. Jordan saw Mrs. Irene Johnson and her son Tommy comming out of their home on Reden St. They needed a ride to the Sissons .

When he arrived at the Sisson home, Mr. Jordan pulled up behind the Mayor's car. The girls had already been taken to the hospital.

Inside the house, Mayor Dorrough was on the phone calling the High Sheriff: "shootin been goin on down here;and Bob Moses is the cause of all of it. I knowed something like this was going to happen. That's how come I been riding day and night."

Someone wanted to clean up the blood, but the mayor said, "let it stay until the F.B.I. comes; I don't know whether it's human blood or not".

Jordan then left the Sisson home(walking because his car was blocked by other cars), and went to the Taylor house and asked if they had heard the shots. They had, and Mr. Jordan then went across the street to Mr. Joe MacDonald's house(909 Reden). Complete statement in Mr. Joe MacDonald's report.

Mr. Jordan then walked back to the Sisson house to get his car. He drove the car to the home of Mr. Miles Foster and together they drove to Cleveland Miss. to look for Mr. Amzie Moore. Failing to find Mr. Moore, they drove back to Ruleville and spent the night at the Sisson's home.

On Tuesday night between 6:30and 7:00 in the evening the mayor told Mr. Jordan to "beat it" (Mr. Jordan was in the streets on his way to visit his sister)

"I just came to see my sister", said Jordan.

The mayor said again, "Beat it, get off the streets".

Interview with Dorothy Conrod, ~~830 North Division~~ 907 E. Reden st.

Mrs. Conrod was visiting on North Division st. on Monday evening and after hearing the shots she went out in the street and down to the Sisson's house. She said she arrived there about seven minutes after the shooting and stayed until 10:30 or 11:00 P.M.

The two girls were lying on the floor and Dorothy helped put them in the car along with Willine McIntyre, and Cindy (Celeste Davis' sister) In the room were, Dorothy Conrod and her aunt and mother, Mrs. Anderson, and George MacIntyre. She said they wanted to clean up the blood, but decided to let it stay until the law came. Mayor Darrough and Milan came, and the Mayor asked what happened and began to make phone calls. After this the mayor wanted to take care of Mrs. Sisson's arm.

Dorothy Conrod says she saw a bullet laying on the window sill of the window without the fan, but did not say anything about it to anyone . She says she saw Milan pick it up a little later, at least she saw Milan go to the window sill, and the bullet wasn't there after he left.

She says theystood around and talked the remainder of the time.

Interview with Mr. ~~Hungstony~~ Lungdor, on Center st., second house South East of E. Reden st.

He says he was watching T.V. when he heard a shot (thought it was a firecracker) then heard a car moving fast. He then got out to try and see the car but missed it. While trying to see the car he heard four or five shots from the direction of the Sisson's. "Told you it was firecracker Interview with Mr. Edward Taylor: lives across from Mr. MacDonald.

Mr. Taylor was home in the kitchen eating supper, and had gone to the bathroom, when he heard shots. By the time he came up front he could only see the tail end of the car as it turned the corner and sped down Center st. (Headed North)

He said the car was moving fast for in a few minutes he heard more shots at Mr. Sisson's house.

He said Mr. Sally came down and asked if anyone got shot down here. Mr. Taylor said no, but also said he has not been ~~[illegible]~~ into Mr. MacDonald's house to see about what happened and what actual damage was inflicted.

In the Early morning hours Vandals Struck at the Fourth Street Drug Store in Clarksdale, Miss. knocking out the plate glass front windowa of the Fourth Street Drug Store. The Fourth Street Drug Store is operated by Aaron E Henry, President of the Miss. State NAACP and Also President of the Miss. Council of Federated Organizations the organization currently sponsoring the Registration to Vote Campaign for Negroes thur out the State of Mississippi. The two windows knocked out and glass broken by the vandals were both decorated with NAACP and Registration to vote posters. One window contained announcements and copies of the NAACP history written by Langston Hughes, entitl ed "Fight for Freedom, and "The NAACP Does the Job". the other window contained Posters saying, "Push Me Mister Register and Vote" and "We are too young to Register, What is your Excuse". Prior to this incident Henry reports difficulty with the Clarksdale Police on Saturday Afternoon Sept 15. over the arrest of a Fountain Wroker employed in the Fourth Street Drug Store after he had carried copies of the NAACP Weekly newssheet (Included) to the Secretary of the Branch. After calling upon County Authorities and the Federal Bureau of Investigation to investigate the matter, Henry hung another sign in the broken windows saying,"This Coward Act will not hinder our march to Freedon, Racial hatred is not the way". Scores of Negroes and Whites passed by the store during the day to observe the damage and express their disgust with such an act.

Dear Friends:

The shadow of integration and Negro policical domination now looms over Mississippi in general and Coahoma County in particular. We are going to be harassed from every possible angle during the next several years by professional agitators who are sent in for that purpose.

Clarksdale has the highest percentage of Negro voters, approximately 26% of any city in Mississippi with the exception of Mound Bayou. In Coahoma County we have 31,440 Negroes and only 14,630 white people.

CORE, the NAACP, and other related organizations have placed thousands of dollars at the disposal of these agitators for the purpose of financing a Negro voter registration drive in THIS COUNTY. Over 100 Negroes have applied for registration in Coahoma County during the last month! The law suit recently filed by the U. S. Attorney General against the State of Mississippi, our Circuit Clerk and other public officials presents a "clear and present" danger to every white citizen of this State, threatening the very foundation of our economic and social survival. We have every indication that the Communist Party of the United States is actively supporting these measures, and refer your attention to the Carl Braden report fully published in the Clarksdale Press Register of August 31st. The enclosed material gives you an unqualified picture of the magnitude of the problems we face.

We feel that the answer is a strong White organization which can anticipate and counteract the moves by these professional trouble makers. If you as an individual have not contributed of your time, ingenuity and financial support we now appeal to you to do your part in helping your local organization in this important struggle.

THE TIME TO ACT IS NOW, NOT TOMORROW. Contact your local Council at P.O. Box 431, Clarksdale, Mississippi.

Sincerely

Re: Williams Chapel Church, Ruleville, Mississippi

Dear Bob:

This will acknowledge receipt of the letter dated September 3, 1962, from C. M. Dorrough, Mayor of Ruleville, Mississippi, to Williams Chapel Missionary Baptist Church, regarding the cancellation of the tax exemption and free water privileges for the church, together with the envelope in which it was delivered.

We have made photocopies of both exhibits, and we are returning the originals and a copy of each to you herein. I would suggest that you return the original and the envelope to the person to whom it was delivered by the Mayor, and that you suggest that that person preserve these papers for possible future use. The copies are for your file.

I think you should suggest to the church officials that they write a letter of protest to the Mayor regarding his letter and that they ask for a hearing on the matter of tax exemption and free water privileges. Before doing so, however, the church should get some legal information as to the right of the Mayor or City Council of Ruleville to cancel a tax exemption. I am of the opinion that this is a matter which can be handled only by the county tax assessor or some similar county official, and that the Mayor or City Council of Ruleville would have no such legal authority. The matter of free water privileges is an entirely different matter, and is something which the city could control, but not in a discriminatory manner.

Very truly yours,

A Class on the Constitution

By ART BUCHWALD

Washington.

ONE CAN'T help wondering what they're teaching down at "Ole Miss" during all the trouble there. We can only speculate as to what is going on in the classrooms.

How, for example, do they teach the United States constitution? Maybe something like this:

The professor speaks. "Now, class, today we're going to discuss the American Constitution, a very unique document, which, while it has nothing to do with us, should be studied anyway to show how other people govern themselves."

BELIEVE IN IT?

A student stands up. "Sir, do the people of the United States really believe in the Constitution?"

"Now, let's not be too harsh on them. It is a primitive document with many flaws in it, but there are also some good things in it, and even we in Mississippi have taken some things from the Americna Constitution to govern ourselves. For example, there is the freedom of speech amendment. Now, this is a very good thing. We also believe in freedom of speech and we have never stopped anyone in Mississippi from yelling 'Help!' if he so desired.

"Freedom of religion is another thing we've taken from the U.S. Constitution. We not only encourage them to pray—we make them.

"The Second Amendment of the U.S. constitution also has some merit—the right to keep and bear arms. As our greatest constitutional expert, Maj.-Gen. Edwin A. Walker, has pointed out, every citizen has the right to bear arms against the United States.

A student raises his hand. "Do we go along with the Sixth Amendment which provides the right to a speedy trial?"

"Yes, we do," the professor replies. "If anyone in Mississippi whom we don't like tries to register to vote, he is entitled to a speedy trial."

A student raises his hand. "The Americans have an amendment which says that excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted. Is this a good thing?"

WHO'S TO SAY?

"Well, that's what they believe in and who is to say under their system whether it's wrong or right? You must understand that what is constitutional in one part of the country doesn't necessarily make it constitutional in another. Otherwise our governor would be in court all the time."

A student stands. "Amendment Fifteen says the right of citizens to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any state on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. How are we to take this amendment?"

The professor says, "I didn't understand the question."

The student starts to ask the question again and the professor pushes a button on his desk. Two state highway patrolmen come into the classroom and drag the student out.

As the class settles down, the professor says, "If there is anything I hate worse than a Negro, it's a Constitution-lover."

SUMMARY REPORT TO THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS
ON THE AMERICAN FRIENDS SERVICE COMMITTEE
MISSION TO MISSISSIPPI -- October 3-5, 1962

BACKGROUND. The first proposal for a "Mission to Mississippi" came in late September when religious and agency leadership in the South suggested to Community Relations Division staff that a "Quaker Mission" should witness to another point of view on the role of Christian leadership in such a crisis. The rioting had not yet broken out at Oxford; the focus of these early proposals was on a visit to Governor Barnett, primarily to discuss another point of view, and hopefully also to see if we could appeal to the Governor to get off "collision course" with the Federal government and with the inevitable process of change.

Community Relations staff explored the idea with a variety of people in a position to give opinions on the wisdom of such a mission. There was consultation with the South Central Regional Office and recommendations which resulted from a special meeting of the Community Relations Division Executive Committee on Friday, September 28, reflected the advice of committee and staff there. The Division Executive Committee made these recommendations: 1) The AFSC should relate itself to the Mississippi crisis, most probably through a mission of concerned Friends. 2) These Friends should meet at Quaker House in Atlanta to consider what the manner of their speaking to the Mississippi situation should be. 3) The situation was so urgent that the AFSC should act as promptly as possible.

On Monday, October 1, the Executive Committee of the Board of Directors considered this proposal. During the weekend which intervened, the Oxford rioting broke out and the focus of the Mission became broader. The Board Executive Committee approved the Mission and asked staff to search out those Friends who might have a concern and the necessary qualifications for it. (Mission personnel on attached sheet).

The Mission and supporting AFSC staff and committee membership met in Atlanta on Wednesday, October 3. The considerations there were divided into two parts, the first being a meeting with knowledgeable southern leadership to help the group understand the situation better. Next the AFSC group considered its role in relation to the Mississippi crisis. It was during this time that the statement of purpose (attached) was developed and the Mission was divided into its Oxford and Jackson groups. Following the meetings in Atlanta, Tartt Bell, Burns Chalmers and Frank Loescher flew to Jackson and Mary Moss Cuthbertson, Lewis Hoskins and Clarence Yarrow flew to Memphis. From there they drove to Oxford.

THE MISSION. The Mission, both teams, in their busy two days saw a total of more than three dozen people in the general categories of educational, religious, business and political leadership. They sought a clearer understanding of the situation; they explored what constructive steps could now be taken to secure peacefully the rights of all American citizens and to bring about necessary reconciliation; the group at Oxford, in particular, sought to share its concern for the welfare of the university as a center of learning and search for truth. Both groups sought to see if here, as they have in so many places, new and creative opportunities could come out of tragedy.

Jackson. As the Jackson group left Atlanta it was far from certain that they would be able to reach the Governor and yet it seemed the appropriate place to begin. Ingenuity and patience enabled them to see the Governor. Though in one sense this might not be considered the most "productive" of the visits, it is obviously one of unusual interest.

Of the setting, the Mission report says: "The Office had an informal air. A radio carrying the World Series game was on. Magazines and a newspaper (with a July date) were on the table. The Governor's secretary talked briefly with us about segregation as the right way and the problems of integration in Washington, D.C...."

Once in the Governor's office, Frank Loescher stated the group's purpose in coming and proceeded to make a central point. He said to Governor Barnett that "we came to urge him to use his leadership to help his people prepare to accept the changes that are required of them."

The Mission reported the Governor's response, as follows: "Up to this point the Governor had been listening politely and with patience. With the word 'change' he spoke for the first time, still without excitement. He said that by 'change' you mean 'mongrelization' and proceeded to give us a lengthy discourse on his view of history. Overly simplified it is that one race must always be in charge and he spoke of white dominance in Europe, India and Egypt...as being high points in human history. He dwelt particularly on the history of Egypt.... Governor Barnett related this view of history to the Mississippi situation by saying that he would be a "sluggard" if he did not use his power and responsibility of office to maintain whites in the ascendancy.... asserted that God made us into separate races and intends us to be that way. /At this point a trivial but symbolic incident took place. His aide brushed against the American flag in passing and it fell practically to the floor -- as if in mute protest at this kind of talk./ He said that he was receiving 1600 telegrams a day in favor of his position and that people throughout the country were supporting his leadership...

"It was apparent that his position was unchanged and that we had only succeeded in setting before him some aspects of another point of view in an attempt to have him exert his leadership in an entirely different way. We had the feeling that he is a captive, that it is hard to get through to the real man. From our point of view he is not thinking in human terms or in Christian terms but rather in static, outmoded and political terms. And yet he did see the Quakers, when most people doubted that he would, and there were glimmers of understanding although basically no agreement. Representing the political sector he is a stone wall to the values we hold most dear."

The small team then divided itself in various ways to talk with religious and business leadership and with leadership which could give them an insight into the point of view of the out-and-out segregationist. From these conversations, which numbered a dozen or more, the following observations can be made.

Business Leadership. On October 2 approximately 130 businessmen met in Jackson and signed a public statement in which they first reaffirmed that the Supreme Court decision of 1954 was morally and legally wrong but went on to urge all local public officials "to advocate forthrightly and immediately the maintenance of law and order." This modest statement was the first public rebuff for the Governor and the White Citizens Council leadership to which he listens most attentively.

The Jackson Mission visited some of the business leadership involved in this statement. On one hand, the question was raised as to whether among those issuing the statement there was a real commitment to law and order, with the suggestion made instead that the motive was to make certain that things were quiet in Jackson and that the University did not lose its accreditation.

Other business leaders asserted that 90% of the business community supported the statement and that business felt encouraged and was made more comfortable by the statement, though there had been negative reaction to it by both political figures and the White Citizens Council.

The Mission discovered that over the past two years business leaders had operated in an increasingly repressive atmosphere. For example, a card had been circulated among some business leaders reading "I hereby authorize my bank to honor any check drawn to my account by the Citizens Council of Jackson for the payment of my dues or any other assessment and I take all responsibility for abuse of this privilege."

Religious Leadership. Conversations with religious leadership found both those who saw in the new crisis an opportunity to break through the unhealthy silence which had prevailed as well as those who seemed immovable. None, however, had gone unchallenged by the crisis.

One minister struck a hopeful note, saying that "out of the tragedy...had come a chance to break through the crust and talk about the realities of the situation and what needed to be done as Christians and as citizens." The incident "required communication", he and others felt.

Conversations were held with the Episcopal Diocesan leadership, which had commended, through its Executive Committee of Laymen and Clergy, the action of businessmen who had called on political leadership to restore law and order. (It is important to note that conversations with other religious and educational leaders indicated that the statement by the businessmen, with all its limitations, had as a matter of fact provided the freedom for the other two groups to speak up to the degree that they did.)

On the other extreme was a conversation with a religious leader close to the sources of political power. During this long and difficult conversation the minister avoided coming to grips with any question on which the Mission sought to elicit his position.

Said the report: "...it was as if he could not bring himself to defend his position theologically in the presence of concerned fellow Christians who represented the position of Friends on this question. By his silence in the pulpit he apparently can give consent to [what is being done] in the name of the Christian position, supported by the Bible, but he could not actively defend his position with us. ... This man was continuing to maintain an institutional church, preach Sunday by Sunday to large congregations, ...maintain wide civic contacts including leaders in the Citizens Council as well as in the political sphere and at the same time keep sufficient peace with his conscience to tacitly condone in the name of Christ what was going on. There was no question but that his extreme tension reflected both in his manner and in his countenance was the price of this precarious peace."

This was an extremely exacting interview but at the same time Mission members reported: "We felt that some real contact on a deeper level had taken place despite our failure to communicate on the central issue."

Segregationist Leadership. During the course of their visits in Jackson the Mission was eager to gain some insight through interviews into the conflicting advices which might be guiding the Governor from such sources as the State Sovereignty Commission on the one hand and the White Citizens Council on the other. At the moment White Citizens Council leadership is obviously the Governor's chief advisor. The State Sovereignty Committee leadership, on the other hand, having come out in the open last summer with some rather sharp criticism of some of the tactics of the White Citizens Council, has fallen from grace.

Oxford. All reports from the Oxford group began with a setting of the scene. One Mission member reports that "...there was an atmosphere of almost unnatural calm, with soldiers stationed at frequent intervals on the street and regular patrols of soldiers in jeeps riding around the town. It created the feeling of an occupied city."

The overflowing city of Oxford was being "viewed by the world." This was made clear early to the Mission as they found, just ahead of them in one of the endless lines of people waiting to use one of Oxford's few public phones, a Japanese newspaperman who sought to phone his story on events in Oxford directly to Tokyo. Later came a saddening interview with a student editor of the college paper who had been shocked at the death of the French correspondent in the riot, had proposed a scholarship fund in his memory, and had just heard from a representative of the French government that it could not be allied with segregation in such a way.

The group saw nearly two dozen people in their limited time. General themes from their visits on the University campus were 1) the evidence of shock they found in the faculty and religious leadership and 2) the deep personal need they found among people to talk to someone who wanted to listen and who cared profoundly for them in their difficult situation.

In the first visits with the administration, which began with the Chancellor and his assistant, a former assistant director of the FBI in Washington, they found quickly stated: a respect for Friends, a desire to return to normalcy, a statement of support for law and order and the Constitution. The group found no major restrictions on their visits on the campus.

They did see clear evidences of a tight control over the functioning of the university. For example, the system through which a speaker at the university is screened efficiently sifts out any carriers of ideas which might challenge the status quo. Interviews began in some key places with a firm statement of "why things had to be as they were," with little openness to other ideas.

From their total range of interviews, the Mission gained an understanding of the political background against which those concerned that the University of Mississippi be a university, with all that this should mean in the way of freedom of inquiry, had had to work for many years.

A picture emerged of the consolidation of power by the White Citizens Council over the last eight years. Through economic pressures it had exerted control over businessmen. It then consolidated its control over religious leadership. Some selected students enter the University of Mississippi each year under scholarships from the White Citizens Council. There seems little doubt that many are assigned the job of reporting back to their sponsors any statements of the faculty challenging the status quo. There is little doubt that some of these students were among the instigators of the rioting.

There has always been an unusually interfering relationship between the legislature and the University of Mississippi. More than most legislatures it has used the weapon of controlling the purse strings of the university to enforce its views on the university and its 13-member Board of Trustees. Behind this legislature are the White Citizens Councils, claiming now 100,000 members in the state and led by an avowed white supremist, the State Sovereignty Commission which helps finance the Council's program of propaganda and coercion and, ultimately, the Governor himself who had vowed to go to jail rather than see "Ole Miss" integrated.

The university's weapons with which to fight back against this kind of pressure are small. Mission members found in some cases that "there was not much we could do besides share our dismay and discouragement." Faculty members who have spent their lives instructing the youth of Mississippi in such vital subjects as political science and law have had a serious toll taken of their spirit by the tragedy of the past month. Faculty members discussed with the Mission the question of whether or not the university could become, in fact, a real university. Some felt that the chances were slim. This remark is made against a history of a university which not many years ago lost 50 members--a quarter of the staff--over issues of academic freedom.

In analyzing the total scene which may have contributed to getting the university and the state where they are today, some felt that the lack of strong executive leadership at the federal government level after the Supreme Court decisions of 1954 had created a vacuum into which reactionary forces had rushed. Encouraged by silence on the national scene to believe that defiance was in order and might win, irresponsible leadership took the steps which inevitably led to ultimate defiance by Governor Barnett.

The Mission had the opportunity to talk with some of the professors who signed a statement issued by the University of Mississippi Chapter of the American Association of University Professors. In this statement, the professors declared their belief that the attempt of men in prominent places to place all of the blame for the riot on the U.S. marshalls was "not only unfair and reprehensible but...almost completely false," and their belief in the "use of the courts and the ballot boxes to state their convictions."

The Mission spent considerable time with the Episcopal ministers who had acted with courage and personal risk on the night of the violent outbreak on the campus as they sought to direct students away from the scene of violence. They were torn by their inability to be effective. With these men the Mission had a most provocative and sobering discussion concerning "non-violence." Mission members report the soul-searching involved in considering their own dependence on and approval of the presence and actions of the federal marshalls and federal troops.

Conversations with student leadership were particularly challenging to the Mission. Conclusions would be these: 1) the point of agreement was that law and order must be preserved and obedience to Federal court order observed; 2) they were not glad that James Meredith was on campus and when questioned said that 99.7 percent of the student body agreed with them; 3) they expected James Meredith to stay on campus but felt that he would have to have a marshall guard to maintain both his safety and law and order; 4) they admitted there were some hotheads among the students but felt they were a minority; 5) students were gravely concerned about maintaining the accreditation of the university; 6) they had never heard of the Service Committee and seemed curious as to why the Mission had come. Mission members reported that this gave a chance for a brief conversation about relating to some activities beyond their campus.

The Mission reports, "Their provincialism was almost 100 percent imperturbable even in the face of the tragic events which had taken place on the campus just three or four days previous to that. We found no opening for discussion of acceptance of James Meredith as a person with rights and dignity. There was no mood to consider reconciliation or talk about any new base for relations on campus other than the necessity to observe law and order."

Students as a whole were even more cautious than the administration in saying anything, even off-the-record, about the Governor's policies. They stated that it was the settled policy of the student government not to make any expressions on issues in the state and to confine themselves only to campus affairs. They felt this was "a wise and natural restriction since students had no business sounding off on state issues and could only get themselves and the university into trouble."

GENERAL CONCLUSIONS FROM OXFORD. 1) What happened in Oxford on Sunday, September 30, appeared to our Mission to have been a planned movement which included leaders on the campus, in government, business, church -- all under the leadership of the White Citizens Council; 2) Discipline for the leaders in the riot will continue to be a major problem. For while it might be more helpful to the university to be able to take care of its own disciplinary problems (the point of view of federal representatives at the time the Mission was on the campus), the problems of discipline of those who have a proven link with the White Citizens Council may be more of a challenge than should be taken on by a school judiciary committee; 3) James Meredith's life continues in jeopardy, particularly as long as ringleaders in the planned rebellion remain on campus; 4) The superficial calm may prove to be a deceptive mask; 5) Resistance to integration is still very much alive. 6) There is a weak, vacillating and fearful administrative leadership at the university which is buffeted by pressures external and internal and conditioned by a traditional pattern of compromise. 7) It is a question as to whether the university can survive as a truly independent educational institution. It is well to remember that the university and its basic function of freedom of inquiry is a first casualty in a fascist state.

IDEAS FOR FOLLOW-UP FROM OXFORD AND JACKSON: 1) contact with concerned religious leadership. 2) support for businessmen who see this as an opportunity for communication. 3) support for those in the academic community who see the need for an institution free of political controls and fear. 4) reaching students, in a variety of ways, to help them see beyond their present closed environment. 5) deepening our understanding of the sources of opposition to inevitable change and of the potential for violence in tightly controlled and isolated situations. 6) learning from this situation and looking ahead to difficulties which can be anticipated in other "hard core" areas still to face basic challenges of change.

Summary Report on AFSC Mission to Mississippi

STATEMENT OF PURPOSE:

We are members of the Religious Society of Friends (Quakers), visiting in Mississippi for the American Friends Service Committee. We are concerned for all people whose lives have been affected by the divisiveness which surrounds recent events at the University of Mississippi. We seek a clearer understanding of the situation.

While such Quaker activities as relief and rehabilitation in the wake of wars are best known, it is also in the tradition of the American Friends Service Committee to work in areas of tension in various parts of the United States. There is a basic unity in all our efforts, whether they be directed to saving lives, or changing them, or refusing to be party to their destruction. We seek to show the relevance of the life and teaching of Jesus to present day problems. We work for a world society that is nonviolently ordered and in which men are neither debased nor exploited for any reason. We work for it, because we think it is the kind of world in which God intends us to live.

We recognize that all Americans have a responsibility to help in repairing the damage from the tragedy that has occurred at Oxford. Our experience tells us that out of tragedy may come new opportunities. Our hope is that constructive steps can now be taken to secure peacefully the rights of all American citizens and to bring about the reconciliation necessary for the spiritual well-being of the nation.

Vote Troops Urged For Mississippi

atta. Guar. 11-12-62 p. 9

CLEVELAND, Nov. 12 (AP)—The use of government troops in Mississippi to protect Negroes trying to register as voters is being sought by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the association's board chairman said here Sunday.

Bishop Stephen G. Spottswood of the 4th Episcopal District of the AME Zion Church said in an interview that the NAACP board at its monthly meeting in New York this week will discuss the protection of registrants and organizers of the voter registration drive among Mississsippi Negroes.

BISHOP Spottswood said the request for federal troops in various parts of Mississippi to avert what he called violent interference with voters registration is not the first such request.

"We first approached the administration just before the Cuban crisis," he said. "Now that the Cuban situation is relaxing, we again think troops should be sent not just to Jackson, but anywhere in the state where voters have been threatened with repressions."

Threats of reprisals have been received by several NAACP registration workers and Negro voters are being terrorized, the bishop said.

The bishop said the NAACP would continue its attacks on "discrimination in the labor movement," but said he doubted this would disrupt the group's "harmonious relations" with labor.

Court Asked To Imprison Mississippian

New Orleans, Nov. 8 (AP).—The Justice Department has asked the United States Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals here to jail Mississippi voter Registrar Theron Lynd for 45 days for contempt of a court order barring discrimination in voter registrations.

The Justice Department also asked the court to order Lynd to register 43 Negroes who "were illegally denied registration," in Forrest County, Miss., or face the prospect of continuing imprisonment.

Earier this year, the Justice Department charged that Lynd discriminated against Negro applicants for voter registration in violation of the Civil Rights Act. The Appeals Court issued an injunction ordering him to cease discrimination.

The Justice Department later brought contempt action, contending Lynd was continuing discriminatory practices. Lynd has denied the charge.

A three-judge panel of the Appeals Court held a hearing in Hattiesburg, seat of Forrest County, last September. At the end of the hearing, the judges asked attorneys for both sides to submit briefs. The Justice Department proposal was in its brief, which was filed yesterday. 3 - Miss Reader

MISSISSIPPI VOTER REGISTRATION DRIVE BRINGS SHARECROPPER EVICTIONS

Attempted voter registration by 36 Negroes at Indianola, Mississippi, has touched off a new wave of violence and economic reprisals against sharecroppers and farm workers in the Delta area. Two girls were wounded when shots were fired into their home in Ruleville, at least three sharecropper families have been evicted, five workers have lost their jobs, and independent farmers are facing loss of private credit, according to a report received here by the National Sharecroppers Fund. One evicted farm worker, Boss Foster, had worked on the same plantation for 30 years.

"This new effort to thwart the right to vote emphasizes the need for would-be Negro voters to be able to earn a living near their homes without being dependent upon entrenched local business and plantation interests," NSF executive secretary Fay Bennett said today. "The events in the Mississippi Delta lend new urgency to the National Sharecroppers Fund rural conference at Franklinton Center, Bricks, North Carolina, on November 14-16, which will discuss ways to bring government aid and training programs to backward rural areas of the South."

The conference will bring together sharecroppers and small farmers from many parts of the South to discuss with government officials ways in which federal aid projects may be developed locally. Participants will also hear a report on a National Sharecroppers Fund pilot project in Fayette County, Tennessee, which was developed to aid 700 Negro sharecroppers who were evicted in Fayette and Haywood Counties in January, 1961, after attempting to register to vote. The project is expected to result in 200 full-time jobs in a new industrial plant, which will be brought to the area by a local bi-racial committee cooperating with the federal Area Redevelopment Administration.

In discussing the new threats against voter registrants, Robert Moses, Field Secretary of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee and leader of the voter registration drive in Mississippi, reported that plantation owners had given notice to their sharecroppers that mass evictions would follow if any sharecropper attempted to register. Federal government attorneys from the Civil Rights Division of the Justice Department are conducting investigations to determine whether court injunctions, similar to those obtained in the two Tennessee counties, should be requested to halt the evictions. But Mr. Moses stated that he expects more evictions as the registration drive gains momentum.

Pointing to the urgent need for this conference, the National Sharecroppers Fund reported that technological and social changes have forced four million rural Southerners out of farming in the past decade alone. Most of them lack the education and skills to better their lives elsewhere, a problem that is aggravated by the disappearance of many unskilled and semi-skilled jobs and widespread urban unemployment. This has caused particularly severe hardships for many of the 1.5 million Negroes who have migrated to northern industrial cities.

Speakers at the National Sharecroppers Fund conference will include John A. Baker, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture; James M. Dabbs, Chairman of the Southern Regional Council; and Dr. Hollis F. Price, President of LeMoyne College in Memphis.

Additional information is available from the National Sharecroppers Fund, 112 East 19 Street, New York 3, New York.

(The full program of the conference is enclosed.)

Two states which lag behind in rights also lag in voting

WASHINGTON (ANP) — The two southern states into which federal troops have had to be sent to enforce federal school desegregation orders are, by coincidence, the same two states in which voter participation has been the lowest in the nation.

Fewer of the citizens eligible to vote cast ballots did so in the last two elections for congress in Arkansas and Mississippi.

The two states have achieved notoriety because of their resistence to admitting colored pupils to Central High school in Little Rock and to the University of Mississippi in Oxford.

THE STATE with the highest percentage of eligible voters casting ballots is Connecticut where two colored persons were opposing candidates for state treasurer in last week's election.

In Arkansas, 6.7 per cent of the potential voters cast ballots in the elections in 1960 and 5.9 per cent voted in 1958.

In Mississippi, 22 per cent voted in 1960 and 5.2 per cent in 1958.

The United States as a whole lags far behind the other democracies in the proportion of eligible voters who actually go to the polls.

This is particularly true of midterm elections, such as the one last week, when the vote falls behind that cast in Presidential years.

IN 1958, in the last midterm election, 43.5 per cent of the eligible voters actually voted. In 1954, it was 42.5 per cent and in 1950, it was 41.6 per cent.

There are several reasons in United States law and custom for the relatively low voter turnout.

In the South, especially colored persons find it difficult to vote because of the poll tax, literacy tests other legal devices and intimidation used to discriminate against them.

In Mississippi, for example 42.3 per cent of the population is colored but very few vote.

IN SOUTHERN one - party areas, voting is often heavier in the primaries than in the general elections.

The mobility of the population is another reason for non-voting. Some states have residence requirements of up to two years. The Census Bureau estimates that 35,500-000 people, or 20 per cent of the population in March 1961, moved at least once the previous year.

Other factors that lower participation in elections include bars to the insane, the imprisoned and members of the armed forces who can vote by mail only with considerable difficulty.

Dear Leslie:

My main report to you is that this morning I had a long talk with Jim Meredith and I am now convinced, even more than I was at the meeting, that he has the brains and the will to complete his school work here without serious trouble. He has been in a little trouble but most of the reports of his scholastic failure have been the result of poor reporting and harassing tactics.

I enjoyed my visit with you very much. Tuesday morning I went out to Emory to talk to a class or two and to renew acquaintanceship there.

If you have any sort of report on difficulties in voter registration in Mississippi, I would like to have it very much. For my next year's address at the Southern Historical Association meeting, I am going to review the efforts at thought control in Mississippi and I need information regarding various pressure tactics, etc. As a matter of fact, I would appreciate being put on your mailing list.

Enclosed is my statement of expenses for the trip to Atlanta.

Dear Jim:

The check for your expenses is enclosed.

You did a tremendous job and were altogether the star of the meeting.

Thank you for your letter. I was glad to get the reassuring note about Meredith.

The next issue of New South will have something in about voter registration difficulties in Mississippi, and we shall send it to you. Enclosed is an older New South which also had a piece. Had you been at the meeting Monday afternoon you would have heard Wiley Branton giving a lurid description of some events out there which will be covered in less detail in the forthcoming New South. I am passing your letter on to Wiley with the request that he write to you further if he has anything to send off.

I am putting you on our mailing list as of now and entering also a one year gift subscription for New South.

With every good wish,

Sincerely yours,

Operation Freedom Expands Into Mississippi Delta

NEWS from Operation Freedom
932 Dayton Street
Cincinnati 14, Ohio
Phone: 771-6485

Dec. 5, 1962

CINCINNATI, Ohio——Operation Freedom is extending its work into the Delta Area of Mississippi, where it is assisting persons harassed for registering to vote.

The board of Operation Freedom voted to expand into Mississippi after receiving reports of widespread and bitter hardship resulting from the drive to register Negroes to vote in that state.

The Rev. Clarence T. R. Nelson, Detroit, board chairman, reported that thousands of persons have been cut off from surplus food. Others have been driven off the land, denied credit, shot at, and arrested on trumped-up charges, he said.

For two years Operation Freedom has been assisting farmers and others subjected to similar harassment for registering to vote in Fayette and Haywood counties in West Tennessee. Cash grants and loans helped to save many families from being driven off the land.

The Delta region of Mississippi adjoins one of the Tennessee counties. It includes some of the richest farming land in the world, producing fine cotton in great quantities.

The Delta is not the same as the delta of the Mississippi River. It is an alluvial plain formed by the wandering of the Mississippi as it flowed south from Memphis, Tenn., to Vicksburg, Miss., a distance of roughly 200 miles.

The area includes 18 counties in which Negroes constitute up to 80 per cent of the population. Oxford, scene of the riots at the University of Mississippi, lies on the eastern edge of the Delta. The vast plantation of U. S. Senator James O. Eastland is in the heart of the Delta, south of Ruleville in Sunflower County.

"Ruleville is one of the places where Negro citizens have been wounded by gunfire, jailed, and run off the land for registering to vote or for encouraging others to vote," Operation Freedom reported. "Negro business houses have been closed on various pretexts.

"Members of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC), who have led the registration drive in the Delta, have been arrested and shot at. SNCC workers in Greenwood, LeFlore County, narrowly escaped being lynched."

LeFlore County is where the body of Emmett Till, 14-year-old Negro boy, was found in the Tallahatchie River after he was brutally murdered in 1955. Two white men later admitted killing him but were freed by a jury. 22,000 Negroes in this county alone have, in recent action, been cut off from receiving surplus foods.

Operation Freedom sent a committee of three into the area to investigate reports of hardship. This committee was headed by the Rev. L. Richard Hudson, Cincinnati, secretary of Operation Freedom. He took along enough money to pay off the mortgage of a man who had lost his job for getting people registered to vote.

The committee found that the situation in the Delta is desperate, but that few people outside the area are aware of it. Mississippi newspapers have not reported the atrocities against Negroes, with the result that news services have not sent the information to other news media.

Operation Freedom plans a drive to raise funds for relief work in the Delta. Working with Operation Freedom will be Bob Moses, Amzie Moore, Aaron Henry and others who have been active in the voter registration movement in the Delta.

Treasurer of Operation Freedom is the Rev. Maurice F. McCrackin, 932 Dayton Street, Cincinnati 14, Ohio. He said that money will be channeled into the Delta through committees in various counties there.

Judge Says Two Lied In Vote Case

Min. Rent. 12-29-62

Meridian, Miss., Dec. 28 (AP).—Federal District Judge Harold Cox today promised to hold two Negroes on perjury charges unless the Justice Department showed their testimony in a voter suit here was true.

Judge Harold Cox said he thought Rev. W. G. Goff, a Methodist minister, and Andrew Kendrick "were lying."

He halted the voter suit hearing after Clarke County Circuit Clerk A. L. Ramsey, the voter registrar, testified to facts contrary to those of the Negroes.

Judge Cox said he would hold Mr. Goff and Kendrick to the Grand Jury on a charge of perjury and set the bond at $3,000 each unless the Justice Department could convince him otherwise.

"I want you to know you can't come into this court and swear to something that isn't true and get away with it," Cox said. "I simply will not tolerate perjury."

The federal government charges that Ramsey discriminated against Negroes attempting to register to vote.

Ramsey denied the charges.

Mississippi Police Hold 2 Students

ARK. GAZETTE 12-29-62 p. 5A.

Min. Rent.

Clarksdale, Miss., Dec. 28 (AP).—City police held two Michigan State University students today on charges of possessing barbituates. The students said they were carrying food, clothing and drugs to destitute Negroes in rural areas.

Officers arrested the students when they came upon them sleeping in a station wagon early yesterday.

Police identified them as Benjamin J. Taylor, 21, of Camden, N. Y., and Ivanhoe Donaldson, 21, of New York.

The students were parked in front of a drug store operated by Aaron Henry, president of the Mississippi chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Henry said the NAACP and other organizations were sponsoring the program to bring emergency supplies to Negro farm families left destitute in the winter months.

They Say...

The Kennedys Threaten American Civil Rights

JOHN C. SATTERFIELD
Past President, American Bar Association

Every citizen from the smallest to the greatest must recognize that our nation of liberty under the law and freedom of speech and action is a nation in which men may honestly differ and yet respect each other. Unity in diversity will never be attained until we learn to disagree without being disagreeable, that liberty under the law means the freedom of dissent, that might does not make right and that those with whom we disagree absolutely may nevertheless be honest, law-abiding and patriotic American citizens.

In the face of intense provocation by the Attorney General of the United States, I have remained silent concerning the Meredith case. This is for the reason that I am one of the attorneys representing the State of Mississippi, the Governor and other defendants in the Meredith case, which is still pending as to them in the Court of Appeals of the Fifth Circuit. The Attorney General of the United States is also one of the attorneys in that case, acting on behalf of the plaintiff.

IT HAS never been and is not now my intention to try pending litigation before the public in the newspapers. Such discussion is prohibited generally by Canon 20 of the Canons of Ethics of the American Bar Association. However, the numerous statements by the Attorney General of the United States including derogatory statements concerning the lawyers of Mississippi and the South have been accentuated by Deputy Attorney General Katzenbach's speech recently made before a bar association in Washington, D.C.

It is my considered opinion that such statements cause the present situation to become "an extreme circumstance of a particular case justifying a statement to the public", as provided in Canon 20. I conceive it to be my duty to the legal profession in Mississippi and the nation to make such a statement at this time.

IT IS regrettable that within recent days and weeks, the lawyers of Mississippi and the South have been called cowards by Attorney General Robert K. Kennedy; they have been recklessly accused by Deputy Attorney General Katzenbach of being untrue to their professional trust and of contributing by their silence to the violence at the University of Mississippi; I have been personally so accused by name by Mr. Katzenbach; Mississippi educators have been called "weak men" by the Attorney General; Mississippi businessmen have been threatened by the Attorney General with diversion of federal funds to which they are justly entitled—all because they have not agreed with the Attorney General of the United States in the Meredith case. Is government by intimidation taking the place of liberty under the law?

The lawyers, educators, businessmen and other citizens of Mississippi believe in law and order, and the use of judicial processes to determine and enforce the rights of parties to any litigation. They believe in the maintenance of peace and prevention of violence. They regret and do not condone the violence and rioting at the University of Mississippi.

Two are dead. Many are injured. Irreparable damage has been done. The violators of the law should be punished. No issue exists on this score between federal and state officials. Professional and businessmen of Mississippi and its other citizens are in accord with men of like mind throughout the nation.

NEVERTHELESS, every citizen of our country must realize that a person or a state which tests whether or not he or it is bound by a court decree to which he or it was not a party, or attempts to persuade a court to overrule any one or more of its decisions, is exercising a heritage of freedom which is ours under our form of government and is not a violator of the law or a defier of the Constitution of the United States.

In this time of peril these truths should be recognized by all citizens of our great country, whether they be liberal, moderate or conservative. There must be forbearance and there must be understanding.

THE AMERICAN people must realize that citizens who act to protect their constitutional liberties and states which act to protect their sovereign rights are not defiers of the law nor violators of our Constitution.

What has happened in Mississippi is an illustration of what may happen in any state when the desire of the Attorney General or the President of the United States may be opposed by a state or by individuals. As was said by the editor and publisher of the Manchester, New Hampshire, Union Leader concerning actions of the federal marshals in the classroom of the University of Mississippi,

> "It can happen here—you may say this is remote from you since you are not in Mississippi, but if federal marshals can use this sort of illegal and unauthorized force to keep a group of students sitting in a classroom where they don't want to sit, in Mississippi, they can do it to you right here in New Hampshire —and your freedom is gone.

It seems that tolerance and forebearance have been forgotten . . . .

Negro Vote Works Hit by Gun Shots

Wash Post. D.C. 9-11-62

RULEVILLE, Miss. (UPI) — Shotgun blasts ripped through the window of a home Monday night and wounded two Negro girls active in the voter registration of Negroes on the Mississippi Delta.

The pellets struck one girl, Vivian Hilley, in the leg and the other girl, Marylene Burke, in the scalp. The victims were taken to hospitals for treatment.

Mayor C. M. Darr said neither girl appeared seriously hurt. He said local and Sunflower County law enforcement officers were investigating the incident and he had personally asked the FBI to investigate.

Darr said a shotgun blast also had been fired into another house in the Negro residential area but no one was hit.

The mayor said although they had been participating in a Negro voter registration campaign he did not believe the shooting had anything to do with their activity.

James Foreman of Atlanta, executive secretary of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, demanded that President Kennedy "convene a special White House conference to discuss efforts of stopping the wave of terror sweeping through the South, especially where SNCC is working on voter registration."

Foreman had wired the President in a similar vein Sunday after two Negro churches, one active in Negro voter registration, were destroyed by flames near Dawson, Ga. Last week, a white college student working with SNCC was wounded in the arm by shotgun pellets fired into a Negro home at Dawson.

Darr and Sheriff Woodley Carr charged that the shootings were perpetrated by "agitators" who had been carrying on the voter registration campaign "in order to gain publicity."

Telephone conversation between J. Minnis and Aaron Henry, Clarksdale, Mississippi

J. Minnis: We have just heard over here about the arrest of those two people from Michigan and we wanted to call and get some details on it, Aaron, for our files. When did it happen, when were they arrested?

A. Henry: Uh, I can only give you the police report on that - the 28th. They were missing two days prior to the 28th - they should have arrived here on th3 26th. They were really arrested on the 28th - that's the day they smuggled a note to me that they were in there. (in jail.)

J. Minnis: How did they smuggle the note out?

A. Henry: Well, uh - - -

J. Minnis: You mean you'd rather not tell? O.K.

J. Minnis: We just saw the article in the Arkansas Gazette - it hadn't been reported in the papers over here. The names are Benjamin Taylor and ----Donnelson. Are they Negro or white?

A. Henry: They're Negro.

J. Minnis: They're both Negro. And they were driving a station wagon? You don't know anything at all about the kind of drugs that they had?

A. Henry: I have not seen them, but I have been in touch with this Dr. King that was responsible for the collection of the drugs. He is sending an inventory of what was in there and, of course, he contends that there was nothing in the shipment but aspirin, cough syrpp and vitamins. Now, it's quite possible that in the cough syrup preparation there might have been some barbiturate in it but nothing that anybody could siphon out

J. Minnis: You don't know anything about where these fellows had been the missing two days?

A. Henry: No. They had dinner with a girl named Margaret Cutler (?) In Louisville. (Girl's name is Tucker)

J. Minnis: When was this?

A. Henry: Christmas Night. And they left there Christmas night anticipating getting in the following day about eight o'clock in the morning. That would be the 26th,=see? But they were not arrested until the 28th.

J. Minnis: According to the arrest report. Who gave you a copy of that? You saw it?

A. Henry: In the paper, yes.

J. Minnis: Is there a possibility of a typographical error? You haven't been in touch with the police, have You?

A. Henry: Yes, I've been in touch with the police. But the day that I called the police was the 28th. That was the day they smuggled the note out to me. They admitted that they had them.

J. Minnis: Now, they're in the sherriff's custody? Were they arrested by the city police?

A. Henry: They were arrested by the city.

J. Minnis: And what's the amount of bond?

A. Henry: $15,000 each.

J. Minnis: $15,000 each! And what are they charged with?

A. Henry: Possession of narcotics. That's a technical charge. They admit there were no narcotics in the strict sense - involved.

J. Minnis You mean the police admit this?

A. Henry: Yes, that there were no narcotics as we understand the

A. Henry: term. But I gues s in the general term - the barbiturate is also classified under the lMississippi Omnibus Narcotic Act and even drugs that are prescription legend - that have no relations either to barbiturates or narcotics are involved in the general Mississippi narcotics act. It's a sort of catch-all thing.

J. Minnis: Well, is there any possibility that under Mississippi rule they would be generally in violation?

A.H. I don't think so. You see the doctor that gathered the drugs was sending them to me to be dispensed without charge to the same people to whom we were giving the clothes. So, the fellows were only driving the truck.

J.M. They were just transporting.

A.H. Yeah. Now, the drugs we get in every day - the driver of the truck is responsible for what's in it.

J.M. Isee your point. Where is the truck now?

A.H. The police got the truck, the drugs and the men.

J.M. Do you know who owns the truck?

A.H. Yeah, the - Professor Elliott.

J.M. At Michigan State?

AH Yeah, Martha there's a girl at Michigan - her name is ~~XXXXXXXX~~ Prescott (?) I can give you a phone number there, too - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - (unintelligible for a few sentences.)

JM: Now, do you know of any action taken by the police? Has there been any kind of a hearing or preliminary hearing evidence of a grand jury hearing or anything?

AH: They're in jail between bonds and I suppose that would mean that some preliminary hearing has been held.

JM. Have you gotten any counsel for them.

AH Yes, counsel has not arrived, however we were in touch with counsel from the time they were arrested on Friday. - - - - (something unintelligble here about trying to reach counsel by phone.)

JM Would you be able to send us a copy of that inventory when you get it?

AH Yes.

JM I'd certainly appreciate it, Aaron.

AH SEnd it to the Voter Education office there?

JM: Yes, I'd sure appreciate it. Wiley may want to talk to you - wait a minute

Pastors Oppose Mississippi's Ban

ark. Gaz. 1/4/63

Jackson, Miss., Jan. 3 (UPI).—Twenty-eight young Methodist ministers issued a statement yesterday opposing racial discrimination and the closing of public schools and voicing concern for "freedom of the pulpit."

The ministers, all natives of Mississippi, said the public school system was "essential to the preservation and development of our true democracy."

"We are unalterably opposed to the closing of public schools on any level or to the diversion of tax funds to the support of private or sectarian schools," they said.

Mississippi law permits the closure of any or all public schools to avoid racial integration.

The ministers' statement was published in the Mississippi Methodist Advocate, an official church newspaper.

Houston lawyer gets Miss. case

Miss, Resist.

WASHINGTON

A private lawyer from Houston, Texas, has been appointed to handle criminal contempt proceedings against Mississippi Gov. Ross R. Barnett and his chief lieutenant, Paul B. Johnson.

U.S. Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy announced Saturday that Leon Jaworski, 57, president of the State Bar of Texas, had been named special counsel in the James H. Meredith case. He will have full charge of the government's action.

On Friday, the government filed papers with the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans, charging Barnett and Johnson with "Willful disregard and defiance" of the court's orders to admit Meredith to the University of Mississippi.

BARNETT ALSO was charged with "Willfully" failing to exercise his responsibilities in regard to maintaining law and order on the Oxford, Miss., campus on September 30, the date Meredith arrived at "Ole Miss."

Judge Admits Facts Prove Bias, But Accuses 2 Govt. Witnesses Of Lying

Miss. Reest.

U. S. District Judge Harold Cox threatened to hold two Negro witnesses for perjury a day after he admitted, December 27, that testimony had shown "very substantial evidence of discrimination against Negroes."

The action came last week during a hearing in Meridian in a Justice Department suit to enjoin Clarke County Circuit Clerk A. L. Ramsey from discriminating against Negro voter applicants. Cox denied Ramsey's request to dismiss the suit.

Justice Department attorney Gerald Stern presented 31 government witnesses, including Negroes, whites and special FBI agents. They were questioned to show that whites were registered immediately without testing, while Negroes were forced to undergo rigid testing or were turned down.

Recounted Denials

Negro witnesses recounted denials of registration attempts occurring from 1955 to 1958. The government produced white witnesses who declared that they had done nothing but sign their names to register; others reported that relatives had registered for them.

The Clarke County Registrar has denied that he, the County Sheriff and the Board of Supervisors had agreed not to register Negroes. Ramsey's lawyer, Talley Riddell, stated that Ramsey had never turned down a Negro, but had merely sometimes suggested that they come back at another time — for various reasons. Negro witnesses declared that they were told that no Negroes would be registered unless the Rights Group Postpones Hearings in Mississippi On Request From RFK

Washington, Jan. 6 (AP).—At the request of the United States attorney general, the federal Civil Rights Commission has postponed for a third time its public hearings in Mississippi on charges of civil rights denials.

In making this disclosure today, the Commission indicated that it acted reluctantly and still felt such hearings were necessary in part "to acquaint citizens of Mississippi with many conditions which by and large may be unknown to them."

There was no indication of any new date for the hearings, first set for October 1962, then rescheduled for December 1962 and then set again for late this month.

The third postponement was disclosed through the Commission's release of an exchange of letters between Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy and John A. Hannah, the Commission chairmen. The Commission set back the earlier hearing dates because of tensions resulting from rioting induced by admission of a Negro to the University of Mississippi.

In his letter, dated December 15, Kennedy noted the pending criminal contempt of court case against Mississippi's Governor Ross R. Barnett and Lieutenant Governor Paul Johnson, as well as other litigation involving the state against Justice Department and military personnel.

If the hearings were held, Kennedy wrote, "I am confident that the claim will be made that the Civil Rights Commission is working with the Department of Justice publicly to prejudice the state of Mississippi and its officials" in the contempt case.

The attorney general added:

"While there obviously would be no substance to such charges, I think that in a matter of this great national importance, involving as it does the governor of one of the states on a question of criminal responsibility, even the appearance of impropriety or questionable ethical conduct by the federal government should be avoided."

Further on in his letter, Kennedy seemed to be suggesting that the idea of public hearings in Mississippi be abandoned entirely when he wrote:

"In the meantime, it seems to me that * * * the work of the Commission staff could continue, and a report could be prepared, without any need for public hearings in the state."

In his January 2 reply, Hannah said that in view of the pending litigation and the effect hearings might have on it, "* * * the Commission would be remiss not to yield to your request to forego, for the time being, its scheduled public hearings."

Hannah Reluctant

But Hannah then made clear his reluctance this way:

"We must state in all candor that this decision is difficult for us, since our preliminary investigations indicate the existence of a situation in Mississippi which urgently demands the fact-finding activities the Commission is uniquely able to provide."

Hannah seemed to reject any idea of dropping all plans for hearings when he wrote:

"While the Department has the power to prosecute (and take(* * * action to eliminate specific deprivations of constitutional rights, the Commission also has statutory obligations it must discharge. Additionally, we feel that our public hearings conducted in many states have served to acquaint both federal and state officials and the local public with relevant facts that can lead to correction at all levels.

Obligations Cited

"It has been our conclusion that the scheduled hearings would isolate the facts and circumstances responsible for civil rights denials in Mississippi and would produce the evidence necessary to fulfillment of our statutory duty, including the formulation of appropriate recommendations to the president and to Congress. In addition, it would serve to acquaint citizens of Mississippi with many conditions which by and large may be unknown to them.

"The evidence at hand suggests that the few persons in Mississippi who have spoken out for law and order have been subjected to increasing harassment and intimidation. This has certainly been the case with the courageous members of our Mississippi Advisory Committee, who have consistently urged us to hold hearings in the state. This committee, composed of both white and Negro native Mississippians, has shown great courage in the discharge of its authorized function in the face of unusual difficulties, and we cannot dismiss lightly our obligation to support them and other advisory committees in like circumstances."

Rights Hearings In Mississippi Delayed Again

Atla. Const. 1-7-63 p. 8

WASHINGTON (AP)—At the request of the U.S. attorney general, the Federal Civil Rights Commission has postponed for a third time its public hearings in Mississippi on charges of civil rights denials in that state.

In making this disclosure Sunday, the commission indicated it acted reluctantly and still feels such hearings are necessary in part "to acquaint citizens of Mississippi with many conditions which by and large may be unknown to them."

And the commisison said it will "press our current investigations vigorously" even though no hearings are held on charges of denial of voting rights, economic reprisals and so forth.

There was no indication of any new date for the hearings, first set for October 1962, then rescheduled for December 1962 and then set again for late January 1963.

memo of pohne conversation with Aaron Henry

Henry says that Carsie Hall came to Clarksdale yesterday about noon and bailed out the two who had been charged with narcotics possession. Hall did not get in touch with any of the local folks--he just came in and didhis job and left again--and some of the locals were a bit miffed. Jones of the Ghandi Society had sent a check for the bail-bond premium but Ella Bakerkand Jim Forman had not wanted a bond used because this would mean the premium would be unreturnable. Henry saidhe had heard something about Jim Farmer raising the bail money, but could give me nothing specific on this. He said he simply did not know for sure where the bail money came from that Hall used. Bail had been reduced to 1500 each. The grand jury meets in Clarksdale tomorrow and it's Henry's impression that an indictment must come if prosecution is to take place. The two have left town to return to Detroit from whence they came.

Files suit for divorce in Arkansas

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — Mrs. Daisy L. Bates filed suit here for divorce against L. C. Bates to whom she was married March 4, 1942. She is former state president of the Arkansas NAACP and he is an NAACP field secretary. She is also a director of the national NAACP.

The 20 - year marriage has for some months been reported on its last legs. In January, 1960, Mrs. Bates' national prominence carried her to New York and lectures throughout the country. Since that time, she has spent little, if any, time in their Little Rock home.

In her suit, Mrs. Bates said her husband treated her with "abuse, contempt and studied neglect."

MARITAL DISCORD, then, seems to be accomplishing what terrorists' bombs could not — the break-up of the Bates household.

"Daisy Bates" became one of the names most often spoken in 1956 when the "Little Rock Nine" desegregated the city school system by attending Central High School.

How the name was spoken was determined by the speaker's attitude toward civil rights. Mrs. Bates was represented as the advisor, protector and spiritual leader of the nine trail-blazing children.

Attractive and stylish, she maintained her chic composure through the jeering mobs and midnight bombers. Recently, her book, "The Long Shadow of Little Rock," was published and is now in its second printing.

She spent two years in New York writing the book, which tells the story of that hectic time.

LONG BEFORE the fame which attended the Little Rock case, Mr. and Mrs. Bates were prominent as publishers of the Little Rock State Press which Mr. Bates founded in 1941.

The paper had a stormy career which terminated in 1959. Local advertisers, incensed over the break-down of segregation, retaliated against the paper.

Shortly afterward, Mr. Bates took the post as NAACP field secretary. Mrs. Bates is currently on a lecture tour which will carry her to Jackson, Miss., St. Louis, New York, Long Island and New Jersey.

She said that after the lecture tour, she would live in Little Rock.

"Mississippi is worse now for colored people than it was 100 years ago," declared William M. Kunstler, one of the lawyers representing plaintiffs in a suit filed Wednesday in District Court.

He made the statement at a press conference at the Burlington Hotel after filing the suit that demands federal action to put a stop to intimidations and beatings in the voter registration drive in Mississippi.

He served as a lawyer in litigation that opened the doors of "Ole Miss" to James H. Meredith. He was campaign manager for the Rev. Merrill W. Lindsay, who recently ran as the first colored congressional candidate in Mississippi since Reconstruction.

The young men were not allowed to contact anyone. The next day, over 24 hours after the arrest, police went back and picked up the truck the young men had been driving.

After a search the police changed this charge to possession of barbituates.

THE VICTIMS of the economic squeeze number over 200,000. They are sharecroppers who make their living by planting, cultivating and harvesting the cotton that is the stable crop of the Mississippi Delta area.

At best, their existence has always been meager. They managed to survive, however, through their work, through the federal surplus foods program and through the extension of credit by banks and land-owners.

With the vote - registration drives being conducted in various Mississippi counties and with the entry of James Meredith into the state university, the whites turned surly and began a massive economic retaliation.

Several counties halted their participation in the surplus foods program. They said they could no longer pay for the distribution of the foods. Observers point out, however, that no county employees have been laid off so no money is being saved.

Court Delays Voter Probe In Mississippi

1-19-63

Miss Resist.

New Orleans, Jan. 16 (AP). — Mississippi asked a federal appeals court today to stop FBI inspection of voter records in three counties because the probe cast a stigma on the registrars.

"If this inspection takes place," said Darryl A. Hart, special Mississippi assistant attorney general, "they are certainly going to suffer injury."

"I hardly think a person in Mississippi would have damage to his reputation as a result of being charged with discriminating against Negro citizens," Howard A. Glickstein, a justice department attorney, said.

The three voter registrars are appealing a federal district court ruling opening the way for FBI agents to inspect voter registration records for possible evidence of racial discrimination.

The registrars said the FBI didn't give sufficient reasons for wanting to see the records.

The United States Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, which took the case under advisement after hearing the oral arguments, has issued an order stopping inspection in Hinds, Lauderdale and Madison counties until it rules on the appeal.

Jailed benefactors to sue policemen

Miss. Resist.

CLARKSDALE, Miss. — Two young men who were arrested while carrying food, clothing and medicine to needy families plan to sue the local policemen who arrested them.

The policemen at the same time face the task of convincing a Coahoma County grand jury here Wednesday and also explaining what happened to about 1,350 pounds of food and clothing missing from the truck.

The men, Ivanhoe Donaldson and Benjamin Taylor, both [illegible] released on [illegible] bond [illegible] week after [illegible] drugs were in the truck. Two Louisville doctors sent affidevits to the FBI, the Department of Justice and the Mississippi Advisory Committee to the U.S. Civil Rights Commission. In it they swore no such drugs were sent.

It was also pointed out that the young men were arrested on Dec. 26, yet the truck was not searched until Dec. 27.

THE DAY - AFTER-CHRISTMAS arrest came after the young men arrived in Clarksdale and parked the truck in front of the Fourth Street Drug Store, owned by Aaron Henry, Mississippi NAACP president.

Arriving at 3 a.m., they settled down in the truck for a nap. Police arrested them and took them to city jail for "checking." They were then held for "investigation" and placed in a cell.

For two and a half days, the men later revealed, they were forced to stand in the center of the crowded cell. For the first day, they were given no food and not permitted to talk.

Mr. Donaldson later told a Louisville press conference: "The chief came around with a friend and I think he called [illegible] days in Clarksdale jail and Coahoma County jail.

They were released when their bond was reduced from $15,000 to $1,500. This reduction came only after Clarksdale authorities learned that the FBI and other federal agencies were investigating.

THE MEN WERE charged with possession of barbiturates. Police said they found a drug, used to ease the distress of middle - aged women, in the truck driven from Louisville, Ky. to Clarksdale by the pair.

He said that other prisoners fed them when authorities refused.

AFTER THE TRUCK was searched, the police charged possession of barbiturates and charged the men. They were then transferred to Coahoma County jail under unusually high bond of $15,000.

Immediately, protests were made to the U.S. Attorney General and the Civil Rights Commission. Agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation went into Clarksdale investigating the circumstances of the arrest.

Attorneys for the two young men filed for a writ of habeas corpus which would release them. In the face of this unexpected pressure, the county prosecutor agreed to a reduction of bond.

The total of $3,000 was put up by the Student Non-Violent Coordianting Committee (SNCC) of which Mr. Donaldson, a University of Michigan graduate, is a field worker.

The SNCC was given the bond money by an unnamed woman in Detroit.

IN THE WEDNESDAY grand jury hearing, the police must prove that no one had access to the truck during the 24 hours between the arrest and the searching.

They must do this in order to prove the young men were in possession of the barbiturates they claim they found in the truck.

However, if police prove this, they will be somewhat accusing themselves of spiriting away a large amount of the food and clothing in the truck and dirtying the remainder with crankcase oil.

WHEN THEY WERE freed last week on bond, the two youths returned to Louisville. Mr. Taylor then returned to the University of Michigan where he is a junior.

Mr. Donaldson said they will return to Clarksdale Wednesday, the day of the grand jury hearing, and will attend a rally that night.

When they go back, they said, they will carry another load of food and clothing for the relief of the needy sharecroppers. They voiced no fear of being arrested again.

When police later released the truck and the goods, about one fourth of the food and clothing was missing. Crankcase oil had been smeared on the food and clothing to render it unfit for use.

Police so far have made no explanation of how this happened.

DRIVES FOR FOOD and clothing for the Mississippi operation were launched by several organizations throughout the country.

Mr. Henry asked that such goods be sent to the Emergency Welfare and Relief Committee. Haven Methodist Church, 400 Yazoo Ave., Clarksdale, Miss.

The sharecroppers in need of this aid he said, number about 200,000 and reside in Mississippi's Delta area. Following attempts to register and vote and after the desegregation of the University of Mississippi,, they were victims of a wholesale economic squeeze.

Land - owners evicted them from their farms; bankers refused usual credit, and the families found themselves without food, clothing and utilities.

IN HIS APPEAL to the nation for support, Mr. Henry said:

"We need your help in trying to ease this human misery. We need food — preserved or canned; clothing—coates, dresses, slacks, underwear, socks, shoes of all sizes; and finances to pay utility bills for light and heat.

"Colored persons who have been involved in the freedom movment are the first and the most severely victimized if their activities are known to the white racists."

BISHOP C. EWBANK TUCKER of Louisville, president of Louisville CORE and a director of the Southern Conference Educational Fund, is among the leaders in the appeal for Mississippi relief.

In a letter to attorney General Robert Kennedy, Bishop Tucker said that the arrest of the two young men was "a move to thwart the whole freedom movement in Mississippi."

Long, Long Road Leads To Registr

By BOB CARPENTER

Circuit Clerk C. E. Cocke said yesterday if applicants for voter registration fail to pass the required literacy test he is telling them to come back in a year for another chance.

"We can't have them coming back every other day," the veteran Washington County official said. "The policy we follow is to make them wait 12 months."

ASKED if state laws stipulated a year's wait, Cocke shook his head and said, "I don't believe the law is very definite on the waiting period. That's the way I'm interpreting it."

Cocke said he has not bothered to write the state attorney general for an opinion.

"However, any applicant is free to write if he wants," he added.

The question of a waiting period between tests was raised after the Delta Democrat-Times received several complaints from applicants who were told by Cocke they would have to wait a year after they had failed to pass the test. Cocke, as county registrar, is sole judge as to whether they pass.

The complainants said they felt the 12-month delay was contrary to state law.

The Mississippi Code of 1942, section 3211, and not amended since 1942, reads:

"The registrar shall keep his books open at his office and shall register the electors of his county at any time."

Several bills have been introduced in the state legislature in recent years providing that books be kept open only at certain times, and that a specific waiting period should be set. None of these proposals has been passed.

REGISTRATION of voters in Mississippi has been a rather complicated process, especially in recent years with a coordinated effort on the part of Negroes to qualify.

As a result, laws have been changed and each session of the legislature results in modifications, or attempts to modify.

The literacy test as of now contains 17 questions. They are worded to insure that the applicant meets all of the state's constitutional requirements of residence, possible criminal record, age and similar information.

Of Voters In Mississippi

Another question requires the applicant to give a reasonable interpretation of a section of the Mississippi constitution.

Those applyng for registration in Cocke's office are handed the four-page form and told to fill it out.

In addition, they are asked to interpret a section of the Mississippi constitution and to write a brief essay explaining the duties and obligations of citizenship under a constitutional form of government.

Once the test has been taken, the state law says the registrar "within 10 days after the receipt . . . shall deliver for publication in a newspaper . . . the name and address of such applicant . . . and shall cause same to be published once each week for two consecutive weeks. . . ."

Following this, the law states there shall be a lapse of two weeks in which any person may contest the qualifications of an applicant by filing an affidavit with the registrar.

If a contest is filed, the county registrar is the sole judge as to whether the complaint bears merit, and he has the power to place the applicant's name on registration books or to declare him not qualified.

THE law requiring the publication of registration applicants in a newspaper of general circulation was passed in 1962. Cocke said he has been sending the names of applicants to the Leland Progress for publication. He said it has been two or three months since the last list of names was published. He declined to comment when asked if the delay were not in contradiction of the 10 days after receipt stipulation.

"It's been pretty slow lately," he said. "And I usually wait until I get 10 or 15 names."

He said he was getting ready to publish another list real soon.

It is only after the test, publication of name, and two-week contest period that the applicant knows whether he is qualified to vote.

He finds out by visiting the circuit clerk's office once more and asking the registrar if his name is on voting books or not.

If not, under Cocke's present 12-month waiting period, the applicant may return and try again after a year.

POLITICS:

Farewell, BBD&O

Almost since it was founded in the palmy Hoover days of 1929, the Madison Avenue advertising agency of Batten, Barton, Durstine & Osborn, Inc., and the Republican Party have gone together like Maine and Vermont. BBD&O, now the fourth largest agency in the nation, projected the Republican image in campaign after campaign. They used print advertisements and radio shows and, in a television age, pioneered in what seemed the ultimate image-builder—the TV political spot commercial.

So successful, in fact, was BBD&O that it won the compliment of invective from former President Harry S. Truman. The agency's efforts on behalf of the Eisenhower Administration, he said, proved BBD&O really stood for "Bunk, Bull, Deceit, and Obfuscation."

During the second Eisenhower campaign, however, Republicans began to worry about their gray-flannel associations. And when Richard Nixon was nominated in 1960, he made it clear that he didn't want his campaign tied to Madison Avenue.*

To help Nixon, BBD&O detached a vice president, Carroll Newton, to form Campaign Associates, Inc., a team of admen that served for the duration of the campaign.

Last week, with an eye to the 1964 campaign, the GOP National Committee completely severed its ties with New York advertising and looked to the heartland. It chose the nation's sixth-ranking agency, Leo Burnett Co. of Chicago, to handle some $3 million in Republican advertising through 1964. Republican National Chairman William E. Miller said the GOP was taken with Burnett's "grass-roots philosophy," and in Chicago Burnett's Michigan Avenue admen were ready to put their ideas on the train to see if they get off at Lake Forest.

INTEGRATION:

'Go! Go! Go!'

The winter morning rose gray and chilly, streaking the windows at Baxter Hall with its moist hand. Fretting at his typewriter, James H. Meredith sat in his second-floor bedroom in the University of Mississippi dormitory and worried through a hard decision. Finally, he buttoned his tan overcoat, tugged on his cap, stepped out, and handed copies of a typewritten statement to half a dozen waiting reporters.

In curiously opaque language, the statement spoke of Meredith's lonely fight to crack the color line at Ole Miss—a fight with a "determined, resourceful, and unprincipled" enemy who respects "no rules of war." He could no longer fight a battle so beset with "doubt and uncertainty." "Unless very definite and positive changes are made to make my situation more conducive to learning," he said, he would not register for the spring term.

Meredith had written the statement alone, consulting no one, leaving friends and foes alike to interpret its meaning.

Newsweek

Meredith: Tactic—or alibi?

Was it an admission of defeat or only a tactic? To some, the meaning seemed plain: Meredith was quitting, certainly for the spring term, probably for good. But others were sure he had no intention of leaving after all he had endured—the long struggle for admission, the bloody night of rioting last Sept. 30, the month of taunts and cherry-bombs, two months more in Coventry. These friends argued that an impatient Meredith was dismayed at how little real progress had been made and that he hoped—however naïvely—that his threat to leave would work changes at Ole Miss that his presence had not.

This argument was persuasive. However unlikely the mantle might look on Meredith's delicately boned, 5-foot 6-inch frame, he is a crusader with a mystical passion for the causes of "my people." He expected too much of his mission. He had hoped more Negroes would follow him to Ole Miss, but only three had applied—and two of those have been turned down for apparently valid academic reasons. He had hoped, too, that the lot of Mississippi's Negroes generally would be bettered by his symbolic act. "The situation in Mississippi has never been healthy for me," he told NEWSWEEK's Karl Fleming last week, as he sat cross-legged in his underwear on his dormitory cot. "But I don't see why it isn't healthier now for everybody else."

Hollow Victory: With such expectations, his victory seemed to him hollow. What bothered him most was the continuing presence of 350 U.S. soldiers on campus, guarding his door, patrolling outside, skittering about in jeeps. While they remain, Meredith feels, Gov. Ross Barnett and his segregationist allies can argue that Mississippi has not yielded, that integration by bayonet is no integration at all. Meredith would rather have the troops pulled out, leaving Mississippi to take responsibility for protecting his rights.

"Meredith feels," said his Memphis lawyer, A.W. Willis, "that if he graduates at gunpoint, so what? I guess he feels he hasn't really cracked the wall after all, so why continue to take all of this pain and suffering?"

For Meredith the crusader was Meredith the human being as well. He was enduring his ordeal with seemingly invincible calm. Yet he has been anxious about his family—the more so since night riders fired into his father's home at Kosciusko last month. And however he might shrug off personal danger—"I have never considered it worth my while to worry about anything other than the basic problems"—he could not escape his human vulnerability. A month ago, with an almost poetic metaphor for the shape of anxiety, he suggested what life is like for a Negro at Ole Miss: "It's just like you walk along in the dark and a bird flutters in the bush . . . I have walked in the dark, and a bird is always fluttering."

D or B: Inevitably, his schoolwork suffered. Insiders said that, going into this week's final exam period, Meredith's average was between E (bad enough to flunk out) and D (good enough to stay, on probation). A B student at all-Negro Jackson State College before transferring to Ole Miss, he was clearly capable of better work. But with the situation as it is, he says he doesn't even know the names of his courses. "I don't know anything," he said wryly. "I just follow the jeep."

Students picked up the easy answer: his threat to leave was an advance alibi for flunking out. And most were jubilant. "He's cocky and arrogant," one student said. "I'm a broad-minded individual, but he just isn't a good nigger."

Whatever his hopes, the only changes wrought by Meredith's statement were for the worse. The silent treatment gave way to open heckling for the first time in two months. The first night, students filed out of the campus cafeteria when Meredith arrived for dinner. Two nights later, they drummed their plates with knives and forks and chanted: "Go! Go! Go!" The next evening, a mob of 300—biggest since the riot—hooted: "Bye, bye, blackbird!" Finally, on Friday night, the university moved; campus cops checked ID cards at the cafeteria door, and one demonstrator was suspended.

Rallying Point: Many faculty members were, by contrast, dismayed. Faculty morale had already sagged to a low ebb under political and segregationist pressures. According to one administration official, 25 members of assistant-professor rank or higher—one-seventh of the faculty—plan to quit. The rewards for befriending Meredith have been cross-burnings, threats, and job pressure. At a third-grade school party, the daughter of a professor who had invited Meredith to dinner was given a doll—a black one with a card that said, "Nigger lover." As long as Meredith remained, there was a rallying point. But now, one faculty member complained, "I feel like he's pulled down the flag." So did some of his friends in the Justice Department.

Meredith had been enrolled at great cost—two lives, scores of injuries, millions of dollars, and immeasurable bitterness. If he leaves, it may bring momentary comfort to those who believe in harassment and violence as weapons against change. But would he have lost his fight? Others, inevitably, would walk through the door he opened. And every war has its casualties. Leaving the cafeteria one night, stepping calmly toward a pack of chanting students, Meredith said as much to a U.S. marshal beside him: "The price of freedom sure is high."

Flash Point

Suddenly, near the end of the last quarter, something snapped. Many of the 50,033 who filled D.C. Stadium in Washington to watch the 1962 Thanksgiving Day championship high-school football game between overwhelmingly Negro Eastern High and predominantly white St. John's sensed the tension and began herding their children toward the exits. Others stayed to watch officials untangle a player free-for-all on the field, and to hear the Eastern rooters chant a countdown as the clock ran out, leaving St. John's a 20-7 victor.

Then the mob took over. Charging out of the Eastern stands, an estimated 3,000 Negroes in their late teens pelted across the gridiron to the St. John's side. Groups of Negroes slugged, kicked, cut, and stoned individual whites and other Negroes who tried to help the victims. Indiscriminately they attacked priests and policemen, men, women, and children. In all, officials counted some 310 injury cases.

Frightful Uprising: Last week a sobering postmortem on this "frightful uprising" was issued from a special biracial investigative committee. Partly to blame were the Eastern player and coach whose actions on the field set off the first brawl. And partly, said the report, it was the sponsors (including the Touchdown Club, The Washington Post, and school officials) who "showed an amazing lack of awareness of the inflammable potential" of the situation. There was unhampered drinking in the stands and unruly gangs roved the aisles. But, most significantly, the report blamed a public-school system which has given "students little discipline, little guidance, and little incentive to develop strong citizenship qualities."

To combat this situation, the report urged such measures as increased authority for teachers to take disciplinary action in the classroom; revision of the "basic track system"—remedial classes for slow-learning pupils—to make it more than a "dumping ground for hundreds of Negro youth, who are consigned to inferior instruction, far too large classes, and a complete lack of training to fit them to become employable citizens of tomorrow."

The findings were seized upon by Mississippi Democrat John Bell Williams of the House District Committee, long a foe of school desegregation, as "evidence of a fact long recognized by most honest people: that forced integration of the District's public schools has been a dismal failure."

The report itself had an answer. "School integration can work," said the committee, "but it requires the help of responsible leaders, parents, citizens, and children." Driving home the point, The Washington Post editorialized: "The trouble is not a consequence of school desegregation; it is a hangover from segregation in the past, from continuing segregation in residence and work opportunities . . . a failure . . . to accomplish . . . genuine integration . . ."

WASHINGTON

Smith's Country

by Kenneth Crawford

HEAD west out of Washington, cross any of the several Potomac River bridges, pick your way through the shopping-centered suburbia of Arlington and Fairfax counties and you arrive presently in another world. It is a fair world of voluptuously rolling countryside, antique small towns, neat dairy farms, imposing gentlemen's estates, and a tempo of life left over from the last century. You are now in Virginia's Eighth Congressional District, the constituency of 79-year-old chairman Howard W. Smith of the House Rules Committee, farmer, banker, lawyer.

Smith's district is bounded on the north by Maryland, on the south by Virginia farm country, on the west by the Blue Ridge Mountains, and on the east by the Potomac River and Chesapeake Bay. Bull Run is one of its natural boundaries and its many historical markers recall great events at Shiloh, Spotsylvania, and Manassas. The Eighth includes the horse towns of Upperville and Middleburg, where the heirs and assigns of such as the late Andrew Mellon ride to hounds. President Kennedy is building a retreat among the fox hunters, whose reaction to his interloping is determined indifference.

IMMIGRANTS

The district's biggest metropolitan sprawls are Charlottesville (29,427 by the 1960 census) and Fredericksburg (13,639). The state legislature had the foresight after the 1950 census to detach Arlington, Fairfax, and the city of Alexandria from the Eighth and make a new Congressional district of them. Even then, alien Washingtonians were invading these closest Virginia communities with their ideas and their problems. Since then, the immigrants have taken over. They demand better schools, better public services, and so have become troublemakers even in Richmond. Moreover, they are politically unreliable. They send Joel Broyhill, a Republican, to Congress. True, he is a sort of Harry Byrd Republican and therefore not too objectionable to the natives. But it still isn't the same as having a solid Byrd Democrat in the delegation.

Divorcement from the northern territory cost the old district Mount Vernon and several other Revolutionary shrines. But it was worth that cost. Among other benefits, it got Congressman Smith out of harm's way. It gave him what is probably the safest district in the nation. He is so in tune with his constituents that they don't even have to vote for him to retain his services. His reelection every two years is a formality. In 1962, he was unopposed, as usual, and polled 20,931 votes. There was no need for any of the rest of the district's 357,461 people to go to the bother and expense of paying their poll taxes.

RIGHT AND DUTY

It is a cozy arrangement both for Smith and his constituents. Not only does he give them what they want, which is mainly to be left alone, but he has tried, more or less successfully in recent times, to give the rest of the country the same thing. It is no skin off the nose of an Eighth District resident, whose schools and other services may not be very good, if the rest of the country is forced to abide the same inadequacies. Anyway, didn't Jefferson, who used to live in Charlottesville himself, declare that government best that governs least? Why shouldn't the 20,931 Smith voters have their man in there seeing to it that 188 million Americans get the least government, too, whether they want more or not?

Until two years ago, when his powers were curtailed, Smith got away with the presumption that it was his right and duty to tell the House what legislation it might consider. Because the full membership couldn't be trusted to resist the pressures applied to it to pass "unsound" legislation, so the argument went, Smith would do it for them. He had the courage to resist the pressures. It took a long time for his colleagues to ask: on Smith, what pressures? For him, what need courage?

Last week, by keeping the membership of the Rules Committee at fifteen, and Smith's power thus limited, the House decided that what he and his district want, right as it may be to them, is not necessarily what the country wants and needs.

retary, Robert L. McManus, strode stony-faced into the third-floor Capitol press room to distribute a one-page, mimeographed Rockefeller statement: "I have today received letters . . . from L. Judson Morhouse by which he has resigned, effective immediately, as member of the State Thruway Authority and as a member of the Lake George Park Commission."

Only eleven days before, jovial Jud Morhouse, the Ticonderoga, N.Y., lawyer who was responsible for selling the untried, liberal Rockefeller to GOP leaders as their candidate for governor in 1958, had stepped down as Republican state chairman. But he had retained his $17,000-a-year Thruway vice chairmanship and his unpaid, prestigious commissionership, saying he was leaving party work "to devote more time to the practice of law and to my family." Why the new resignations?

About an hour later, the reason was clear. Morhouse entered Manhattan's Criminal Court Building where Democratic District Attorney Frank S. Hogan and a grand jury have been probing influence-peddling and corruption in the State Liquor Authority. There, in a three-minute appearance, Morhouse declined to waive immunity from prosecution for his testimony. Had he still been a state officer, he would have been ousted immediately from his posts under state law, a fate suffered by another Rockefeller GOP appointee, Martin C. Epstein, removed as SLA chairman in November as a result of Hogan's investigation (NEWSWEEK Dec. 10).

A small chill went through the Rockefeller organization which is warming up for a crack at the Presidency in 1964, but the governor refused to comment. Morhouse said wearily: "Who can say what you did in eight years? But I can say emphatically that I never interceded improvidently."

Eastland Home Cited in Suit On Voter Bias

© New York Times News Service

Washington, Jan. 22.—The Justice Department sued today to end voting discrimination against Negroes in Sunflower County, Miss., the home of Senator James O. Eastland (Dem., Miss.).

The action, announced here, was brought in the federal district court at Oxford, Miss. It named as defendants Decil C. Campbell, County clerk and voting registrar, and the state of Mississippi.

Among Negro leaders, Sunflower has been called "the worst county in the worst state." It is a rural area of rich cotton land. The Justice Department said only 114 of the County's 13,524 Negroes of voting age were registered. By contrast, it said, more than half the 8,785 voting-age whites were on the voting books.

Negro groups began a voting drive last summer in Ruleville, five miles north of Eastland's home. But it has got nowhere.

The suit charged that Campbell had refused to register Negroes with the same qualifications as registered whites and had unreasonably delayed processing Negro applications. It asked the court to enjoin the discriminatory practices.

As chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, Eastland is extremely important to the Justice Department. He has virtual life-and-death power over its legislative proposals and passes on all judicial nominations.

Eastland, when informed of the suit, said.

"There is no foundation in fact for the allegations in the bill of complaint."

Robert F. Kennedy, since he became attorney general two years ago, has brought 11 voting cases in Mississippi. Miss. Resist

Racists Say Restraint Is Sometimes Cowardly

Jackson, Miss., Jan. 25 (UPI). —The Citizens Councils said yesterday it deplored racial violence but "there is a point beyond which even the most judicious restraint becomes cowardice."

Speaking in an editorial in its official magazine, the segregationist organization said the best way to prevent violence is to prevent integration.

The editorial took issue with "moderates" who advised peaceful acceptance of integration at the University of Mississippi.

Subject - Letters from Jack McKart, Coordinator, who is currently in West Tennessee and Mississippi

January 18. I have spent the past few days in Haywood and Fayette counties and below have summarized what I found during this time. Am in Somerville now.

I informed the Civic and Welfare League in each county to go ahead and begin to accept loan applications. Also told them that the interest will probably be raised to 6%. It is a good idea to raise the interest from 2% to about 6% because some people are now able to get bank loans and the rate of interest here is 8 to 10% on the first thousand dollars, and 6% on amounts above this. But the people who can, get loans from Operation Freedom because of the lower interest rate and this is causing some friction among the people.

The three tents on Mr. Nixon's land in Haywood County are now vacant. The three families are now relocated on land elsewhere in Haywood County. Odell Sanders wants to know what the Civic and Welfare League should do with these three tents now. (There are 3 tents with wooden platforms and 2 extra wooden platforms.) The tents have been vacant since last week , and I forgot to mention this on the phone on Sunday night to Rev. McCrackin.... [Since writing this, Jack has made arrangements in Mississippi for transporting at least two of these tents by truck to that area where they are much needed. Haywood County OF committee has agreed to this being done. EB]

There is a possibility that Haywood County will get a food processing plant and the local people will have to supply 10% of the money. (It will be about a ½ million dollar plant so they would have to raise 50,000 dollars.) Odell Sanders wants to know if OF can help arrange a tour for him to try and raise this money. It would probably be good for you to get more details directly from him on this.

The situation in both counties is still very bad - the pressure is still being applied but not openly. There will have to be some long-range solutions soon because emergency, short-term assistance helps, but it is only temporary. Art Emery has done a lot of work on long range plans. He almost has a vegetable producer's co-op set up in Haywood County. He and his family are really wonderful people. They are making many sacrifices to help the people in both counties here.... Eric Weinberger's work is coming along well - they are receiving about 5 or 6 tote bag orders per day.

Had a get-together with some of the Fayette County Civic and Welfare League people and I mentioned Mississippi and asked the people if, from their experience of the past few years, they had any ideas about what to do in Mississippi. No one had any immediate ideas, but they had ideas about their own county. They want their own businesses (shoe store, grocery, cleaners, drugstore, etc.) and feel that this sort of thing would be long range help - which it would be. They are also beginning to explore the idea of co-ops through Art Emery.

Some of the people in Haywood County want to get together with me on my way back to Ohio from Mississippi - so I will be stopping there on my way back. Today I am going into Memphis and then into Mississippi.

January 21, Cleveland, Miss. On Mr. Joe McDonald's loan request, the amount needed is: insurance on truck, $32; taxes on house $63; and repairs on truck $42.51. This gives a total of $137.51. Mr. McDonald has been having quite a bit of trouble with his truck, and when he buys new parts for it or has it repaired, the white garage owners charge him more. Just this morning his drive shaft fell off as he was going down the highway south of Indianola. The two telephone calls and the gasoline expense on Mr. Amzie Moore's attempted trip to the January 5 Operation Freedom meeting came to $10.20. [This amount has been refunded to Amzie Moore. The above total has been sent to Joe McDonald. EB]

Following is an application for a loan which has been approved by the local group here: Rev. Jeff Surney and family, Cleveland, Miss. Rev. Surney attempted to register three times. At the time he made these attempts he was sharecropping and living on the land of a white landowner (Harry Clark) at Doddsville, Miss. In Aug. 1962, shortly after his third attempt, a white man (J.E. Oliver) who is a friend of his landlord came to him and said something to the effect that, If you don't take your name off we are going to put pressure on you. Rev. Surney answered: I won't unless I have violated a law. Oliver said: Don't tell anyone I said you violated a law. You should have waited on trying to register until we took you to register. Mr. Clark will be out here if you don't change your mind. Rev. Surney said: Well, if I haven't violated a law, I'm not going to. Mr. Oliver said: Well, Clark will be out tomorrow to tell you to move.

The following day, Rev. Surney's landlord (Clark) took him for an automobile ride and told him that the best thing for him to do was to move immediately. Since moving from this place, Rev. Surney has moved three times and is now living in Cleveland. He is a Baptist minister who had four churches, but he lost these churches through pressure on the congregation by landlords. Rev. Surney has 9 girls, 7 of which go to school. His wife is presently in a mental hospital, her mental condition having arisen in the past five months.

Rev. Surney has a monthly government pension of $163 for wounds received in the second world war, and he supplements this income with house painting. His present, immediate needs are: (1) $60 to pay doctor bills (2) either shoes and clothing or money to buy these for his daughters. He estimates the cost to be around $200.... [The $60 has been sent him, also an additional $100. EB]

Enclosed is a clipping from the Jan. 18, 1963 issue of the Clarksdale (Miss.) Press Register showing the listing of names of people who have applied to register. Those checked are persons Aaron Henry personally knows. This listing of names is known as the "morality test" and is run for a two week period. If anyone contacts the circuit clerk and says he questions the character of a person listed, the person whose character has been questioned must then defend this charge or he is not permitted to register. Also enclosed is this listing which appeared in the Jan. 17 issue of Cleveland's paper, The Bolivar Commercial. Have also enclosed an article on voter registration which appeared in The Delta Democrat-Times (Greenville, Miss.). This article sums up much of the information concerning voter registration down here. [Jack refers to this paper as "Hodding Carter's paper," and calls it "the only decent one in the whole state." The article is entitled "Long, Long Road Leads To Registration of Voters In Mississippi" and is by Bob Carpenter. This gives in some detail the run-around which registration applicants are given in Washington County, in which the city of Greenville is located. It quotes the circuit clerk, C. E. Cocke, on the literacy test, constitution test, and morality test. When a person fails to pass any of these tests he is told to wait a year. "We can't have them coming back every other day," the clerk is quoted. EB]

Some notes of interest: (1) It is estimated that at least 80 % of the cotton in the delta was machine picked this year. I am going to check this figure through various sources in the next few days to see if it is accurate. (2) In 1962 the Miss. State Legislature made available to counties throughout the state, funds to purchase police dogs. (3) In Leland, Miss. a 67 year old woman registered and then said that she had been waiting for something like this all of her life.....

When I came to Mississippi this time, I brought with me one of the forms that the Civic and Welfare Leagues in Tennessee use to screen loan applicants; and the people here feel that they will probably use this form since they do not have one of their own yet. I will try to be at the February 2 meeting of Operation Freedom in Cincinnati because there are many things that I can present that will probably be of interest.

January 23, Cleveland, Miss. Enclosed you will find a copy of the form which the local groups will use in screening applicants for loans from Operation Freedom. As you will notice, this form is the same as the one used by the Haywood and Fayette County Civic and Welfare Leagues except for some questions which Aaron Henry has added. /The form is a legal sheet headed: "Approved By Mississippi Council of Federated Organizations (Emergency Welfare and Relief Committee)" with a blank line for the name of the county. The questionnaire asks name and address, number in family, age of youngest child at home, age of oldest child at home, how many acres do you farm?, Do you own your farm?, its value?, do you rent?, do you sharecrop?, value of your equipment?, your present indebtedness? Then it asks How much will you need this year for: supplies ___, mortgage___, equipment___, living until harvest___, other___? Then the question is asked: Do you think you can get a regular bank loan? Also: How long have you lived in this county?, How long have you been on the farm where you are now?, Are you a registered voter?, What church are you a member of, or pastor of?, Do you believe that Negroes are entitled to all the freedoms America affords all its other citizens?, Are you willing to identify yourself more with the Freedom Movement? EB/

Is this form acceptable to OF? Also enclosed you will find a copy of a news release which Charles Cobb, SNCC field representative, sent out from here today:

> Cleveland, Miss., Jan. 23, 1963. Paul Dean, a high school senior at East Side High School was arrested at about 9:30 last night and charged with talking to a white woman. Dean lives at 404 Pearl Street. Police reportedly called Dean's mother shortly after 9 p.m. and asked if Leon was there. She said that no Leon lived there. Police arrived in a few minutes and arrested Dean. According to Dean, no formal charge, beyond that of talking to a white woman on the telephone, was made.
> At the police station Dean was made to talk into a tape recorder and into a telephone, while the woman who made the complaint listened. She identified Dean's voice as the voice she was supposed to have heard on the telephone. No mention was made of what Dean was supposed to have said on the telephone.
> Amzie Moore of Cleveland called a telephone operator here in Cleveland and asked if it was possible to trace local calls. He was told that it couldn't be done, since the calls do not come through the switchboard.
> Dean was released this morning around 8 a.m.. He says that he will have to pay a fine of $13. He also said the police told him that this case was not over yet. Dean has not been told the charge against him; but it is believed to be using the telephone for obscene purposes, or in an obscene manner. The state legislature has recently passed a law against using the telephone obscenely, and it carries a penalty of 5 years. It is rumored that this law was passed for the purpose of getting Negroes in the same or similar situation that Dean is now in.
> Several Negroes in this area report having received a series of threatening telephone calls.

I spoke with Paul Dean this morning after he was released. He was a bit shaken by the whole experience. Fortunately, the police did not pysically mistreat him. Dean said that they were fairly nice to him. In the late 1940s a Negro in Cleveland was arrested on a similar charge (he, too, had spoken with a white person on a telephone) and it ended up with him being killed - shot in the chest a few times by the police. Last Saturday night a drunken Negro man in Clarksdale was beaten by the police and hospitalized after he had been arrested in a cafe. (This incident about the Clarksdale man is not for publication.) Also, about two weeks ago the body of a 24 year old Negro man was found near Canton, Miss. The body was mutilated and apparently the man had been lynched. This sort of incident, including lynchings, are almost everyday occurrences in Mississippi.

Also enclosed are some newspaper clippings. Note that Aaron Henry had an indictment droped against him and that the indictment against the two Michigan students has been dropped. In that same article you will see underlined: "Walter Jones, violating real estate laws." I spoke with Mr. Jones on both of my trips here. It seems that about three years ago friends of his moved to Syracuse, N. Y., and asked him to rent their farm out for them. He did rent the farm out. This summer his lawyer informed him that this was illegal for an unlicensed person to do; so he then stopped doing it. Up to the time that his lawyer informed him of this he did not know that he was violating any law. So now the district attorney in Clarksdale had him indicted on this. No real estate brokers in Clarksdale have said anything on this. Mr. Jones successfully registered a few years ago, and has had a lot of trouble since then (but every Negro down here always has trouble; this is no exaggeration) and it appears that the district attorney will do all he can to have Mr. Jones convicted.

More information on the morality test: if you aren't permitted to register by the circuit clerk, you do not know whether or not it was because of the morality test because the decision as to who registers is completely in the hands of the circuit clerk; and he usually never says why you can't register.

I watched the people for a while yesterday passing out clothing and food in Clarksdale. There was a pregnant woman there who has 3 children (aged 8, 5, 2) and her husband has deserted her. She has no income, does not get welfare or commodities and the only way she and her family have been able to eat lately is that her neighbors have given her food. She has not even tried to get welfare, and she hasn't tried to register. There is almost an attitude of "What's the use?" expressed by her. And this just goes to show one of the effects that this system has had on people. She and her children have only one bed to sleep on.

I visited the Coahoma County hospital in Clarksdale. This 3-storey hospital (built about 1955) is segregated, of course, as everything is in this state. The first floor is for Negroes, and the other two for whites. Operating room and such things are shared. There are separate entrances and lobbies. Only the first floor has Negro nurses. Many of the Negro patients are given attention because there are these Negro nurses. The meals are different for Negroes and whites; and recently a Negro minister had trouble getting the diet in the hospital that his doctor had prescribed for him. If you telephone this hospital for information on a Negro patient and you use a title of respect (such as Mr. or Mrs. or Rev.) the hospital switchboard operator will not put your call through.

The two local groups (headed by Aaron Henry and Amzie Moore) now understand pretty well what Operation Freedom is trying to do in the way of loans. Actually processing loan applications is and will be a slow affair, for these groups have so much else to do. I have found that it takes time to gather information, take photos, travel, etc. There is so much here that needs to be done; it would literally take thousands of people to do it all.

It was too cold to take outside photos today. Sitting in one farm shack today I had to keep my coat on. Nothing has been done yet about the tents at Brownsville, Tenn. I will do that tomorrow. I was in LeFlore County today. Will send information on that in a day or two.

Justice Dept. Voter Suits Are Fought In Many State Counties

Miss. Resist

FORREST COUNTY

The U. S. Supreme Court Monday rejected Mississippi's appeal to overrule a court order permitting the Justice Department to inspect Forrest County voter records.

The court order was issued by the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans based on the 1960 Civil Rights Act.

Attorneys for Forrest County Circuit Clerk Theron Lynd January 3 asked the Circuit Court to clear Lynd of contempt charges filed by the Justice Department under the Civil Rights Act of 1957.

Ask Jail For Lynd

In the first action of this kind, the Justice Department asked the court to jail Lynd for 45 days and to direct him to register 43 Negroes "illegally denied registration."

In November, the Supreme Court refused to review a Circuit Court order telling Lynd to register Negro applicants without discrimination. Thus the non-discrimination order continued to stand.

The Court of Appeals ruled to permit inspection of the voter records July 11 when it reversed District Judge Harold Cox's January decision that the case was dead.

The Justice Department told the Supreme Court that it had already inspected some of the Forrest County records, but de-

Lawyer Held At Jackson

Miss. Rev. B. Kem P-A p. 2

JACKSON, Feb. 1 (AP)—Police tonight arrested William L. Higgs, 28-year-old civil rights attorney, on charges of contributing to the delinquency of a minor.

Detective Chief M. B. Pierce said Higgs was taken into custody after a 16-year-old white boy signed an affidavit accusing Higgs of unnatural sexual acts.

Higgs, a white attorney, has handled several civil rights cases and has been counsel for the State Civil Rights Advisory Committee. He was one of five lawyers for James Meredith. Higgs also intiated campaigns for the first two Negro congressional candidates in the state since reconstruction. Both lost last year.

Earlier today, Higgs filed Federal court action here seeking an order to direct University of Mississippi registrar Robert Ellis to admit Dewey Greene, 22, another Negro, under terms of the Meredith desegregation order, and to ask that Ellis be held in contempt of court for refusing Greene admission.

Bond was set at $500 on the misdemeanor. Pierce said the trial was set tentatively for Feb. 11 before Hinds County Judge Russell Moore, who heard the "Freedom Rider" cases last year on appeal.

The youth was turned over to juvenile authorities. Police identified him only as a runaway "from a Northern state."

Two policemen arrested Higgs at the office of the Mississippi Free Press, a weekly newspaper published by civil rights advocates.

Higgs was named last week as the winner of the 1963 Florida Lasker Civil Liberties Award by the administrators in New York. He was scheduled to receive the $1000 award at a dinner in New York Feb. 12.

Tallahatchie County Told To Stop Poll Tax Discrimination

The U. S. Court of Appeals in New Orleans has issued an order to end discrimination against Negroes seeking to pay poll taxes in Tallahatchie County, Mississippi.

The order by the 5th Circuit Court reversed the ruling of federal district Judge Claude Clayton who said that the injunction was not necessary. Clayson called efforts by Negroes to pay their poll taxes "superficial at best."

However, the appeals court said that affidavits, which Clayton refused to admit, showed that Negroes had been denied the right to pay poll taxes for years. Mrs. Birdie Keglar of Charleston said that she had attempted to pay the taxes "to the sheriff's office since about 1951, but they have never allowed me to pay it."

Sheriff Elliot Dogan has ruled that Negroes wishing to pay poll taxes must see him personally. The court ruled that this constituted discrimination because few, if any, whites were required to see the sheriff.

There are about 6,400 Negroes and 5,000 whites of voting age in Tallahatchie County. Until this year, no Negroes were ever registered to vote there.

The Court of Appeals overruled Clayton's decision that an emergency did not exist to warrent the injunction. It said that when the injunction was first requested the final day for paying the poll tax, February 1, 1962, was approaching. In ordering Clayton to issue a preliminary injunction at once, the appeals court said that the February 1, 1963 deadline was about to be reached.

Attorneys for Mississippi had said that the Negroes who tried to pay poll taxes hadn't registered or attempted to register to vote. However, the higher court said that the federal voting law applies to the entire voting process.

COAHOMA COUNTY BRANCH NAACP

THE PAYING OF POLL TAXES WENT AT A FAST CLIP THE LAST TWO WEEKS OF FEBRUARY, SLIGHTLY LESS THAN IN 1962; HOWEVER, WE ARE STILL HANDICAPPED BY THE PERSONELL OF THE SHERIFFS OFFICE REFUSING TO PERMIT NEGROES TO PAY POLL TAXES FOR OTHER NEGROES, WHILE THERE IS NO RESTRICTION ON WHITES PAYING POLL TAXES FOR OTHER WHITES. THE OBSERVATION OF WHITES PAYING POLL TAXES FOR OTHER NEGROES IS SUPPORTED BY AFFADAVITES; WHICH WILL RESOLVE THIS MATTER LEGALLY IN THE NEAR FURURE. IT IS OUR CONTENTION THAT IT IS ABSOLUTELY LEGAL TO PAY POLL TAXES FOR ANOTHER PERSON JUST AS ANYONE MAY SEND ANOTHER PERSON TO PAY HIS PROPERTY TAX. IF WE ARE WRONG WE APOLOGIZE, BUT FROM WHERE WE SIT NOW, WE FEEL WE ARE BEING DISCRIMMINATED AGAINST AND WILL SEEK OUR DAY IN COURT.

THE DECISION NOT TO PROCEED WITH PETITION TO DESEGREGATE THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS IN CLARKSDALE AND COAHOMA COUNTY AT THIS TIME WAS BASED UPON THE ACADEMIC ATTAINMENT OF THE MAJORITY OF THE TWENTY STUDENTS INVOLVED. OUR SUGGESTION TO THEM AND OTHERS IS TO STUDY HARD THIS SEMESTER, GET YOUR GRADES TO "G" AND "S", THEN YOU CAN COUNT ON THE SUPPORT OF THE NAACP ALL THE WAY. AT THIS BEGINNING POINT IT IS ABSLOUTELY NECESSARY THAT STUDENTS WITH THE HIGHEST ACADEMIC ATTAINMENT BECOME INVOLVED. SORRY TO THOSE WHO WERE DISSAPPOINTED, BUT WE HOPE AND FEEL THAT YOU UNDERSTAND.

DISCRIMMINATION AT THE LOCAL GREYHOUND BUS STATION HAS BEEN CHARGED IN SEVERAL AFFADAVITS LAST WEEK. THESE CHARGES ARE BEING INVESTIGATED BY THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION, THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT AND THE GREYHOUND COMPANY ITSELF. IF AT ANYTIME YOU ARE DENIED THE RIGHT TO USE ANY TICKET WINDOW, WAITING ROOM, REST ROOM, CAFE OR ANY FACILITY IN THE GREYHOUND BUS STATION OR THE ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD, BE SURE TO FILL OUT AN AFFADAVIT AND FILE IT WITH THE LOCAL BRANCH OF THE NAACP, WE WILL SEND IT ON WHERE GOOD RESULTS ARE GUARANTEED.

Mississippi Votes To Reapportion

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—Mississippi voters Tuesday overwhelmingly approved changes in the number of legislators each county can elect—the first reapportionment in 73 years.

Reversing the trend against the cities that has held for decades, voters gave a five-and one half to one edge to the constitutional amendment.

With about 80 per cent of the vote unofficially tabulated, only five counties rejected the amendment.

The vote late Tuesday with 1,350 of 1,859 precincts reported was: for 82,409; against 14,449.

PRIMARY POLITICKING

The new apportionment completely changes the political setup for many of Mississippi's lawmakers. And, the change comes only days before politicking begins for the early summer Democratic and Republican primaries for most state offices.

Politicians had sought the reapportionment for several decades. Recently a Gulf coast group went to the courts in quest of the shift of seating, which they said would end rural domination of politics.

The political change is very evident. For example, Hinds County would have nine representatives and Marshal County only one with Benton County. Now Marshall has three representatives and Hinds three and one half.

BARNETT ELATED

Gov. Ross Barnett said he was "highly elated" over the amendment approval.

"This is a step in the right direction where the legislators and the people decide issues," he added.

Barnett said, as he did before, he would definitely call a special session Feb. 25 to set up seats in the House, allowing candidates to run from separate districts where counties elect more than one legislator.

Previously, Barnett warned the Legislature would not attempt to draw up a new apportionment if turned down in this election.

UP TO COURTS

"It will probably be up to the courts to make a decision," the governor said then.

The amendment sets up a 122-member House and a 52-member Senate.

Voters last November turned down a reapportionment plan calling for an 82-member Senate and 140-member House by a margin of 3 to 2.

At present, the Legislature has a 140-member House and 49-member Senate.

Reporter Fined $100

GREENWOOD, Miss., Feb. 11 (UPI)—Jet Magazine reporter Lawrence Still of Chicago was fined $100 today after being convicted on a charge of driving while intoxicated.

However, he appealed the city court conviction to LeFlore County Court and posted $500 appeal bond.

The sentence was passed by City Judge Ormond Kimbrough following trial here. Still was represented by Negro Atty. R. Jess Brown of Jackson.

Still was arrested and jailed on the drunken driving charge Thursday. He was released a short time later on his own recognizance.

Still was here to cover the distribution of food collected in Chicago for Negroes in LeFlore and Sunflower Counties.

It was erroneously reported that Still's release last Thursday was obtained by Fred Witty, a local white attorney. Witty said he conferred with the Negro, but did not take his case.

Sheriff Must Take Poll Tax From Negroes

file Miss. Resist.

NEW ORLEANS — (UPI) — The U. S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals ruled recently the sheriff of Tallahatchie County, Miss., had to accept poll tax payments from Negroes.

At the request of the U. S. Justice Department, the court reversed a decision by U. S. District Judge Claude Clayton of Tupelo, Miss., who refused to issue an order directing sherrif Ellet Dogan to accept Negro poll tax payments.

Government attorneys claimed Negroes were forced to meet tougher requirements than whites in Tallahatchie County. Clayton had contended Negro efforts to pay the tax were superficial and did not "carry the hallmark of bona fide efforts."

The appeals court directed Judge Clayton to issue the order requested by the federal attorneys.

Mississippi state law requires that poll taxes be paid by Feb. 1, two years prior to voting in an election. The government sought authority for Negroes to pay taxes for 1962, 1963 and 1964.

The three judges sitting on the panel that rendered Saturday's decision were circuit judges Richard T. Rives of Montgomery, Ala., and John Minor Wisdom of New Orleans and District Judge William Bootle, of Macon, Ga.

First GOP Is Elected To Mississippi's Assembly

MERIDIAN, Miss. (AP)—Lewis L. McAllister became the first Republican elected to the Mississippi General Assembly since Reconstruction days Tuesday.

McAllister, 30, an accountant, polled 3,086 votes in a runoff to 2,298 for his Democratic opponent, Dennis Goldman, 26, an attorney, in a race for the House of Representatives from Lauderdale County.

McAllister and Goldman, one of three Democrats seeking the post, ran first and second in the Feb. 5 election. The election was called to choose a successor to former Rep. Natie Caraway who resigned when he moved to Jackson to join a law firm.

"This is an indication of a trend toward a two-party state and a two-party South," said McAllister, who described himself as a Goldwater Republican.

Rep. Diggs Asks Food Inquiry

file Miss. Resist.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27 (UPI) — Rep. Charles C. Diggs Jr., (D.-Mich.), asked three cabinet members today to investigate reports that Negroes in two Mississippi counties cannot get surplus food because they tried to register for voting.

Diggs requested government action in telegrams to Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy, Agriculture Secretary Orville L. Freeman, and Anthony J. Celebrezze, secretary of Health Education and Welfare.

The Michigan congressman said he had received enough evidence "to establish probable cause" that Negroes in Leflore County were being blacklisted.

Diggs said Tallahatchie has also discontinued its non-public assistance Federal food program.

Welfare Head Says Integration Workers Use Pease Corps Gimick

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — State Welfare Commissioner Fred Ross says three Negro integration workers at Greenville, Miss., represented themselves as "a part of the domestic peace corps."

He said Friday he asked the FBI to investigate their claims.

Ross said the report came to him from the Washington County welfare office at Greenville after the three Negroes had inquired about the commodity distribution program.

He identified the three as James Foreman of Atlanta, Charles Cobb of Springfield, Mass., and Jess Harris of Jackson.

They are members of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee, which has been conducting Negro voter registration campaigns in Mississippi.

At Washington, a government spokesman said the domestic peace corps was still only a study group, that it has no official staff, and has nobody in the field.

Negro Shot To Death, Probe On

TCHULA -- A 20-year-old Negro was shot and killed here yesterday afternoon and local and county authorities said 'we are still investigating."

County authorities said a statement would be made later this afternoon.

The victim was Willie Joel Lovett, a Tchula Hardware Co. employee. He was apparently shot near his home in the Coxtown section about 6:30 p.m.

A complaint filed with the U. S. Department of Justice said that Lovett was killed by a "local law enforcement officer,' and two federal Bureau of Investigation agents from Jackson were sent here to investigate.

Also investigating were Holmes County Chief Deputy Sheriff Andrew P. Smith and Tchula Town Marshal W. O. Moore. Moore declined to say who fired the gun that killed Lovett 'at this time." He refused to give any details of the incident except to say that 'Lovett was blind, crazy drunk.'

He said the Negro wasn't armed "as far as I know."

Both Moore and Smith said they hadn't talked to the FBI agents early this afternoon.

"They're still in the vicinity," Smith said.

JACKSON NEGROES SUSPEND PROTEST

Justice Department Seeks Accord During Respite

By HEDRICK SMITH
Special to The New York Times

JACKSON, Miss., June 17—Civil rights leaders suspended demonstrations today to allow tempers to cool in this city's racial crisis, following the violence of last Saturday.

The Justice Department, meanwhile, was reported working behind the scenes to produce some agreement that would satisfy Negroes sufficiently to delay further demonstrations.

One source expressed "guarded optimism" about the possibility of breakthrough, as a result of efforts by John Doar, a Justice Department civil rights attorney.

However, the source indicated that expected concessions from the city and from white business leaders would fall considerably short of the demands listed by Negro leaders last month.

Urges Moratorium

One local Negro leader, the Rev. S. L. Whitney, who was in Washington today for a conference with President Kennedy, telephoned associates here to urge a moratorium on demonstrations, to see if some settlement could be reached.

Adult Negro leaders were more receptive to the proposal than the younger Negroes who have been the actual participants in sit-ins and mass marches.

Willie B. Ludden, 25-year-old Southeastern regional youth field secretary for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, discounted the likelihood of an early agreement.

"We've sacrificed too much to accept anything less than what we asked for," he said. "It is definite that we're going to continue demonstrations, but on what scale or at what time is being decided now."

Mr. Ludden said he expected mass demonstrations to resume tomorrow.

Other sources said the Negro community was growing weary of the month-old civil rights struggle, in which there have been more than 900 arrests.

U. S. Acts to Block New Trial Of Six Negroes in Mississippi

By E. W. KENWORTHY
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 17 — The Federal Government brought suit today to halt the further prosecution of six Negro voter registration workers who were arrested in Winona, Miss., after using bus station facilities there.

A civil complaint was filed in Federal District Court in Oxford, Miss.

Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy, in announcing the action, charged Winona officials with making "baseless arrests" to discourage the six Negroes and others of their race from using the station's facilities.

The suit also seeks a permanent injunction against any similar conduct in the future by Winona officials.

There have been reports of police brutality in connection with the arrests, which occurred on June 9. Although the suit made no mention of such brutality, the Justice Department said the F. B. I. had these allegations "under active investigation."

The Negroes—one man and five women—were part of a group on its way by bus from Charleston, S. C., to Greenwood, Miss. The bus made a 20-minute rest stop in Winona.

After using the toilet facilities, five of the Negroes sat down at the lunch counter. Police Chief Thomas Herrod ordered them outside.

One of the Negroes, it was reported, protested that denial of the station facilities was against the law.

The Attorney General said that despite the fact that the Negroes "left and were standing peacably outside the terminal," they were arrested by Chief Herrod.

Soon afterward, Earl W. Patridge, county sheriff, arrested a Negro woman who had gone off the bus to see what was happening.

The six were jailed and two days later were convicted in City Police Court of disorderly conduct and resisting arrest.

The six were subsequently released on $100 appeal bonds. In order for an appeal to be carried to the state circuit court, a new trial would be required. It is this prosecution that the Justice Department seeks to block.

Mr. Kennedy said that the prosecution constituted "an unlawful and unconstitutional interference" with interstate commerce and the regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission promulgated in November, 1961. These forbid racial discrimination on buses and terminal facilities used in interstate commerce.

He also said the suit followed an unsuccessful effort by the Justice Department to persuade Winona officials to drop the prosecution voluntarily.

Early in 1962, Mayor Martin C. Billingsley of Winona assured the Justice Department that the city would not interfere with the I. C. C. regulations.

Mayor Billingsley sat as Police Justice on June 11 and convicted the Negroes.

The Negroes, all from Mississippi, are James West, Fannie Hamer, Annell Ponder, June Johnson, Rosemary Freeman and Euvester Simpson.

Suit Dismissed

WASHINGTON (AP)—A federal judge has dismissed a suit which sought to force the Justice Department to act against Mississippi officials who interfere with Negro voter registration efforts.

The suit, filed in federal district court in Washington, by seven Negroes and one white attorney who claimed they had been harassed and threatened, named Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy and FBI director J. Edgar Hoover as defendants.

Judge Luther Youngdahl dismissed the suit Tuesday on grounds that:

1. The courts must leave discretion to the Justice Department whether to act in civil rights cases "by means of prosecution, injunction, varying forms of persuasion or other types of action."

2. The suit failed to name any Mississippi officials against whom prosecution or arrest should be started.

Gas Grenade Tossed By Four Youths Here

Three white men and a 17 year-old youth were fined $100 and senced to 30 days today on a charge of disorderly conduct stemming from the throwing of a gas grenade at a Negro cafe Sunday night.

Judge O. L. Kimbrough heard each of four plead guilty to the charge. He said the 30 days sentence given to each would be suspended if the parents would make good on the cost of goods and damages done at the cafe.

One of the men, Chester C. Bond of Itta Bena, was told by the judge he would have to serve the 30 day sentence "because of his attitude."

Police chief Curtis Lary identified the men as Chester G. Bond, 20, of Itta Bena, Robert Lamar Anderson Jr., 19 , of San Antonio, Texas, who is visiting relatives in Moorhead and Fred M. Cook Jr., 18 of Moorhead. The fourth person is a 17-year-old youth from Itta Bena whose name was not released by the police.

Lary said the incident happened about 11 p.m. last night at Freeman Curry's place on Avenue G. The gas grenade was thrown from the car as it passed the cafe and landed on the sidewalk spewing gas.

"It did not land in the cafe, nor was anyone hurt," Lary said.

There were several Negroes in the cafe at the time and several on the street. When officers arrived they were given a description of the car bearing a Texas tag.

Within a short time the car was stopped on Main Street by the police and a Highway Patrol car. There were two men in the car when it was stopped, Lary said. When they searched the car they found on the front seat a pin that belonged in the gas grenade.

The two later admitted throwing the gas and implicated two others, the chief stated.

"They told us they were fooling around with the pin and happened to pull it out," Lary said. "When they found they couldn't get the pin back into the grenade they threw it."

Lary said the owner of the cafe Freeman Curry, has not in any way been involved in demonstrations here in the past.

"It appears they just threw the gas, not knowing where it was going."

The chief said he had not been able to find out where the men had obtained the gas. He said gas grenades are hard to come by and the police intend to question the men further to locate the source of the gas.

U.S. Accuses 5 Law Men Of Brutality

Justice Dept. Accuses Officers In Mississippi

WASHINGTON—(UPI) — The Justice Department Monday accused five men, including the sheriff and police chief of Winona, Miss., of beating and kicking five Negro prisoners in violation of federal civil rights law.

Atlanta Daily World 9-10-63

Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy said the charges were made in a seven-point criminal information filed in a federal court in Oxford, Miss.

Named as defendants were:

Earle Wayne Patridge, sheriff of Montgomery County, Miss., which includes Winona; Thomas J. Herod Jr., Winona chief of police; William Surrell, a Winona policeman; John L. Basinger, a state highway patrolmen, and Charles Thomas Perkins, a former state patrolman.

The five men were charged with beating—or directing other prisoners in the Montgomery County Jail to beat—five prisoners including three women, arrested in connection with a sit-in demonstration at a Winona bus terminal restaurant.

Kennedy said one count charged the five defendants with conspiring to deprive the Negroes of their constitutional rights and another six counts charged specific beatings.

The five also were accused of forcing five of the Negroes to sign statements against their will. The information charged that the defendants violated a federal law banning any action by law enforcement officers to deprive any one of his constitutional rights.

Maximum penalty for each of the five defendants would be seven years in prison and a $7,000 fine if they were convicted of all charges against them.

Injunction Issued In Clarksdale

CLARKSDALE, Miss. (AP) — Representatives of the National Council of Churches today faced a temporary injunction here against demonstrations in connection with a civil rights crusade.

City officials late Monday rejected a request for a meeting to discuss civil rights issues.

Mayor W. S. Kincade told the representatives "you propose in the event that we do not agree with you on the manner in which the affairs of Clarksdale should be handled" demonstrations would occur.

The mayor said officials were "not adverse to meeting and discussing racial problems" with local leaders or those "who might have some contribution to offer to a solution of the problems, but neither you nor any of your associates fall into any one of these categories."

Application for the court order was made before Chancery Judge William Bizzell of nearby Cleveland. Aaron Henry, state president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said Monday night he had been served notice of the injunction.

Henry said the injunction named him and Dr. Martin Luther King, the integration leader who is due in this Mississippi Delta city today.

City authorities said about a dozen persons were named, including several ministers representing the National Council of Churches who are here in connection with the civil rights crusade. Names of the individuals involved bere not available.

King is scheduled to address a Negro rally tonight.

Thomas Gaither of the Congress of Racial Equality said last week he expected King's appearance might touch off demonstrations.

The National Council of Churches, in a recent statement of policy, said it looked with favor on demonstrations for civil rights.

Henry said attorneys would study the injunction today and if they considered it binding "we will honor it until we can have it dissolved."

Suit Filed Today Against Winona

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Justice Department filed suit today aimed at desegregating a bus terminal in Winona, Miss., and halting further prosecution of six Negroes arrested at the terminal June 9.

Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy said a civil complaint was filed in U.S. District Court in Oxford, Miss.

Prosecution of the five women and one man, the department said, is an unlawful and unconstitutional interference with interstate commerce and regulations forbidding racial discrimination.

Named as defendants were the city of Winona, Mayor Martin C. Billingsley, Police Chief Thomas Herrod, and Montgomery County Sheriff Earl Patridge.

The suit asked the court to forbid the defendants to interfere in any way with Negroes' use of the terminal.

The six Negroes were convicted June 11 and released on $100 bond.

The department said the suit was filed after government efforts to obtain voluntary action failed.

It gave this account of the case.

The six Negroes were in Winona on a brief rest stop during a bus journey to Greenwood, Miss. from Charleston, S.C. five entered the terminal restaurant, but were ordered to leave by Police Chief Herrod.

They left and were standing outside the terminal when Herrod arrested them. Immediately afterwards Sheriff Patridge arrested the sixth Negro who had not entered the restaurant.

The department said Mayor Billingsley gave the department assurances in 1962 that Win na would not interfere with regulations forbidding racial discrimination in interstate commerce.

The department said Mayor Billingsley gave the department as would not interfere with regulations forbidding racial discrimination in interstate commerce.

A Justice Department spokesman said the FBI is investigating brutality in connection with the Winona arrests.

The six Negroes are James West. Fannie Hamer, Annell Ponder, June Johnson, Rosemary Freeman, and Euvester Simpson.

Registrars Must Show Vote Records

WASHINGTON (AP)—Supreme Court Justice Hugo Black has declined to delay a lower court order that seven Mississippi county voter registrars must open their decords for federal inspection.

He refused Friday to hold up a 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruling of July 3 that the registrars should make their records available to the Justice Department.

Justice Black said the order was applicable under the 1960 Civil Rights Act.

The counties involved are Adams, Jefferson, Jones, Lamar, Madion, Noxubee and Wilkinson.

In a brief ruling Black said the records for federal inspection. available to the attorney general under the 1960 Civil Rights Act.

The registrars, Black said, contend that this act violates the Fifth Amendment requirement of due process and its guarantee against compelled self-incrimination.

They also contend, he said, that the act violates the sixth amendment's assurances "that one accused of crime must be confronted by the witnesses against him and must enjoy the right to trial by jury."

The registrars contend that if they are compelled to produce the records now the case will become moot and they will be deprived of an opportunity to have their constitutional claims determined by a court.

On the other hand, Black continued, the U.S. Solicitor General in opposing the stay denied that there is any substantial basis for any of the constitutional challenges.

The solicitor general, Black said, points out that a statewide primary is to be held in Mississippi Aug. 6 and that if the appeal court ruling were to be stayed the results might be "a wrongful state refusal based solely on race to permit many qualified voters to vote in the primary."

Black said he agreed with the solicitor general that under the circumstances the constitutional questions raised by the registrars are not sufficiently substantial "to justify my upsetting the order of the court of appeals.

'That order does not require movants (the registdars) to testify before any office official, or agency, but only requires them to make available to the attorney general or his representative, under fair and reasonable conditions, records of which movants are not the owners but are only custodians for the state or its agencies.' Black said.

He added that the court has uniformly held that a person who is a mere custodian of records cannot invoke the Fourth or Fifth Amendments to resist an order directing that they produce such records.

The county registrars involved include:

R. Appleton Owen, Jefferson County; Leonard B. Caves, Jones County; J. E. McDavid, Noxubee; A. V. David Jr., Adams; R. Whitaker, Wilkinson; Mrs. John Mikell, Marion, and Talmidge S. Saucier, Lamar.

Dear Mr. Owens:

Enclosed you will find descriptions of what happened when two black citizens of Hattiesburg went to the Circuit Clerk's Office.

Both Mrs. Ariel Barnes and Mrs. N. E. Hall filled out applications for registration on the 17th of July, 1963. They were told, after the thirty three days waiting period, that their applications for registration were "incomplete."

Our understanding of the court order issued by the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals against Theron C. Lynd on the 15th of July, 1963 is that the registrar should cease rejecting the applications of Negro applicants on the grounds that they have made an error or omission on their forms; and that if there were any deficiencies on their applications, the applicant should be notified of the deficiency at the time the applicant fills out the application.

Would you advise us as to whether or not this action by Registrar Lynd's Office is a violation of the court order, and if so, take appropriate action.

On the 17th of July, 1963, Mrs. Ariel Barnes, of 222 Union Street, Hattiesburg, Mississippi, went to the office of Theron C. Lynd, registrar and circuit clerk of Forrest County, to fill out an application for registration. When Mrs. Barnes had filled out the form, Registrar Lynd signed it and took it. Mrs. Barnes then left the office.

Mrs. Barnes returned to the office after the specified waiting period of thirty three days on the 19th of August, 1963. She was told by one of Lynd's assistants that her form was "incomplete." Mrs. Barnes then asked what was incomplete. The assistant told her that she was not allowed to say what was incomplete, but she did say that Mrs. Barnes could make another application. Mrs. Barnes then left the office.

On the 17th of July, 1963, Mrs. H. E. Hall, of 216 Union Street, Hattiesburg, Mississippi, went to the office of Theron C. Lynd, county registrar and circuit clerk of Forrest County, to fill out an application for registration. When Mrs. Hall had filled out the form, Registrar Lynd signed and folded it. Mrs. Hall then left the office.

Mrs. Hall returned to the office after the specified waiting period of thirty three days on the 20th of August, 1963. She was told by one of Lynd's assistants that her form was "incomplete." Mrs. Hall then left the office.

Where Right to Vote Could Work Wonders

Ark. Gazette 2-28

NO SUSTAINABLE argument can be raised against the fact finding of the Civil Rights Commission in its report that voting suits, filed by the Justice Department, have failed to provide "prompt and adequate" remedy for the disfranchisement of Negroes.

After five years of Justice's litigation it is still necessary to look only to Mississippi where most of the Negro population, constituting more than 40 per cent of the whole, is systematically deprived of the right to vote. The principal device used in Mississippi is the literacy test, which, if theoretically justifiable, is patently unconstitutional in its application by Mississippi officialdom.

In perspective, and in fairness to the South, it is necessary to note that, outside of Mississippi, the deprivation of voting rights is a diminishing evil. In a number of Southern states it cannot be considered a major problem. Certainly it isn't in Arkansas, or Florida, or Tennessee, or North Carolina. Georgia, too, is apparently rather clean on the voting count. The need for remedies arises principally from two or three states.

Alabama is probably the second worst offender but, in any case, Mississippi all by itself offers justification for stringent and forceful measures in Congress.

THREE MEASURES are proposed by the Civil Rights Commission, on voting, and the greatest controversy attaches to a proposal that states disfranchising Negroes should have their representation in the lower House of Congress reduced accordingly. Such a provision is in the Constitution already but it has not been implemented. Whatever the practical merits of the plan, the issues are largely academic because of the adequacy of two other measures endorsed by the Commission and incorporated in the President's civil rights bill.

These two measures haven't gotten much public attention lately, as the right to vote has moved out of the limelight. What they would do is, in effect, to eliminate Mississippi's abominable practice of testing "literacy" and to set up federal voting registrars who would register Negroes on application when they were discriminated against, pending a court determination.

Congress should enact these two measures and the administration should then put them into effect, using whatever steps are necessary. Mississippi has built, as we have observed previously, what is close to a sovereign police state within the United States. The power of the state government is supported by the extra-legal force of the White Citizens Councils, which correspond roughly to the ruling party in a totalitarian state. Segregation remains almost as absolute as ever: In the public schools and universities there is not a single desegregated institution, now that James Meredith has been graduated from the University of Mississippi and his successor, as the lone Negro in attendance, has been expelled.

ATTENTION to voting rights has been a bit out of fashion recently, but it remains fundamental to the whole drive for equal rights and opportunity. This is true especially in Mississippi where a thoroughgoing enfranchisement of Negroes would give them such strength in the elections that the other reforms might come more swiftly than anywhere else in the South. Mississippi is the most intransigent in refusing to make its peace with law and justice, yet with the establishment of the voting right Mississippi could undergo a startling transformation. Little progress, conversely, is likely in that state until the voting right is undergirded with the forceful provisions advanced in the President's civil rights bill.

Rider Cases

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—The Mississippi Supreme Court studied today appeals of convicted "Freedom Riders," including the case of James Farmer, national director of the Congress of Racal Equality.

Opposing attorneys argued the breach of peace charges Monday which had been filed against the more than 300 freedom riders who came into Jackson during 1961 to test segregation in transportation facilities.

The defense contended the arresting officers exceeded their authority when they arrested the demonstrators.

Negro attorney R. Jess Brown of Jackson told the state high court the seven riders whose cases came before the court on appeal were behaving properly.

Also included in the seven cases Monday, besides Farmer, 44, whose group sponsored the Freedom Riders, was Peter M. Ackerberg of New York, 24, who is white.

Bob Nichols of Jackson, a city prosecutor who represented the state, said the breach of peace statute could be used when a breach of peace seemed imminent.

"There is a limit on the authority of an officer, he is not arresting officer, judge and jury," Brown said.

To be valid a breach of peace conviction must involve a crowd in a place of business, a disorder or impending disorder, and an order to move being disobeyed, Nichols said.

Each of the seven cases, Nichols said, met the test.

The Jackson attorney also said the appeals were prepared by a New York law group which planned to go into federal court if the defendants lost in the State Supreme Court.

Hattiesburg Courthouse Is Picketed

HATTIESBURG, Miss. (AP) —Negroes began a mass effort to register as voters at this south Mississippi city today.

About 40 pickets—white people and Negroes—marched outside the two-story red brick court house in a light rain while the Negroes went into the voter registrars office.

There were no signs of trouble.

A crowd of about 100 persons stood across the street, watching quietly.

There was one arrest late in the morning. Police arrested Robert Moses, an official of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee, on a charge of breach of the peace. Officers said they told Moses to move on and he didn't do it.

As the crowd grew, many of the stores in the area around the court house closed their doors to business, and police late in the morning blocked off a two-block section of Main Street to traffic.

Police were much in evidencc. Officers mingled with the crowd of onlookers. Other officers stood along the curb of the sidewalk where the pickets marched.

Inside, Theron Lynd, the voter registrar who only a few months ago was held in criminal contempt of a federal court on charges of racial discrmination, received the line of Negroes.

Each of the Negroes received an application and a pencil.

Lynd and his deputies handled the Negro applicants four and five at a time.

The pickets on the sidewalk outside the court house carried placards. One read: 'Freedom Day — January 22." Another said: "Let My People Vote."

Hattiesburg, the seat of Forrest County, is a city of about 35,000 population — the business center of south Mississippi.

No figures were available on the number of Negroes on the registration rolls.

Lynd is circuit clerk and, as such, doubles as voter registrar in Mississipis system of qualifying voters.

Voter applicants are required to pass tests demonstrating such things as literacy and ability to understand a portion of the Constitution.

Federal courts issued an injunction some time ago ordering Lynd not to discriminate against Negroes trying to register as voters.

Lynd later was cited — and convicted — for criminal contempt by the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans, which declared he had violated the court's orders.

At the same time, the court directed Lynd to register 42 Negroes. The court declared them qualified.

Lynd told newsmen he already had registered the 42 who came in with the backing of the federal court.

In addition, he said, his office has processed a number of applications — from both Negroes and whites — and that there has been the usual number of rejections — again, both Negroes and whites.

No Clues Found In Mississippi Murder Issue

LIBERTY, Miss. — (ANP) — Sheriff Daniel Jones said here last week he had failed to find "a single clue" in the shotgun slaying of a Negro who had seen a white man shoot another Negro active in a voter registration drive.

"I've interviewed a lot of people but haven't come up with a thing yet" the sheriff said.

The body of Louis Allen, 44, was found early Saturday morning, Feb. 1 by his teenage son. He was dead from three shotgun blasts, two in his head. The sheriff said several neighbors heard the shots but "thought nothing of it." He said Allen was killed as he stepped from his log truck to open a gate 150 yards from his house. The sheriff estimated the shots were fired from 30 yards away.

"I've known Allen for years" the sheriff said. "He was not involved in any civil rights activities."

Allen was a witness in the fatal shooting of Herbert Lee, a 52-year-old farmer gunned down outside a Liberty cotton gin in 1961. Lee was one of several Negroes active in a Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) vote drive. Allen later admitted to SNCC workers he had been forced to lie at a coroner's jury investigating the slaying which set free E. H. Hurst, a white man, then a member of the State Legislature. SNCC has asked the United States Department of Justice to investigate the murder.

Police Arrest White Minister In Hattiesburg Demonstration

HATTIESBURG, Miss. (AP)—Police arrested a white minister taking part in a Negro voter demonstration today and charged him with assault and battery an interfering with a policeman.

The arrest came a day after officers had arrested a Negro civil rights leader, also in the vote drive, and charged him with contributing to the delinquency of a 13-year-old Negro girl.

Police said the girl skipped school. They found her in a demonstration outside the courthouse.

Negroes have been conducting a registration drive since last Saturday in Forrest County. Over 150 Negroes have taken tests so far.

Arrested were:

—Rev. Roy George Smith, 29, Boulder, Colo. He is affiliated with the disciples of Christ and United Churches of Christ.

—Lawrence Guyot Jr., 24, Hattiesburg, area field secretary for the student non-violent coordinating committee. SNCC is one of the groups sponsoring the vote drive.

Officers said Rev. Smith pushed and shoved Sgt. Alfred Creel while police were trying to erect a barricade in front of the courthouse to permit people to enter.

Bond was set at $125. Smith did not immediately post it and was confined to the city jail.

Authorities said Guyot was arrested late Monday. An investigation disclosed the girl left for school early Tuesday and did not return home until she was found Friday by her mother and a youth counselor in the demonstration, authorities said.

Prosecutors said the child had not gone to school during that time and had been living in "makeshift quarters" without knowledge or consent of her mother.

Guyot's arraignment, originally scheduled Tuesday, was postponed until Wednesday after Guyot said he had not yet gotten a lawyer.

Bond was set at $1,000. It was not posted.

Down The Middle

BILOXI, Miss. (AP)—Wilbur Ward, George County clerk of court and registrar of voters, said in federal court Tuesday he would "afford equal treatment to everyone regardless of race or color" in vote registration matts.

Ward, called as an adverse witness, was one of 44 to testify in the two-day trial.

He and the state of Mississippi were co-defendants in the case in which the federal government alleged discrimination on account of race.

The suit originally named Eldred W. Green, who was succeeded as court clerk and voter registrar by Ward on Jan. 6. U.S. Dist. Judge Harold Cox last week signed an order substituting Ward as defendant.

Judge Cox gave attorneys 15 days in which to submit written briefs.

County With 72 Per Cent Negro Population Tense

CANTON, Miss. — (UPI) — Reinforced units of police, some armed with shotguns and wearing blue helmet liners, maintained a cautious guard Friday while about 250 Negroes staged an orderly voter registration march on the local courthouse.

The Negroes marched singlefile from a church, and when they arrived at the Madison County Courthouse they were permitted to file through the building one by one. They were handed voter registration forms inside the building.

Police at the state capitol at Jackson, 20 miles to the south, stood ready to move into Canton upon request, but Canton police—backed up by sheriff's deputies and auxilliary officers—kept the situation under control.

A spokesman for the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE), which sponsored the march, estimated there were fewer than 300 Negroes registered in Madison County, whose population of 32,904 is about 72 per cent Negro.

Police halted some of the marchers and ordered them to keep 30-yard intervals to keep from interfering with traffic. Then the marchers, who walked quietly and carried no signs, were permitted to continue.

Mississippi Cities May Assist Others With Demonstrators

JACKSON, Miss. — (UPI) The way was cleared Wednesday for the cities of Jackson and nearby Canton to pool their police power in dealing with a mass racial demonstration threatened in Canton Friday.

A bill rushed to completion in the Mississippi legislature and immediately signed into law by Gov. Paul B. Johnson gave municipalities authority to enter into such "mutual assistance pacts."

Jackson has been steadily strengthening its police force in recent months and has laid in an added supply of gas masks, shotguns and helmets. The city also recently purchased a $15,000 tank-line vehicle designed especially before riot control.

Mayor Allen Thompson made clear Wednesday that these facilities will be available to Canton upon request.

Canton is located about 20 miles north of Jackson. It has a population of about 10,000 and is situated in a farming area that has a heavy Negro population.

The Congress of Racial Equality CORE announced last week that Negroes would march en masse on the Madison County courthouse Friday in an attempt to register to vote.

CORE spokesman Ed Hollander amplied this Wednesday, saying about 200 persons are expected to participate in the march.

Hollander also disclosed the march would be "observed" by Norman Thomas, who ran for the presidency four time on the Socialist ticket, and 15 ministers. He said it would form at two churches Friday morning and then step off into the downtown section.

Government Files Canton Vote Case

Justice Says 'Undue Delay' In Registering

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department charged today officials of Madison County, Miss., are unduly delaying, discouraging and denying Negro attempts at voter registration.

The department sought a court order to prevent county registrar L. F. Campbell from continuing what it called his practice of processing Negro registrants on a one-at-a-time basis.

The civil voting suit, filed in the U.S. District Court at Jackson, names as defendants Campbell and the state of Mississippi.

Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy said the complaint asks the court to forbid the continuation of discriminatinatory registration and voting practices.

He said affidavits of a department lawyer and of Negro applicants state that Campbell, by processing Negroes one at a time, had forced several Negroes to stand in line while only seven a day are processed. This, the affidavits state, occurred last Friday and Saturday outside the county courthouse in Canton.

In the past, the suit says, Campbell has not applied the same one-at-a-time requirement to white applicants, and has registered as many as 49 white persons a day.

The department said that, of 10,366 adult Negroes in the county, only 152 are registered, while more than 5,000 of the 5,622 adult white persons are registered.

The complaint further charges that Negro applicants have been forced to meet stricter standards than white applicants, and have been discouraged from attempting to register or have been denied registration even though they are qualified.

The court set a hearing for Saturday at 9:30 a.m. on a request for a temporary restraining order forbidding Campbell to continue the practices with which he is charged.

BIGGEST CIVIL RIGHTS DEMONSTRATION IN MISSISSIPPI

Canton, Miss., March 2--Risking loss of jobs or other economic reprisals from a recently revived chapter of the White Citizens Councils, 350 prospective Negro voters marched to the Madison County courthouse in February 28 in the biggest civil rights demonstration to take place in Mississippi.

The day had been designated as Freedom Day by the Committee of Federated Organizations, a Mississippi joint group of civil rights organizations including CORE and SNCC. The demonstration climaxed a voter registration drive coordinated by Dave Dennis, who is a CORE field secretary and also assistant director of COFO.

The first 150 of the prospective voters marched in a body from Freedom House, the CORE-initiated community center here. The remaining 250, arriving from out-of-town by mule, horsecart and on foot, were halted by a barricade of city police but were permitted to proceed to the courthouse two-by-two. They swelled the original group and stood peacefully outside the courthouse throughout the day.

Police auxiliaries in blue helmets mounted a shotgun guard along the line of march, while sheriffs and deputies from Madison as well as surrounding counties patrolled the streets in white prowl cars. However, there was no violence and only one arrest, a Negro youth on probation for a case involving leaflet distribution.

Only 6 of the 350 prospective registrants got inside the courthouse to take the registration test. A seventh took the test next day, when some 50 applicants lined-up in front of the courthouse.

L.F. Campbell, the registrar, remains mum on registration statistics. But according to a U.S. Justice Department suit, in 1962, only 1.1% of the county's Negroes were registered as against 97% of the whites. Negroes constitute 72% of the county's population.

Groundwork for the Freedom Day demonstration was laid by staff of CORE field secretaries and Task Force workers. Daily street meetings and nightly mass meetings had been held in Madison and throughout the county. During the week of January 20-27, 17 leaders of the voter registration drive were arrested on various charges.

Delta in Distress

sissippi Negroes Are Being 'Hungried' Out

By LONNIE HUDKINS and O. D. WILSON

Houston churches have been asked to send food and clothing to Mississippi Delta area Negroes who claim they are victims of a plan to deliberately starve them out of the state.

The Negroes claim some of their people are literally starving because they can't find jobs and can't get welfare help.

They claim the head of the Mississippi State Welfare Deparment has set a policy to force them to leave the state.

HOW MUCH of this is true? The Houston Post sent a team of reporters to Mississippi to find out.

We found out that much of what the Negroes claim appears to be true. Some of their words seem to be exaggerated.

They are not being starved out. A better way to put it is that they are being "hungried" out of their state. We talked to many Negroes who were hungry but not to the starvation point.

State Welfare Director Fred A. Ross of Jackson told us he feels the federal government—if it wants to do something constructive—"should rehabilitate the Negroes and relocate them to other parts of the country."

IT IS HIS agency that administers the distribution of federal surplus commodities.

Negroes who are out of work and in need say they get enough commodities to last them only two weeks if their families are moderate in size. Large families complain that the commodities doled out to them are used up in about a week.

What do they do when the commodities run out?

"We makes do the best way we can," one Negro man told us. He said he goes many days on one meal a day and feels fortunate when he can have two meals a day.

"I have skipped a few days," he said.

The man said he had never tried to register to vote or applied for state relief money.

"What's the use?" he said.

THE MAN, a tractor driver on a cotton plantation, is just one of thousands of victims of a feudal system that still exists in Mississippi.

"When I work, I get $5 a day," he said.

By a day, he explained that he meant 10 to 12 hours of work. That would mean that he gets 40 to 50 cents an hour.

But his problem doesn't stop there. He stays in debt most of the year to his "boss man" and the "company store." By the time he is through paying back the charges against him by the boss man and the store, he is ready to start the cycle all over again.

HE LIVES in a small shanty with his wife and two children. The roof leaks. Cardboard and tin cover places in windows where glass used to be. A Houston slum house would look like a palace to him. For this, he pays back the boss man $360 a year. This includes utilities.

After he pays back all the charges against him, he may clear a couple of hundred dollars a year to spend on his family.

This man is one of the more fortunate Negroes in the fertile Mississippi Delta. He has a job when the weather permits.

AND YET, HE "does without." His basic problem is economic poverty. He doesn't want to leave Mississippi.

"I'm not trained to do anything but drive a tractor," he said. "I don't want to leave here. I never get enough ahead to go anyway. If I went somewhere else, I would just be in trouble there."

The man said all he wanted to do was stay home and be able to make a living.

But to weather the current economic storm, he, and Negroes like him, are asking the churches of Houston and other cities to just send them some food and clothing. They are not asking for money.

DELTA IN DISTRESS

Welfare Boss Wants Big Part of Negroes Relocated

By LONNIE HUDKINS
and O. D. WILSON

The man who heads the Mississippi Welfare Department wants 800,000 of the state's Negroes relocated to other parts of the nation.

Fred A. Ross of Jackson, commissioner of Mississippi's State Department of Public Welfare, told us, "There is every reason why the U.S. government should establish a rehabilitation and resettlement commission for colored people being displaced."

BY DISPLACED, Ross explained he meant people who have been forced out of work by automation and mechanization, the big economic problem that has created misery for a big portion of Mississippi's 915,000 Negroes.

Another problem tied in with the Mississippi Negroes' economic woes is that of his wanting to vote.

Ross, whose agency administers the distribution of federal surplus commodities to the needy people of his state, told us, "It does no good for the politicians to shed crocodile tears about the plight of the Negroes and then be blinded to the economic facts."

HE MAINTAINS that there are simply too many Negroes in the state for the number of jobs available to them in Mississippi. He further says that the majority of the state's Negroes are not trained to do any type of work except agricultural labor or menial tasks such as sweeping floors or mowing lawns.

"It is going to be a problem forever until they are relocated," he said. "We'll never solve this problem just by doling out money."

Ross, a sheriff and a state senator before he became director of the welfare department, said, "Up in the Eastern section of the country they are more advanced economically. They have the lion's share of industrial development."

He suggested cities like Detroit and New York and the state of Pennsylvania as good places to relocate Negroes from Mississippi.

"THE FEDERAL government should relocate them to a section of the country where they can earn their own living," he said.

Ross said, "More than half of the colored population is concentrated in 13 Southern States while the national average is 10.5 per cent."

When asked what he thought Mississippi's proportion of Negro population should be, Ross replied, "It's 42 per cent now but shouldn't be over 10.5 per cent."

He said "no one state can possibly solve the problem itself."

Negroes who live in Misssippi's rich Delta area claim that Ross is trying to starve them into leaving the state. They claim he does this by limiting aid and commodities given to them.

"IT'S NOT Christian to let him (meaning the Negro people) starve or his children, either," Ross said.

We found no actual starvation among Negroes in the Delta but we did find many who live with hunger as a daily part of their lives.

A Negro who lives in Bolivar County on a prosperous plantation just a few miles east of the Mississippi River told us, "I get commodities once a month. I can tote it." His family is small — only four people.

The Negro meant by "tote" that he could carry out his month's supply of food given to him at the commodity warehouse in Cleveland, Miss. His commodities did not include butter or sugar. He gets only three tins of meat to last a month.

TO REALLY find out about the plight of the Negroes, we went to a number of Negro plantation shanties to find out what the people had for their meals.

A meal to a destitute Negro in the Delta area can mean many things. We visited one shanty in which nine children and three adults lived. A Negro woman was busy preparing the one meal of the day. It was the Sunday meal.

"We are eating turnip greens today," she said. "I could do without myself, but the children . . ."

The woman told us she had five children who were of school age. She said two of them missed school quite a bit because they didn't have shoes.

Negroes like her are among the thousands in Mississippi who are seeking food and clothing from churches in Houston and other cities in order to just maintain a status quo in their battle against poverty.

Negroes Who Ask To Vote Sometimes Fired and Evicted

By LONNIE HUDKINS
and O. D. WILSON

There are thousands of Mississippi Negroes who are not voting. They are concerned about hunger pangs.

But there are others — a minority within the ranks of Mississippi's 915,000 Negro population — who do want the right to vote. They believe that voting is the only way they can get economic improvements for their race.

"The only hope we have is to get the power of the ballot," said Amzie Moore, 51-year-old post office janitor and a National Association for the Advancement of Colored People leader in Cleveland, Miss.

MOORE, an Air Force veteran of World War II, claims that fear among the whites that the Negroes would vote in blocks is coupled directly to the economic poverty among his race in the state, particularly in the Delta area in which he lives.

And he cites instances in which economic pressure has been applied to Negroes who registered or tried to register to vote.

We found that such pressures were indeed invoked on some Negroes who tried to register and that they were fired from their jobs.

Moore is one of the Negro leaders who has asked churches in Houston and other cities to provide food and clothing to some 2,000 Delta families he claims to be near starvation.

HE BLAMES their plight on mechanization and automation in eliminating their jobs and bare subsistence rations to force them to leave the state. He says this is tied in with fear of the Negro vote potential, particularly in counties like Bolivar, Sunflower and LeFlore, where the Negroes far outnumber whites.

We found cases in which Negroes were fired and forced to move from their plantation shanties because they had applied for voting registration. In one instance the "boss man" was waiting at the shanty of a Negro when he returned from town to apply for registration.

Moore claims the registrar or someone in the registrar's office obviously called the Negro's employer before he even got home.

But it's only a matter of a few days until the white community learns who the "troublemakers" are because under House Bill 822 that was passed by the Mississippi Legislature in 1962 any person who applies for registration is named in a legal notice in the newspaper.

"TAKE ME, for example," Moore relates. "They've done everything to me but shoot me. They got me fired from my post office job. (He got it back.) They fixed it so I couldn't get any credit."

But Moore is sticking by his guns.

"As citizens of this state, they (the Negro people) should be allowed to register and vote. They deserve the right to have an equal opportunity to make a living," he said.

Moore said the Negroes need

an equal opportunity to make a living," he said.

Moore said the Negroes need food and clothing to keep up the economic fight. "They're putting on terrific economic pressure to get you to leave or stop voter registration work," he said.

The Negro leader said that many of the Negroes — and some whites — are existing only because of the federal government commodities. But he claims the commodities have become a weapon of the white power structure because they are distributed under the administration of a man avowed in the belief that Mississippi's Negroes should be relocated to other states.

"PEOPLE TALK about Negroes as if they are some kind of commodity," Moore said.

Moore said that when a new industry moves into the area or the state, the Negroes are offered only janitorial or lawn care jobs. "We sweep," he said.

It is Moore's contention that the only way the Negro will get more federal surplus food doled out to him when he needs it, or training to be capable of handling a job other than sweeping a floor in industry, is through the ballot.

Moore said that less than 500 of the 13,000 or more Negroes over 21 in Bolivar County have applied for registration to vote.

"Many of them never go back to find out if they passed the test to vote because they are intimidated out of it," he said.

In Mississippi, a person — black or white — who applies for registration must pass a literacy test by copying a section of the state constitution. He must then interpret that section.

THE PERSON applying for registration also must write his understanding of the duties and obligations of citizenship under the constitutional form of government.

It is the circuit clerk who decides if an applicant has satisfactorily completed the registration test.

The circuit clerk in Cleveland for Bolivar County, Miss, is Mrs Walter Lewis.

"We make no comments to any reporter," she said about voter registration. We later learned that in Cleveland, a town of 10,149, only about 100 of its Negroes are allowed to vote.

Where To Send Parcels Of Food, Clothing for Needy

Persons wishing to contribute food or clothing to needy Negroes in the Mississippi Delta region should mail their parcels to either Amzie Moore, 614 Chrisman, Cleveland, Miss, or Mrs Fannie Lou Hamer, in care of I. Johnson, 820 Quiver, Ruleville, Miss.

The Negroes are not asking for money. Their main needs are canned goods and clothing and shoes for children.

No Negroes Starving in His County, Says Publisher

By LONNIE HUDKINS and O. D. WILSON

"I don't know of any Negro who has ever starved to death in Bolivar County," said Clifton L. Langford, editor and publisher of the Bolivar Commercial in Cleveland, Miss.

"We just wouldn't let it happen," he said.

"There's plenty of work here for Negroes, but a lot of them just don't want to work. They can mow lawns."

HE CRITICIZED the federal surplus commodities program and was suspicious of the motives of churches in other states that send food and clothing into this area to be distributed among the many Negroes who say they are going hungry in what they claim is a deliberate effort to starve them out of the area.

"That's just propaganda," said Deputy Sheriff Ben A. Bogy. "It's a downright lie. I do not know of anybody going hungry."

State Welfare Comimssioner Fred A. Ross said that 80 per cent of the aid to dependent children is distributed among Negroes, who comprise 42 per cent of the population.

"Ninety per cent of the property is owned by white people," Ross said, "and the whites pay 85 cents of every tax dollar."

YET, HE said, there are 8,000 more Negro children in grades 1 through 12 than whites, with the result that the Negroes are getting the lion's share while paying only 15 per cent of the cost.

"All they do is dish out some more tripe about rights. Instead of shedding large crocodile tears, needling, sitting in and sitting out, the government should give some thought to relocating the Negro," Ross said.

"The ideal American objective would be to provide an opportunity for them to earn a living," he said. "We'd be foolish to train them when we don't have the industry to put them in."

Amzie Moore, the Negro leader, feels differently. "If President Johnson really wants to declare war on poverty in the United States, he can fire the opening shots here in Mississippi."

UNTIL SUCH aid is forthcoming, Moore has asked churches in Houston and other parts of the nation to send food and clothing to the area.

The Negro population in Mississippi, both in numbers and in percentage of total population, has been declining.

In the 1930 census, the Negroes had 50.2 per cent of the population with 1,009,718. By the 1950 census the figures were 986,494 and 45.3 per cent. The latest census, in 1960, showed 915,743 Negroes for 42 per cent of the population.

Though the figures suggest that Negroes are leaving the state, Mrs Fannie Lou Hamer mer of Ruleville, in Sunflower County, said: "We're not going to leave." She distributes clothing to the most needy and food when she has it available.

MRS HAMER was fired from her job as a plantation worker the same day she applied for a voter registration. That was Aug 31, 1962.

Since then, she said, she has been shot at and beaten, and she said that she and her husband are frequently questioned by police.

Nevertheless, Mrs Hamer said, she has no hatred for the whites or any plans to leave. "What could we do if we left?" she asked. "All we want to do is stay here and be treated as decent human beings. We deserve the right to have equal opportunities to make a living and should be allowed to register to vote.

"The people who hate us are not only destroying us but are destroying themselves," she said.

ANOTHER Negro woman in Ruleville, Mrs Ruby Davis, said she tried to register to vote in August of 1962. She said her husband, Leonard, was fired from his job as a city trash worker as a result. He later was rehired.

Still another Negro leader, John Bradford, said he has been hit in the face with vegetables by passing white motorists and called dirty names. He predicted that in a few years, "There won't be any Negroes here but the very, very old and the very, very young."

It is too early to tell whether the Negroes appeal to churches, both white and Negro, in other parts of the country will be successful.

"Why shouldn't it be successful" Moore asked. "We send CARE pckages overseas, and there's a real nced right here."

Miss. Cops Raid Freedom Office, Nab 8

CANTON, Miss. -
Civil rights leaders said their "freedom office" here was raided by police and eight workers arrested.

Lois Chafee, representing the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) said city police came to the 'Freedom House" to inquire about a boycott of schools by Negro children. When a leader of the civil rights group was not present, officers laced the eight workers on the scene under arrest, Miss Chafee said.

City police were contacted about the incident and would neither confirm nor deny the arrests.

A CORE spokesman said the school boycott was first carried out Monday by students "sympathizing" with the current voter registration campaign. Many students stayed home again when they were asked to produce excuses telling where they were Monday, the spokesman said.

City Racial Target On March 25?

Greenwood Commw. 3/12/64 COFO

Greenwood may have a repeat performance of racial demonstrations here later this month according to two integration leaders.

The talk of the demonstrations came after a meeting last night in Jackson of the Council of Federated Organizations.

Aaron Henry, state president of the NAACP told a press conference after the meeting, 'our voter registration drive will extend into every county and we plan major activities in 27 towns."

Henry named as the "centers of activity," Holly Springs, Corinth, Batesville, Clarksdale, Cleveland, Greenwood, Indianola, Greenville, Starkville, Columbus, Yazoo City, Carthage, Canton, Vicksburg, Meridian, Jackson, Brookhaven, Natchez, McComb, Laurel, Hattiesburg, Picayune, Pascagoula, Biloxi and Gulfport.

Robert Moses, Negro, of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee said demonstrations held recently in Hattiesburg and Canton were" preparations for the summer activity," and another was scheduled for Greenwood March 25.

Since last summer the Greenwood police department has made extensive plans for handling racial demonstrations similar to the type held here in the spring of 1963.

The auxiliary police force has undergone intensive training and is today recognized as one of the finest in the South.

The police have also equipped an old school bus for use in riot control and this vehicle is now ready for use whenever the occasion should come up. The bus is kept in ready at all times parked across the street from the police department.

It was just last month that the city and county finished trying the appeal cases of some 61 Negroes arrested in Itta Bena and Greenwood on disturbing the peace charges stemming out of the demonstrations here last year.

The convictions were all upheld by the County Court and the cases have now been appealed to the Circuit Court.

Police Fail To Dampen Mississippi Vote Drive

CANTON, Miss. — Negro citizens of this community and Madison County, by their persistence, have demonstrated that they will not let a recalcitrant voter registration clerk or police intimidation keep them from attempting to register to vote.

When the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, in cooperation with other civil rights groups, launched the 1964 voter registration drive Friday, Feb. 28, called "Freedom Day," more than 260 people showed up at the courthouse. Only seven were permitted inside, however, to make application and to take the test.

Every day since, groups of Negro citizens have appeared at the registrar's office to wait patiently for their turn. In spite of the fact that only four people have been placed on the ballot rolls, they continue to come. Here, for example, is what happened on Feb. 28:

L. F. Campbell, the circuit clerk and voter registrar, would allow only one applicant at a time to enter his office. Once inside, the prospective voter was administered a complex constitutional interpretation test that the state started when Negroes began pressing for the right to vote.

WAIT PATIENTLY BY

Outside other Negroes waited patiently in single file and were joined by still more. All had been led to the courthouse by Charles Evers, NAACP field secretary and the Rev. B. Elton Cox of High Point, N. C., a CORE representative. Two by two, they proceeded from the Holiness Church seven and one-half blocks away.

And while they waited, sheriff's deptuties, augmented by police auxiliaries in blue helmets and makeshift uniforms, armed with nightsticks, revolvers and a variety of shot guns and rifles, patrolled the area.

Along the route which the Negroes took from the church to the courthouse, sheriffs and deputies from Madison and surrounding counties wearing 10-gallon hats raced back and forth in white cars with as many as three radio antennae.

One of the sheriff's deputies paced up and down the line of prospective Negro voters. He wore a black leather jacket, black slacks and black western boots. An automatic carbine swung from his left hand and a wooden club dangled from his belt. A bone-handled revolver rode loosely in a holster on his left hip.

When several of the police officers were witnessed telling the Negro citizens to go home and not to bother to vote, by Charles Evers and Rev. J. W. Anderson, Canton NAACP branch president, Mr. Evers telephoned the NAACP national office in New York City.

Gloster B. Current, director of branches, in turn called NAACP Washington Bureau chief, Clarence Mitchell. reported the incident to the U. S. Justic Department.

It was not long after that a Justice offical came up and identified himself to Charles Evers.

Mississippi Summer Project Launched

JACKSON, Mississippi—"At least least 2,000" full-time civil rights workers will conduct voter registration and political education programs in Mississippi this summer, according to civil rights worker Robert Moses.

The announcement of the "Mississippi Summer Project" came from a day-long conference of the Council of Federated Organizations (COFO) here March 15. COFO is a coalition of national and local civil rights groups working in Mississippi.

COFO leaders said the "Freedom Summer" plans included recruiting 1,000 white and Negro college students to man "Freedom Schools," Community Centers and to work on a voter registration drive. The group will also run two Negroes for Congress in the state's 2nd and 5th Congressional Districts.

CHALLENGE

COFO Chairman Dr. Aaron Henry of Clarksdale, state NAACP head, said Mrs. Fannie Lou Hamer of Ruleville would oppose Representative Jamie Whitten of Charleston in the 2nd District and Reverend John Cameron of Hattiesburg would oppose Representative William Colmer of Pascagoula in the 5th District. The two Negro candidates will also run in a "Freedom Primary" corresponding with the state's Democratic primary, COFO workers said.

If both lose, they plan to challenge the seating of the winning candidates. "We intend to challenge whether the country will permit people to be elected from districts where Negroes are not allowed to vote," COFO Program Director Moses said.

Moses, who has headed the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) vote drive here since 1961, and Dave Dennis of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) will head up the summer drive.

Moses and Dennis said the summer campaign would include:

—FREEDOM SCHOOLS that will give youth and adults political education as well as courses common to a high school curriculum;

—COMMUNITY CENTERS that will provide recreational facilities, instruction in pre-natal care, nutrition, job retraining, arts and craft classes, organized sports and libraries;

—FREEDOM REGISTRATION that will register 400,000 Negroes on mock polling lists to "pprove Negroes in Mississippi will register to vote if they are allowed to."

—FREEDOM ELECTION held during the state's Democratic primary on June 2 to indicate Mississippi Negroes are not satisfied with present candidates; —Challenging the seating of Mississippi Congressmen on the floor of the House of Representatives on the basis that many Negroes are denied the right to vote in the state;

—VOTER REGISTRATION drives that will attempt to register an added 25,000 Negroes;

—EMERGENCY RELIEF AND WELFARE AID for Negroes who face job losses or eviction because of their participation in the vote drive.

Moses said the Freedom Schools, in addition to giving students a chance to learn subjects poorly taught in Mississippi's Negro schools, would teach the "politics of Mississippi" and would begin to build a core of educated leadership in the state.

Negroes Planning March Despite City Warnings

GREENWOOD, Miss. (AP)—Negroes plan to march on the courthouse today — despite warnings from city officials—to renew a voter registration campaign which spawned violence when it first started just one year ago.

Three burlap-draped crosses burned Tuesday night in this city of 23,000, located in the heart of the cotton-growing Mississippi delta. Negroes outnumber whites nearly 2-1 in the area.

Mayor Charles E. Sampson called on Greenwood residents to stay away from any areas where demonstrations might occur.

"Demonstrators thrive on attention," said Sampson. "If they don't get it, they will soon leave us alone."

He said police would not permit any marches or organized formations on city streets and sidewalks.

Police, using a trained dog, dispersed civil rights demonstrators marching on the Leflore County court house several times last March.

The cross burnings were the first such in at least 10 years, police said. One cross—about five feet tall—flared on the courthouse lawn. Police watched it burn out.

Another was set along a busy street in a predominantly white residential area and the third near the headquarters of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee.

Sampson said he was surprised at the new developments. He said over 2,000 Negroes had applied for voter registration in the past year. In 1963, the federal government estimated there were 470 registered Negro voters in the county.

The renewed vote registration drive was called by the Council of Federated Organizations, representing all major civil rights groups in the state. COFO said it plans similar drives in some 20 other Mississippi cities.

'Voter' Pickets Circle Long Block

30 To 40 Negroes Go To Clerk's Office; Rain Dwindles Crowd

Pickets continued their march around the courthouse at noon today as voter registration workers stepped up their campaign here.

This was the first time pickets had been used here and at the height of the demonstration this morning more than 100 Negro and white pickets circled the building.

Leading the pickets was state NAACP president Aaron Henry of Clarksdale. Henry was among the first group of 12 that appeared at the courthouse square shortly after 9 a.m. This number steadily grew until it reached a peak of more than 100.

Homemade signs were carried by almost all of the pickets and some out of town white ministers marched while reading the Bible.

There were no incidents as the pickets started their walking and during a rain shower the number started to dwindle.

About 35-40 persons went into the courthouse to register.

Police chief Curtis Lary, carrying his famous bull-horn, kept a watchful eye on the pickets as they made their trek around the building and curiosity seekers were moved along by the police.

The whole affair this morning appeared to be the quietest demonstration held here since the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee started its drive more than a year ago.

A large number of white men and women appeared in the pickets lines and many of the people brought to the courthouse to register were brought in cars bearing out of state tags.

When Mrs. Martha Lamb, circuit clerk closed her office at noon the pickets continued their march around the building, apparently they planned to continue on through the noon hour.

The pickets began showing up at the courthouse about 9:15 a.m. About a dozen began marching in front of the courthouse at first before their ranks were swelled by others leaving the meeting at the Negro Elks Rest.

Attendance at the Elks Rest was two bus loads and 15 car loads of Negroes from the Itta Bena area.

At one point in the morning police ordered a milling crowd of teenagers at the Elks Rest to disperse. They complied after officers told them that they could proceed to the court in groups of fours.

Several white ministers, who identified themselves as Presbyterian were with the Negroes. Some carried signs in the picket lines, others "acted as observers."

At 10:45 a.m. Greenwood was taking the "demonstration" in stride. No arrests had been made and no crowds were gathering to watch the pickets.

A group of about 40 Negroes, most of them past middle aged, led the way into the office of circuit clerk, Mrs. Martha Lamb, to apply for registration to vote. Mrs. Lamb, keeping her office open for all other business, was accepting the applicants two at a time. As each pair entered to take the registration test they were seated as separate tables.

Police forces in the city included all of the city's regular department, the auxiliary police force and sheriff's deputies standing by at the courthouse itself.

The quiet early morning followed a night in which three five-foot crosses were burned in the city. City fire department teams extinguished one cross, constructed of two-by-fours, which blazed on the courthouse lawn and one in the north section of town about 11 p.m.

On the south side of town at Avenue N and Stone Streets another cross was ablaze about 11:30 p.m. Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee led a group of about 70 teenagers to the site where they sang songs around it for some minutes before extinguishing it and taking it to headquarters.

At 11 a.m. today's demonstration seemed pretty much a rerun of those Greenwood went through last summer. The only crowds gathering were newsmen taking pictures and federal investigators taking pictures.

Pickets Thrive On Violence, Says Official

Greenwood Police Commissioner B. A. "Buff" Hammond today said he felt that the demonstrations had gone about as well for the city as could be expected.

Hammond heads police activities during the racial demonstrations.

Hammond said that police policy during the demonstrations is aimed at cheating the demonstrators of "what they thrive on."

"We had several choices to make, all of them bad," Hammond said.

"But we are doing our best not to give them the things they need on which to thrive," he continued. "They can't live without incidents, violence and turmoil. We will keep Greenwood a safe place to live. The things that are happening in Jacksonville don't appeal to this city."

Under the circumstances, Greenwood appeared a normal city this morning, with traffic moving past the courthouse and only small crowds of curious watching developments.

Observers felt that this series of demonstrations could be a repeat of last year's when they fizzled out for lack of interest after several days.

Miss. Patrol Plan In Legislature

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—Gov. Paul Johnson's plan to enlarge the Mississippi Highway Patrol and give it police powers during civil rights crisis has been offered to the legslature.

The measure was introduced Thursday by House Speaker Walter Sillers and 32 other representatives.

The bill would increase the patrol's strength from 275 to 475 troopers giving it general police powers that could be exercised only when the governor proclaimed an emergency existed.

Th proclamation would be issued when a sheriff or mayor asked aid or when the governor felt terrorism riots or intimidation would povoke violence that local forces would not be able to handle.

Mother seeks Miss. seat in Congress

By WILLIAM WORTHY

JACKSON, Miss. — A 43-year-old Ruleville, Miss. housewife and mother qualified Friday to oppose Rep. James Whitten in the June 2 Democratic primary in the Second Congressional District.

Mrs. Fannie Lou Hamer paid the $200 filing fee in order to run against the segregationist incumbent in the heart of the Mississippi Delta where 66 per cent of the population is colored.

Ten thousand dollars have been included in the campaign to cover costs of anticipated police harassment of the candidate and her supporters.

The figure, for bail bond fees and fines, is based on the experience last autumn with Mississippi's freedom vote. Dr. Aaron Henry, NAACP state president, polled 80,000 votes for governor from colored persons unable to vote in the official balloting.

Another unofficial freedom vote is being planned for the day of the June primary, in expectation of widespread intimidation of colored voters who seek to exercise their franchise.

Unlike Dr. Henry, who did not qualify for a place on the ballot, Mrs. Hamer's name will be printed next to that of her ultra-conservative opponent. The freedom vote will be held in churches and other locations in colored communities.

No official figures are available on the number of colored registered voters. The Second Congressional District includes Sunflower county, home of Senator James O. Eastland, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

"This is the roughest terrtory in the world outside of South Africa," a SNCC member remarked.

"It is fantastic," he continued, "to be planning a candidacy when a primary consideration is whether the candidate will get killed."

Mrs. Hamer has been active in voter registration campaigns since 1961. After 18 year as a tenant on a plantation, she was ordered off the land by the owner in 1962 after she had registered.

The new candidate was one of six persons severely beaten by police in Winona, Miss. after an attempt to eat at the local bus station.

Five policemen who were indicated by a Federal grand jury on brutality charges were later acquitted.

Mrs. Hamer was scheduled Friday night, to address mass meeting in her hometown, situated in Sunflower County.

She began to campaign in Greenwood on Monday, two days before the March 25 freedom day demonstrations there.

Her campaign workers have announced they will keep the Justice Department and members of Congress informed of her itinerary.

"Whether Mrs. Hamer's campaign receives nationwide publicity and Federal protection may be a matter of life and death for her and other." the AFRO was advised.

Charles McLaurin of Ruleville will serve as Mrs. Hamer's campaign manager. Mr. McLaurin is onthe staff of Cofo (The Council of Federated Organizations), a statewide united front of SNCC, CORE, NAACP and other civil rights groups.

In February, 1962, Claude Sitton, roving Southern correspondent for the New York Times, reported that Rep. Whitten helped to kill a Delta-Wide Program of the Area Redevelopment Administration to train tractor drivers.

It is understood that the cotton planters oppopsed the program as a Federal "incursion" that would lead later to a minimum wage and an eight-hour day for agricultural laborers.

The program also met planter opposition because, under Federal rules, the training clases would have been racially integrated. Aside from direct civil rights issues, Mrs. Hamer will attack what she terms an "alliance" between Mississippi Congressmen and the plantation owners.

Pickets Won't Follow Order

Fourteen Jailed When They Defy Police Area Restriction

The police arrested fourteen pickets at the courthouse today when they refused to obey police chief Curtis Lary.

The pickets arrived at the courthouse in five cars shortly after 11 a.m. They immediately set up their line, walking back and forth in front of the courthouse.

Chief Lary approached the pickets and told each they were perfectly free to picket at the courthouse, but they would be restricted to picketing on Cotton Street only.

The first to refuse the chief's order was Richard Frey, a 27-year old white man who has been working with the SNCC group here since last fall.

The police bus was called to the front of the building and Frey was placed inside when he refused to obey. This procedure continued until the police had arrested 14.

A second white man, Anthony Gaenslin, 22, of San Antonio, Texas, was also arrested. Gaenslin has been working here with the SNCC group for several weeks.

There were eight Negro men in all and four Negro women in the group. They were all charged with disorderly conduct.

Police Commissioner B. A. Hammond warned the pickets last night that they would be restricted to Cotton Street. Shortly before 4:30 p.m. yesterday he had chief Lary talk with Frey and tell him that they were free to picket, but would be restricted to Cotton Street.

After the arrests today Hammond said, "for four days we stood by and allowed them to stage their alledged protest. They were monopolizing the sidewalk and the main entrance to the courthouse.

"The police were receiving one call after another asking if it were safe for them to go to the courthouse.

"Within a 20 minute period Monday afternoon, three colored farmers declined to go to some agricultural office located in the courthouse. People whose drivers licenses were expiring today, and those who wanted to file for homestead exemption were afraid to cross the line.

"Authorities even restrict the area and number of pickets around the White House, and we feel we have a perfect right to restrict the area in which they picket the Leflore County Courthouse."

This morning, as the pickets arrived at the courthouse, it was apparent they had no intention of following the orders of Lary. Four newsmen at the courthouse from Atlanta said Frey had told them last night that the situation here had reached a crisis, but wouldn't elaborate.

The arrest of the pickets today is the first since the picketing started here last Wednesday. At that time some 100 pickets, including a number of white ministers, marched in front of the building in a slow downpour of rain.

The ministers stayed in the line the entire day and then returned briefly for the second day, but left around noon. Since then the number of pickets at the courthouse had been declining until today.

The Negroes were evidently ready for their arrest today as one of them, a 17- year-old boy, had his shaving kit with him.

Those arrested today include Frey who is from Pennsylvania, Gaenslin who later told police he was from Malboro, New Jersey, both white and Negroes Fred Harris 17 of Greenwood, James Brown 21 of Itta Bena, Mathews Hughes, 20, of Greenwood, Alvin Packer, 26, of Hattiesburg, Will Henry Rogers, 17, of Greenwood, Willie Peacock, 27, from Tallahachie County, Robert Bass, 22, of Jackson, Willis Wright, 24, of Greenwood, Flora George, 17, and her sister Laura George, 21, both of Greenwood, Dorothy Higgins, 21, of Greenwood and Alberta Stewart, 26, of Greenwood.

Bond was set at $500 each for those arrested, and six of the men were transferred to the county jail this afternoon.

Negroes Plan More Picketing On Thursday

The Student Non- Violent Coordinating Committee plans a second "Freedom Day" here tomorrow with picketing slated in an area which police have declared off limits.

Sam Block, SNCC field secretary, said a number of out of state ministers, both white and Negro, are expected to take part in the picketing at the county courthouse.

The pickets have been restricted by the police to the west side of the courthouse.

Two weeks ago 14 pickets were arrested by the police when they refused to bey the orders of Police Chief Curtis Lary and move to the west side of the building. Their case was scheduled for trial last Friday, but was delayed when they refused to obey ing the U.S. District Court to take jurisdiction over the case. Judge Claude Clayton has not ruled on the matter.

The picketing tomorrow is expected to be followed by a second day of picketing at the courthouse on Friday.

Chief Lary Gives Them Choice; Children Placed Back In School

Seventeen pickets, including five white ministers were arrested in front of the county courthouse shortly before noon today when they refused to obey police Chief Curtis Lary.

The pickets had been restricted to an area on the west side of the courthouse and up to midway on Market Street. After they had been picketing in this area for almost 30 minutes Chief Lary told them individually that the number of pickets would be restricted to ten and that they must be of voting age and a resident of Leflore County.

The first to refuse were the white ministers when asked to leave the line. Each picket was given a choice by the chief before being placed under arrest. Over four of the pickets left the line and said they wanted to go home and were allowed to do so.

Those arrested were charged with unlawful picketing and refusing to obey the orders of the chief of police.

Governor Paul Johnson last night signed the new state law prohibiting picketing public buildings, but city prosecutor Gray Evans declined to say whether those arrested would be tried under the new law. No trial date has been set.

The picketing started at the courthouse shortly after 10 a.m. when a car load of Negro and white ministers arrived. They immediately started walking back and forth in front of the building in an area that they had been told was off limits. This group was joined by several more car loads until the number of pickets reached 24.

Among the early pickets were five children, all appearing to be under 15 years of age. City prosecutor Evans, acting for Youth Counselor Charles Deaton, had the police remove the children and bring them inside the courthouse.

Inside the building Evans talked with the children and told them they were breaking a law and should be in school. One of the parents was picketing outside and she was brought in to talk with Evans. He then sent all of the children back to school and advised the parents that if the children returned to picket again he would place charges against them.

The picketing continued along the front of the courthouse and up Fulton Street. As the number of spectators watching the pickets grew, police commissioner B. A. Hammond issued an order restricting them to an area along the west side of the buidling and half way up the front walk in front of the building.

The pickets, led by a white minister, moved into the area set aside for them and continued their walking for almost an hour.

It was then that chief Lary moved in and told them they would have to cut the number down to 10 and they must be of voting age and a resident and $100 each for the others.

Those arrested this morning at the courthouse were Rev. Eldon Irving, 29, of Warren, Ohio; Rev. J. Phillip Park, 31, of Warren, Ohio; Rev. James J. Robinson, Negro 37 of Pittsburg, Pa.; Rev. Johnston E. Patrick, 46 of Pittsburg; Rev. J. D. Thomas, Negro 33 of Chicago, Ill.; Rev. Luke Thorosian, 34, of Pittsburg.; Rev. William Henry Anderson, Jr., 42, of Pittsburg.; Rev. Vern Joseph Rossman, 37 of Indianapolis, Indiana.

Others arrested were Negroes Ellis Jackson, 22 of Greenwood, John Mathews 33, of Greenwood Ida Holland, 20, Greenwood; Mary Lane 34, Greenwood; Sara Ann Watkins, 17, Greenwood; Mose Harper, 66 of Itta Bena. Joe Lewis Stigler, 19, Greenwood; Geneva House 32, Greenwood and Catherine Simpson, 19 of Greenwood.

Accompanying the pickets and advising them were two white attorneys. Jack Pratt of New York, attorney for the National Council of Churches, told Chief Lary when he issued his order that he was violating the constitutional rights of the people under the first amendment to the Constitution.

Lary then signaled for the paddy wagon which was parked nearby and as the pickets refused to move on they were placed under arrest.

Later at the police station Pratt said he would possibly petition a federal district court to take jurisdiction of the cases under the Civil Rights Act of 1958.

This would be the same steps taken by 14 pickets arrested here two weeks ago. This morning U. S. District Judge Claude Clayton in Aberdeen issued a writ of habeas Corpus on these people setting bond at $200 each for the out- of state white men and $100 each for the others.

No. Reason Given for Move in Greenwood—Vote Drive Resumes

GREENWOOD, Miss. (UPI)—Police late Thursday freed 17 pickets arrested earlier in the day in a resumed Negro voter registration drive.

No reason was given for the release. City Prosecuting Attorney Gray Evans also dropped charges of unlawful picketing and refusing to obey the order of Police Chief Curtis Lary.

Six white Northern ministers were among the 17 pickets.

Police took five Negro children out of the picket line, contacted their parents and returned them to school. The parents were told they would be arrested if the children returned to the picket line.

Chief Lary told each picket individually: "You may continue picketing but you will be limited to 10 pickets of voting age and from Leflore county." There were 21 pickets in the line before the arrests were made.

The picketing was the first in three weeks. In the earlier voter registration drive demonstration 14 persons were arrested.

Two white lawyers were advising the marchers. One of them was John Pratt of New York City, attorney for the National Council of Churches' Commission on Race and Religion. The name of the other attorney was not available.

The white ministers arrested were: the Rev. Eldon Irving, 29, of Warren, Ohio; the Rev. J. Philip, Park, 31, of Warren, Ohio; the Rev. Johnston E. Patrick, 46, of Pittsburgh; the Rev. Voter worker gets shiner in Miss. jail

JACKSON, Miss.—(UPI) — A Federal judge refused an attorney's request that he personally examine a blond civil rights workers allegedly beaten in jail Monday night.

The attorney, George W. Crockett Jr. of Detroit, said Peter Stoner suffered a black eye and other injuries in the alleged incident.

Local officials said Stoner suffered the injuries in a scuffle with another prisoner.

Stoner, who is from Pennsylvania, is serving time at the Forrest County Prison Farm following his arrest during a voter registration drive at Hattiesburg in February.

U. S. District Judge Sidney Mize Tuesday denied a writ of habeas corpus for Stoner's release from custody. He ruled that the defendant had not exhausted all remedies available in state courts.

Immediately after denial of the writ, Crockett informed the court of the alleged beating.

"My client informs me he was severely beaten in jail Monday night," said Crockett.

Crockett then asked that the judge issue an injunction order against Forrest County authorities to protect Stoner from such "cruel treatment."

CROCKETT ALSO requested that Mize view Stoner, locked in a jail cell down the hall from the courtroom, to see "welts and the black eye."

Mize refused and came to the defense of Forrest County Sheriff W. G. Gray. He said, "I know the sheriff, and a more honorable gentleman cannot be found anywhere. He would not permit any such cruel treatment of a prisoner unless the prisoner required some restraint."

"If a prisoner obeys all rules, I know he will not be harmed," Mize said.

MIZE INSTRUCTED Crockett to notify the FBI if he felt Stoner's civil rights had been violated.

"All you have to do is notify them (FBI) and they will have a bunch of agents here to investigate."

The judge instructed Sheriff Gray to look into the matter to determine "if there has been any such treatment."

William S. Wells, assistant state attorney general, told Mize the alleged beating occurred last night in the Hinds County Jail where Stoner had been lodged to await hearing proceedings.

Mrs. Evers Sees Progress In Mississippi

RALEIGH — (UPI) — The North Carolina Conference of NAACP branches was told here Sunday that some progress was made in Mississippi in race relations during the past year.

Mrs. Myrtle Evers, widow of the slain NAACP field secretary, Medgar Evers, was the featured speaker at the freedom day event.

SHE TOLD the group of some 2,500 that despite the progress, problems of a double society remained for Mississippi Negroes.

She said "Negroes are determined to go forth and play their part in the struggle for human rights, and the fear of being hurt or of dying is diminishing daily."

THE SPEAKER said that unity among Negroes has increased since her husband was killed by a sniper's bullet. She stated that selective buying and the ballot are being used primarily in the civil rights struggle in her state.

"Negroes are urged not to buy from stores that refuse to use courtesy titles in addressing Negro customers or which do not hire qualified Negroes," she said.

"We have also set up a system of registration schools operating six days per week to teach Negroes how to register and vote in Mississippi."

THE REV. C. W. Ward of Raleigh, state NAACP voter registration chairman, said a goal of 50,000 had been set for registration during the next month.

Also on hand for the program was the state NAACP conference president, Kelly M. Alexander of Charlotte.

Reign Of Terror In Mississippi Reported

NATCHEZ, Miss. — The director of the Mississippi project for the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) testified May 6 that 5 Negroes had been killed in southeast Mississippi in recent months, and called for investigation Justice.

Robert Moses, 28, told a meeting of the State Advisory Committee to the United States Civil Rights Commission that no one had been arrested or indicted for the mysterious slayings.

Moses reported the shotgun killing of 44-year-old Louis Allen in Liberty, Mississippi last January 31. Allen was a witness at the 1961 murder of 52-year-old Negro Herbert Lee, who was gunned down outside a Liberty cotton gin by a member of the Mississippi state legislature. Allen later admitted to SNCC workers he had been forced to lie at a Coroner's jury investigation into the slaying which set free E. H. Hurst.

Both Lee and Allen had been active in a SNCC vote drive.

Moses said four Negroes had been killed in neighboring Wilkinson county since the August, 1963, March on Washington.

Archie C. Curtis, 60, a Natchez undertaker, testified he and another Negro had been stripped and beaten by hooded men on a desolate road outside the city on February 15, 1964. Curtis said he was lured to the spot by an unidentified caller who told him a woman was dying of a heart attack. He told the committee the beating stemmed from his participation in a vote drive.

A Negro was forced to strip and was soaked in motor oil before being beaten in Amite County, near Liberty, on Feb. 1, 1964, Moses said. Another Negro was shot and killed in Tallahatchie County by policemen on Feb. 13, 1964.

Other witnesses told of cross burnings, threatening phone calls, and economic reprisals for taking part in civil rights and vote activity. Moses called for a 'thorough investigation by the Justice Department." Moses and other SNCC staff have issued pleas to that agency numerous times since beginning their vote campaign in 1961.

Mississippi Klan recruits white men 'to save nation'

The Klan has reportedly been engaged in extensive recruiting in many sections of the state in recent months. A series of cross burnings have been reported in south Mississippi.

KKK literature was shown to newsmen by a state official who asked that he not be identified by name or agency.

The literature said the Klan was enlisting only "sober, intelligent, courageous, Christian, American white men. . .who are militantly determined, God willing, to save their lives, and the life of this nation. . ."

It said the Klan excluded "Jews, because they reject Christ," and Roman Catholics "because they bow to a Roman dictator," and also "Turks, Mongols, Tarters, Orientals (and) Negroes."

"Get out your Bible and pray. You will hear from us," the literature said.

The literature urged every "Christian, American Anglo-Saxon" to join "to defend our Constitutional Republic by every means at their command."

The literature said "the administration of our national government is now under the actual control of atheists who are Bolsheviks by nature.

"As dedicated agents of satan, they are absolutely determined to destroy Christian civilizatoin and all Christians," the pamphlets said. "We have nothing dishonorable to hide, but we must remain secret, for the protection of our lives and families."

Among a list of "20 reasons why you should, if qualified, join" was: "Because it is clear now that it Communiism is to be defeated in America, it will be done in the South and primarily in Mississippi.

Othere reasons included:

Miss. Police Reportedly Continuing Harrassment

JACKSON, Miss. — "Civil rights workers in Mississippi face arrest almost daily on charges ranging from 'running a stop sign" and 'public drunkeness' to 'carrying books calculated to incite people to overthrow the government", according to John Lewis, Chairman of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC).

During an intensive mock political campaign across the state last fall workers from SNCC estimated that police made over 60 arrests for traffic violations alone during a 21 day period. "Over 100 incidents of official harrassment" were recorded during November, 1963, when an integrated slate ran in a mock election for the state's two top offices.

Civil rights workers here have charged police are stepping up arrests as the summer approaches. As examples, they cite:

The overnight jailing in Holly Springs of four workers from the Council of Federated Organizations (COFO) for "investigation;"

The arrest of seven COFO workers in Belzoni on May 14. Police said they were arrested "to prevent riots" because the group was integrated;

The arrest in Oxford of six COFO workers May 5. They were charged with "suspicion of carrying materials which advocate the overthrow of the government" when police found college textbooks in a trailer behind their car;

The arrest in Jackson on May 24 of a white COFO worker, Dick Jewett, 20, of New York city. Jewett was charged with "vagrancy" and "public drunkeness;"

The arrest of two University of Pennsylvania Law School students, Alan Lerner and Charles Woll, and SNCC worker Hunter More in Jackson May 25. The three, all white, were charged with "being fugitives;"

Labor Mississippi Hope On Rights, Leader Says

HAMDEN, Ct. (AP)—A Mississippi labor leader said Tuesday that the labor movement was the "only responsible group" that could effectively change the civil rights picture in his state.

Claude Ramsay, president of the Mississippi State Labor Council, AFL-CIO, said, however, that "organized labor cannot reach its political goals until greater strides are made in granting Negro Mississippians the right to vote."

Ramsey spoke at a human rights conference sponsored by the Connecticut State Labor Council.

JACKSON, Miss.—Mississippi is feeling the impact of racial strife where it hurts—in the pocketbook.

A few weeks ago a northeast Mississippi industrial development scout wrote Work Wear Corp. of Cleveland hopefully inquiring whether the uniform manufacturer, which already has two plants in the state, was considering further expansion. "If so," the letter said, "we invite you to take a look at our part of Mississippi."

The answer was quick in coming. "We won't consider expanding in Mississippi until the state and its people join the Union again," wrote A. L. Rosenthal, Work Wear president. The executive explains his harsh reply was prompted by Mississippi's racial strife and the lack of "visible evidence" that the state is trying to correct the problem.

While Mr. Rosenthal's attitude in itself may not represent a major setback for Mississippi's economy, there's growing evidence that acts of racial violence and discrimination are having a deepening impact on the state's business climate. In the past six months alone, at least a dozen companies that were considering Mississippi as a site for new plants have decided to build elsewhere, and it's widely believed racial tension was a primary consideration in the decisions.

Tourism Hurt

Racial turmoil appears to be affecting the economy here in other ways, too. Businessmen in Mississippi's Gulf Coast resorts report tourism has dropped since the murder of three civil rights workers last summer near Philadelphia, Miss. Some companies also say it's becoming more difficult to attract skilled workers from other states, particularly the North.

The impact is so pronounced that none other than Gov. Paul B. Johnson, who rode into office on a segregationist platform, concedes that "the racial trouble has hurt us economically."

So far most of Mississippi's troubles stem from decisions by individual travelers or companies to avoid possible problems by staying away, rather than a result of any organized effort to damage the state. But now an organized threat is emerging.

Over the nation, local chapters of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People are launching boycotts against products manufactured in Mississippi. Already on the list are products made at the Mississippi plants of such companies as Armstrong Rubber Co., Burlington Industries, Inc., and D. H. Baldwin Co., the piano and organ maker. Two other civil rights groups, the Congress of Racial Equality and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, say they will soon begin similar "selective buying" campaigns.

On the Sidelines

The rights organizations say they hope to draw Mississippi's business leaders from the sideline position they have generally taken on the race question into the middle of the fray, where they might act as a moderating influence.

Although it might be debated how effective such boycotts would be—it's difficult to see, for example, how a consumer is to know where multi-plant companies manufacture a particular product—the mere threat of economic warfare is causing jitters among Mississippi's businessmen. Some already have had a taste of what can happen from informal boycotts by out-of-the-state buyers. "We lost at least $250,000 in sales last year because of people refusing to buy Mississippi-made products," declares Joseph C. Bancroft, president of Croft Metal Products, Inc., an aluminum extruder and fabricator in McComb.

Textile makers have felt the pinch, too. Yankee Distributors, Inc., Flint, Mich., has advised several Mississippi mills that it is discontinuing the purchase of Mississippi goods until racial terrorism in the state abates. The retailing chain says it has been buying about $250,000 worth of textile goods annually for sale in its 18 stores.

A New Address

Such pressures even prompted one manufacturer of household goods in southern Mississippi to move its shipping operations across the state line into Louisiana. Explains the company's sales manager: "Mail-order houses just don't like to show an f.o.b. point in Mississippi."

But the impact of racial tensions in Mississippi is most evident in the state's efforts to lure new industry. Last year only $37 million was spent on new plants in the state, a 28% drop from 1963. Mississippi industry hunters generally attempt to brush off the decline, attributing it to the "cyclical" nature of industrial development. But Arkansas and Louisiana, with whom Mississippi competes directly for new industry, showed big gains in new plant investment last year.

"I know of six fairly good-sized companies omitting Mississippi for plant sites in recent months because of the situation down there," says a New York management consultant who specializes in selecting plant locations for his clients. "Companies just don't want to go into that type of atmosphere."

Last November a McComb, Miss., newspaper editorialized that "15 industrial prospects in the past three or four months made it clear they were afraid of the McComb atmosphere of (racial) strife and disorder." The town of 12,000 population in southwest Mississippi was the site of 17 racial bombings during 1964.

Florida Jalousies, Inc., an aluminum window and door maker based in West Palm Beach, Fla., decided against building a plant in Laurel, Miss., the day after the town's newspaper office was dynamited last spring. A company spokesman says the timing of its decision was "just a coincidence"; a Laurel civic leader, however, says that until the blast occurred the town was "convinced the company was definitely coming in."

Greenville, a town in the northwest Delta which is generally regarded as one of the more racially moderate communities in the state, has also had difficulty recently in enticing new industry. From 1959 through 1962 Greenville attracted one new plant a year, but none have located there since. One "solid prospect" lined up for the town by an outside consulting firm decided it didn't want to locate in Mississippi and went elsewhere, according to a Greenville business leader.

CORE Launches Campaign

Marvin Rich, national community relations director for the Congress of Racial Equality in New York City, says that "in the past three or four months we have been talking to companies that were going to locate plants in Mississippi; at least one has definitely decided not to go into the state." Mr. Rich declines to identify this company or any others that his group has contacted. He says CORE "gets the leads on these companies through friends we have in banking and plant consultation." CORE and other civil rights groups also are urging investment houses not to bid on Mississippi bonds.

Mississippians who depend on tourist dollars make clear they are unhappy about the impact of racial tension on their business. "From the way the press pictures us, you'd think a person needed to put on armor when he crossed the Mississippi line," bitterly complains a Gulfport businessman. Taxable sales in Biloxi and Gulfport, the two major tourism centers on the Mississippi Gulf, were down $2.8 million, or about 3%, last year from 1963. Jack Stanford of Gulfport, president of the Gulf Coast Motel Association, says business of some smaller motels dropped 50% during the year but insists that "bigger and newer" tourist facilities on the Gulf "did better in 1964 than in 1963."

State Travel Director Ned O'Brien estimates that visitors' spending throughout Mississippi fell 10% to 15%, or between $40 million and $60 million, in 1964, indicating that many tourists who normally would have traveled through Mississippi took other routes.

Mississippians are trying hard to improve the state's image among outsiders, and the state is coming up with some new lures for industry. A state-financed advertisement running currently in six national publications implores readers to "meet the Mississippi you haven't heard about." The ad pictures such scenes as bathing beauties on Gulf Coast beaches, ante-bellum homes and Jackson's modern downtown business district. Gov. Johnson is personally overseeing planning of new advertising strategy that would extol Mississippi's recreational and industrial advantages—and hopefully counteract its civil rights problems.

Legislature Acts

The state legislature also has appropriated $5.5 million to match Federal funds for technical training courses in public schools—the first time the state has allocated funds for the teaching of industrial skills. "For 75 years the Negroes have been an economic millstone around our neck because they, and the white Mississippian, haven't been trained in the skills needed for industrialization," says Gov. Johnson.

In other moves, the state has set up a Marketing council to seek new domestic and foreign markets for the state's agricultural and manufactured products. Corporate and personal income taxes are being reduced in another bid for industry. But this could be offset by a possible rise in sales tax rates, currently 3½%, because of a dwindling general fund surplus and increased government spending.

Businessmen show signs of responding to the challenge, too. A number of the state's leading business executives have been meeting in recent days in an effort to bring about change in what one calls "the image of lawlessness and oppression that outsiders have of Mississippi." The possible outcome: A statement to be circulated state-wide which would condemn racial extremism and violence and pledge businessmen's efforts to help improve the state's racial climate. Some 100,000 signatures would be sought.

NAACP Pickets Big Board Asking Mississippi Boycott

By a WALL STREET JOURNAL Staff Reporter

NEW YORK—Pickets from a local chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People marched in front of the New York Stock Exchange in lower Manhattan in an appeal for a boycott of products manufactured in Mississippi.

About a dozen members of the NAACP's Greenwich Village chapter picketed the exchange to protest the Big Board's listing of stocks of a number of companies they said sell products stemming from Mississippi. A spokesman for the group said the names of the companies had been obtained from a survey prepared by an NAACP field crew operating in Mississippi.

The spokesman declared: "These companies have production facilities in Mississippi, they are enjoying immense profits from that segregated state and in effect are helping to bolster a system of segregation." He termed the demonstration the initial phase in a national campaign to dissuade people from buying products grown or made in Mississippi.

The picketing follows efforts by the NAACP and other civil rights groups to persuade banks, investment concerns and other investors not to bid on securities issued by the State of Mississippi.

AN ORDINANCE REQUIRING THE ISSUANCE OF A PERMIT FOR THE DISTRIBUTION OF HANDBILLS, POSTERS, DODGERS, PAPER CUPS, AND OTHER LIKE OBJECTS WITHIN THE CITY OF INDIANOLA, MISSISSIPPI

WHEREAS, the Mayor and Board of Aldermen of the City of Indianola have determined from past experience that the distribution of handbills, posterd (sic), dodgers, paper cups, and like objects on the streets, sidewalks and public places of the City of Indianola does cause the streets and sidewalks to be littered and unsightly, and some (sic) cause the sewer mains and culverts to become clogged and unsanitary, thereby creating an unsanitary condition which is detrimental to the good health of the community; and

That in making the determination for the permit and bond the Mayor and Board of Aldermen shall take into consideration the size and volume of the posters, handbills, dodgers, paper cups or like objects, and upon what kind of paper the said handbills, posters, dodgers, paper cups, or like objects are made of, and the number of said handbills, posters, dodgers, paper cups or like objects to be distributed, and the number of people that would be adversely affected thereby, and any and all other questions of fact to be determined, to determine the size of the bond to be required.

SECTION 3. That any one dissatisfied with the finding of the Mayor and Board of Aldermen shall have a right to appeal to the Circuit Court of Sunflower County, Mississippi, where said Court may hear and determine the application and make such order as should have been made by the Mayor and Board of Aldermen.

Methodist Minister Rev. W. G. Goff and Andrew Kendrick testified that they were denied registration just after they watched Ramsey register white Floyd B. Jones in Stonewall. When Ramsey stated that he had registered Jones in the Quitman office, Cox accused Rev. Goff and Kendrick of lying.

He stopped the suit and stated that he would hold Rev. Goff and Kendrick on $3,000 bond unless the Justice Department proved that their testimony was true.

Dear Friend:

The predictions of our "extremists" are beginning to come true. The shadow of integration and negro political domination now looms over Mississippi. Our prediction is that we are going to be harassed from every angle possible during the next several years.

This writer has been in this movement since its beginning in May of 1954, and it hurts me to have to say that entirely too many Mississippians, particularly those of wealth and position, have not joined in the battle. Their property and personal safety is at stake just as is ours. In some ways, they are going to be hit a great deal harder than the ordinary citizen when and if negro political domination comes about in Mississippi. They are the ones who will bear the biggest part of any 100%, 200%, or more, tax increase. We see it already happening just north of us.

If you, as an individual, have not contributed your time, ingenuity, and financial support, we now appeal to you to do your part in helping your local organization and also the state and south wide groups in this struggle for survival.

Your local council needs membership. It needs the "banded intelligence of a free community" on its executive committee in its regular meetings. Your state association desperately needs your financial support on a regular sustained basis.

Every white Mississippian has a stake in the outcome of this political assault now being made against us. We hope that you will do your part.

Sincerely,

Ellett Lawrence
Finance Chairman

Dedicated to the maintenance of peace, good order and domestic tranquility in our Community and in our State and to the preservation of our State's Rights.

IMPORTANT

We hate to write these "begging" letters, so we have worked out a plan to eliminate the letters, as well as local membership drives, for those who cooperate by contributing to the cause on a monthly basis. Your local dues will be remitted by the state office.

As you know, the funds are used to maintain and develop our state-wide program, which is even more important now in the face of increasing agitation for integration and negro political domination.

Your return of the enclosed draft authorization (at least $2.00 monthly, please) will help us in getting this plan started. Contributions are voluntary, of course, and may be terminated at your request.

A Mississippi Solution

Arkansas Gazette

The controversy over President Kennedy's Public Accommodations measure has served to obscure, at least for a time, other civil rights proposals that do rest on solid foundation in the Constitution. It is regrettable that so little of the attention centers on the rights to vote and be free of discrimination in public education.

It is in voting and in education that the real remedies against racial discrimination lie. Voting alone, so recently the focal point of administration concern, is one of the most effective of medicines that can be prescribed.

The special problem in Mississippi, where no one can really expect voluntary provisions to provide Negroes with accommodations and services, has its own special solution. More than 40 per cent of the population of Mississippi is colored. The Negroes are systematically disfranchised by the widespread abuse of a purported literacy test.

If the Kennedy bill for Negro voting is passed, a sixth-grade education will give automatic qualification for literacy. When the Mississippi Negroes gain their voting rights, the politics of the state must perforce undergo a profound change. A markedly different kind of state leadership will emerge when candidates come face to face with the enfranchisement of Negroes, who constitute nearly half the population.

Mississippi's discrimination is, admittedly, formidable. Yet a lot of problems in discrimination there would take care of themselves rather effectively upon the enforcement by the national government of one of the most elemental constitutional guarantees.

Mississippi

Miss. 'Freedom Summer' Campaign Also Planned As State Tightens Laws

ATLANTA, Ga.—Six Negroes in three Deep South states have qualified to run for Democratic Congressional nominations, as outgrowths of voter registration drives conducted by the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC).

Meanwhile the Council of Federated Organizations revealed that with the help of the State Legislature, Mississippi's police officers will be more than ready to deal with civil rights groups planning a "Mississippi Freedom Summer."

The summer drive, sponsored by the Council of Federated Organizations (COFO), involves 1,000 workers in programs of voter registration, Freedom Schools, Freedom Registration and Community Centers.

Gov. Paul Johnson has already signed into law five bills designed to halt demonstrations.

The five bills signed into law by Governor Johnson are:

House Bill 64—Authorizes cities to restrain movements of groups and individuals;

House Bill 546 — Prohibits the unlawful picketing of all public buildings, streets, sidewalks and other places belonging to the city, county and state;

Senate Bill 1517—Increases penalties that may be assessed by city courts;

Senate Bill 1526—Authorizes municipalities to "pool" personnel, manpower and equipment;

Senate Bill 1545 — Provides a maximum penalty of $500 and/or 6 months in jail for printing and circulating material promoting a boycott.

The State Sovereignty Commission—the official segregation watchdog—has suggested the use of other laws to halt anti-segregation protests. They are:

Section 2087-5 — Congregate and refuse to disperse when ordered by a police officer;

Section 2087-7 — Prohibits any person interfering with customers or operation of any business venture;

Section 2089-5—Disturb the peace or peace of others;

Section 2155-4—Make false statements to Federal authorities;

cagoula for the 5th District nomination.

A 74-year-old retired furniture dealer in Vicksburg, James M. Houston, will run against Representative John Bell Williams in the 3rd District.

All four Mississippi candidates plan to challenge the rights of their opponents to the nomination if they lose. According to government figures, about 400,000 Negroes are eligible to vote in Mississippi while only approximately 20,000 are registered voters.

In Alabama, Mrs. Amelia P. Boynton, 52, of Selma, qualified Feb. 29 to run for Congress against incumbent Kenneth Roberts of the 4th District in the Democratic primary May 5th. She will run under Alabama's "9 - 8" plan created when the state lost one representative's place because of population lags. Primaries and run-offs are held in each of the old nine districts and the nine winners face each other to eliminate the low man in a state-wide race.

Atty. C. B. King, 40, of Albany, Ga., filed to run for the state's 2nd District nomination on April 4. He faces a courtroom opponent, Maston O'Neal, solicitor general of the Albany Judicial Circuit.

Another Negro, A. C. Cofield, 55, of Halifax County, North Carolina, announced write-in candidacy for Congress in the May 30 primary.

The Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) is conducting voter registration drives as a supplement to each campaign.

Section 2155-4—Issue false complaints to Federal authorities;

Section 2292-5 — Obstruct by force or threats lawful arrest;

Section 2296-5 — Willful obstruction of public streets;

Section 2409-5 — Encourage any person to remain on premises of another when forbidden to do so.

The Sovereignty Commission has distributed copies of the old and new laws to state law enforcement officers.

COFO is composed of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC).

Regarding the Negro "Deep South" candidates, the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee states that three congressional seats in Mississippi are being sought by Negroes, and a Negro woman has qualified to run against Senator John C. Stennis (D.-Miss.) in the Democratic primary.

A Negro woman is running for Congress from Alabama, and a Negro lawyer will seek nomination in Georgia.

They are the first Negroes to seek Federal office from their states since Reconstruction.

SNCC has conducted voter registration drives in rural areas of the black belt South since 1961 and has encouraged Negroes to run for office.

Mrs. Victoria Gray, 37, of Hattiesburg, will run against Senator Stennis of Dekalb in the June 2 Mississippi Democratic primary.

Mrs. Fannie Lou Hamer, 47, of Ruleville, opened her campaign against 2nd District Representative Jamie Whitten the day she qualified, March 20. She will continue to speak throughout the Delta—the heart of Mississippi's cotton-growing area.

The Rev. John Erle Cameron, 31, also of Hattiesburg—scene of a concerted vote drive—will oppose Representative William Colmer of Pas-

MISSISSIPPI POLICE BEAT TWO YOUTHS

Canton, Miss., Feb. 6--Following a CORE voter registration meeting February 3rd at Pleasant Green Church, police picked up two Negro youths, took them to the jail and beat them mercilessly. The two are Arthur Harris and Will Galloway.

Both have filed affidavits with the U.S. Department of Justice and CORE is pressing the Department to act. Harris charges that after being taken inside the jail, police beat him with a rubber hose, broke a nightstick over his head, started to dry-shave him and finally shot him at close range with a gun containing blank cartridges. Galloway charges that he was pummeled by police behind the jail.

CORE Field Secretary Dave Dennis pointed out that the brutality against the two youths was a continuation of police intimidation which has marked the voter registration drive.

Seventeen voter registration workers were arrested on various charges within the week of January 20-27. The largest group, including four CORE Task Force workers and six community leaders, recently were tried, found guilty and given sentences ranging from 30 days to eighteen months and heavy fines. Alma Bosley received the heaviest sentence. The four CORE Task Force workers got six months. The cases are being appealed, but the 10 were jailed-in for more than a week.

The NAACP is still studying legal procedures best to take in her defense. RE: Field Trip - Southwest Mississippi

This is a field report to the above interested parties about my trip to Southwest Mississippi on behalf of the National Council of Churches, a group assisting an organization existing in Mississippi, known as the Council of Federated Organizations (COFO) and its director, Mr. Robert Moses.

On April 28, 1964, I received a telephone call in the Voter Education Project Office of the Southern Regional Council in Atlanta, Georgia from Rev. Arthur Thomas of the National Council of Churches. He asked as to whether it might be possible for me to come to Mississippi. I was to assist Mr. Robert Moses in several counties in Southwest Mississippi to find witnesses or to procure affidavits. There was to be a hearing by the Mississippi Advisory Committee to the United States Civil Rights Commission, May 6, 1964. The Committee was to investigate interference with voter registration by intimidation and terror by the Klu Klux Klan and police officials.

I told Art that I would be vey happy to go and to assist in any manner I could be used, but I would have to have approval from Mr. Wiley Branton, Director of the Voter Education Project. I would already be near there- I was to be in New Orleans later in the day and remain through the next Sunday. Mr. Branton gave us his approval, and we made plans that I would meet Bob Moses in Jackson, Mississippi on Monday.

Fortunately, I met Bob in New Orleans and it was decided that I cut short my stay in New Orleans because he had only Sunday to be with me in order to direct me as to people and the locale. So, Saturday afternoon, Robert Moses and I left New Orleans by train, arriving in McComb, Mississippi at about 6:00 PM.

On the train, Bob and I were in the last car; I guess it was a first-class coach--both of us sitting as we did prefer around a table. For the greater part of the trip, we were the only Negroes on the coach. It was a strange trip. I do not know about Bob, but since my trips into Mississippi, I have acquired a habit of "not-seeing" the white stranger who is in Mississippi. I would make a deliberate effort of assuring that there would be no eye-contact between us. This was a defensive mechanism to avoid hostility.

When we arrived at the McComb Train Station, a white taxi driver offered to pick us up. I thought this was somewhat funny in a town where there have been cross-burnings, job-firings, etc., and we had just left the town--New Orleans--where white taxis will not take Negro passengers. We took a Negro taxi.

Bob Moses directed the cab driver to the home of Mr. Curtis Bryant. It was his place, a barber shop situated near his home, which was bombed, only just last Tuesday, April 26. It was now about dusk, and the shop was lighted and was still usable. Mr. Bryant was at the time cutting a boy's hair. Also, there were some of his local friends, including a Mr. Marshall. Mr. Bryant was glad to see Bob; they both knew each other from working together. Bob identified to them as to who I was--an attorney from Florida, presently working out of the Atlanta, Georgia Office. He informed them about he meeting of the Advisory Committee of the United States Civil Rights Commission to be held in Natchez. They were told that if they could testify about cross-burnings, police or state interference with attempts to register, or job-firings, people would appear before the Committee. We told them where they should go. The hearing was to be held in the Natchez Post Office Building. However, they were told that if they or anyone else could not appear, we would be willing to take their signed statements.

Because we had several places to go, I set up my portable typewriter for Bob to use, and I took my legal pad in order to take notes. At this time, at the ever-deepening darkness, I began to be aware of Mr. Bryant's nervousness. I was asking Mr. Bryant questions and wrote his answers, such that he is the president of the Pike County Branch NAACP, that he had been conducting voter registration clinics, and as an employee of the Illinois Central Railroad, he, along with a Mr. Willie Thompson, had filed affidavits with the President's Committee on Equal Job Opportunity about practices of racial discrimination by the railroad. He answered all the questions as he cut the boy's hair.

Mr. Bryant was concerned about both Bob and me not having eaten. Mr. Marshall volunteered to get us some food. As it was getting late, I asked about the people who Mr. Bryant knows who could give information to the Committee, whether they could meet us at a centralized point, such as the restaurant where we could eat, or could these people come to Mr. Bryant's house. Mr. Marshall, whose wife has "failed" 5 times in taking the test to become a qualified voter, said that "as far as I'm concerned, I'm not afraid, but I know my wife won't come here," (Mr. Bryant's home).

As I reflect now concerning this report, I realize that I was carelessly naive to believe that these people, being intimidated, would be eager to run to me to give me their statements. Bob had said that by appearing before the Committee, this would be another additional thing which would encourage more federal intervention in the area. I said that the Federal Government, being in Washington, will only act if it has a base of valid evidence upon which to act, which means affidavits and witnesses.

Then it was beginning to get darker and darker. Mr. Marshall had already taken his leave to get Bob and me our dinners. Bob told me that he would have all day Sunday to show me around McComb, and we would just try to see as many people as we could at their homes. Someone came into the barber shop with a rifle to guard. Mr. Bryant then told Bob and me that we should come into the house in order to finish taking his and others statements, not only for his own safety but for our safety as well.

I shrugged my shoulders, feeling somewhat comfortable where I was, feeling confident that another attempt surely could not be made; they should KNOW already that Mr. Bryant has a guard now. But a new thought invaded my assumed air of "cockiness"--the thought that the whole system of segregation, etc. is absurd. Therefore, indeed murder and destruction could happen that night, although it, too, is absurd. When we left the barber shop, it was pitch-black, and Bryant led us into his home by the back door so that we would not present a good target by entering the front door. Even Bob looked a little nervous when a car, made indistinguishable by its bright lights, sped by the country road. Surely Bob Moses could not be afraid!

The kitchen was next to the back door and also near the back was a bedroom with a couch where several neighborhood children were sitting watching television, along with Mr. Bryant's son. I also met Mrs. Bryant. I became so involved in getting information from Mr. Bryant about his experiences that I failed to notice that the children, and even Mrs. Bryant had soon left, possibly at the end of the Jackie Gleason Show. They would be safe some place else.

I finished taking Mr. Bryant's statement--how on that fateful Tuesday night, he heard a loud "blast" while watching television. He went to the door, did not see anything and returned to watch television. He told me that "he did not know what the noise so close was." Yet, reflecting now, it is interesting that he returned to watch television, as if he were determined to enjoy life as he sees it, no matter what the loud noise was about, despite those things which would deny life. It took the neighborhood children screaming to his door to tell him that his barber shop was on fire. He called immediately the Police Department and the Justice Department and was able to stop the fire before it did significant damage to the barber shop. The Police Department came immediately and recovered a piece of pipe which they promised to send to New Orleans for expert investigation and analysis.

Mr. Bryant also gave us a statement about a cross being burned in front of his home in January along with about 14 other places one night in January, and how his wife and son have received unknown obscene telephone calls warning them to leave death or informing them of their imminent death. Klu Klux Klan materials were everywhere distributed among the Negro neighborhood.

Mr. Bryant gave me the names of several persons who could give me their statements or who may be able to appear before the Committee, such as Rev. Haynes, who received a telephone call after the bombing Wednesday Night that he would be next; Jack Micellis, who was forced to be fired from his job as a plumber by the Klu Klux Klan; Mr. Marshall's wife, who has been discriminated against in attempting to register to vote five times; a Mrs. Burgler, who was beaten without any cause by a Mr. Brown of the Public Housing Authority; and two Negro teachers, Miss Wilson and Miss Clark, who were sexually abused by the white superintendent; and Mr. Willie Thompson, who was recently fired from his job at the Illinois Central Railroad for the given cause of "insubordination," but in fact was fired because of his insisting that he is an "equal." (He was the other person who filed an affidavit with Mr. Bryant who is with the President's Committee of Equal Job Opportunity.)

Mr. Bryant called Rev. Haynes who lived a few blocks away and who came by. While Bob Moses typed out Mr. Bryant's statement, I proceeded to talk to Rev. Haynes. I identified myself and what we were trying to do. He kept saying repeatedly that he really did not know anything. I told him that it would be important if the Committee would get the slightest information and asked him whether he could give us a statement of any information he may have. Rev. Haynes was a young man in his 30's. Whether age has anything to do with a person's action, this man was afraid. He did give us a statement, which I wrote down in my legal pad. He told me how he was returning home that Tuesday night at about 8:30 when he first saw the fire and the blown out windows of Mr. Bryant's barber shop. He also told how the next day, about 6:30 PM, the phone rang, his little girl picked up the phone, and an unknown person on the phone picked up and said, "You are next" and then hung up. He was in a hurry, saying that he had to go to a barber shop and left. I asked him whether he would be available sometime Sunday morning so that we can get his statement notarized. He said No, that he would be out of town as early as 6:30 AM, going to pastor several churches. He then left. After we got his statement in form and typed, we realized that we needed Rev. Haynes' signature. We called his wife and she did not know what barber shop to which he would be. I was resigned to the fact that we had to just hold his statement.

At this time, I determined that it was necessary to ascertain the practicability of the use of Notary Publics statements so that they would be good as affidavits. I defined the practicability of the use of Notary Publics to mean as to whether any Notary Publics are available who would be friendly or at least neutral and would not disclose any information to local officials or local people who may be connected to the Klu Klux Klan. I then asked Mr. Bryant whether there were any Negro Notary Publics, feeling that under the above description, a Negro Notary Public would probably fit the above definition, rather than a white Notary Public. Mr. Bryant told me of two Negro Notary Publics in the area, but he was not confident that they would be willing to notarize any statements--they have never done so before. I called one, a Mr. John McCray, and introduced myself and what I wanted done. Mr. McCray said that his commission had expired. I called the other Negro Notary Public, Mr. Charles Westbrook, McComb Undertaker, and he said that he would be willing after that night.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Bob Moses and a SNCC worker, John O'Neal, had driven down to where we were from Jackson, Mississippi, and was involved in an accident which just damaged the car from the fault of the other driver. The police came to the scene to investigate and soon let her and John O'Neal go. The car is in Bob Moses' name. His wife was driving the car. So the police now knew that Bob Moses must be in town.

Bob Moses, who always seem calm, who speaks softly, who always seem imperturbable, now again seemed to be worried. I remembered that McComb, Pike County, Mississippi, was the first area Bob Moses came to, back in 1961, in order to carry on a voter registration drive. He was a Harvard graduate, a former teacher in the New York school system. He seemed to be so unpretentious, reserved, and even seemed to be more of an introvert rather than an outgoing "true believer," but all at once compelled to come to work for the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee in voter registration in Mississippi.

Here in Southwest Mississippi, I knew he had been jailed, had been beaten, and had suffered all the tribulations which any civil rights worker in Mississippi undergoes. He is well known to the community, both white and black. But this was the first time I ever was aware of his fear.

Bob and his wife hugged and talked to each other quietly. Eventually, I accompanied Bob in order to get his wife and John O'Neal some food at the nearest Negro restaurant. I called so that the food would be ready when we got there, so that the car would not be parked too long, and so that the enemy would not be attracted. A new awareness came upon me--an awareness that this was war.

Mr. Bryant let John O'Neal, Bob Moses and his wife, and me sleep at his home for the night. But this was reluctantly done, only because we could find no other place forums to stay for the night other than the Negro hotel, where one has to register in the name of Bob Moses. Everyone slept lightly except one, Mr. Bryant, who did not sleep at all. He stood guard until 4:30 before one od his friends relieved him.

But before we turned in that night, while we were out going to get the food, we had gone by Mr. Marshall's house to get Mrs. Justina Marshall's statement. It was after 10:00 PM, but he had said that they would still be up. We called, blew our horn, and knocked on the door, but it was only after quite a while that Mr. Marshall opened the door. They had not gone to bed. She is a young housewife. Mr. Thomas Marshall is an employee of the Illinois Central Railroad and is active in the local NAACP.

She was reluctant to give us a statement--her being afraid. Mr. Marshall helped us to encourage her to tell us what she knew. He made a point to say that he is personally not afraid. We said to her that the little information that she would give us may help to encourage the Federal Government to actively protect Negroes in Southwest Mississippi from official sanctioned or sponsored intimidation. She finally gave us a statement and promised to have her signature notarized the next day. Justina Marshall had been failed by the registrar five different times. It is hard to imagine a gentle young woman like Mrs. Marshall, a product of a system which teaches all Negroes their caste place, to go down to the registrar's office, at first accompanied by Mr. Bryant, but later only by another lady friend, to attempt to register.

The next morning, it was Sunday--and a beautiful day--cool, sweet, with the smell of moist grass and hay. Bob Moses and I got into his car (which was still in running condition) and drove into town. He left it at a place where a friend works in body repairs to see what could be done, at least stop the tire from rubbing the damaged fender. The friend said to Bob that he would have the car "fixed-up" for him, and we left his house walking to Mr. Willie Thompson's home.

Mr. Willie Thompson had a comfortable home with a small garden sufficient to raise vegetables for the dinner table. Bob introduced me to him and his family, explaining what we were doing. His daughter Carrol Thompson was busy in the kitchen. The Thompson's asked us whether we had anything to eat. With somewhat false modesty, I declined, saying "We have so much work to do." Immediately, I realized I was talking for Bob Moses, and so both of us were provided a hearty breakfast.

After getting back to work, Mr. Thompson told me that he had been fired for what was claimed to be "insubordination," but in fact had been fired because he refused to do the work of two men in unloading a railroad car, especially since the railroadshad reported that he had a hernia condition. His immediate gang foreman then brought Mr. Thompson before the Second General Foreman, who agreed that Mr. Thompson does need help from another person, but before Mr. Thompson could proceed, the immediate gang foreman, Stringer, brought down from the front office the gang foreman, who cursed Mr. Thompson, and that same day was fired and had not been able to return to work. I found out from Mr. Thompson that he and his family have long been active in the civil rights cause. In 1961, his daughter, Carrol Thompson, and other girls went inside the still "white" side of the depot of the Illinois Central Railroad. Without any police protection, probably with police sanction, she and the other girls were chained. She testified in 1962 before the Advisory Committee to the United States Civil Rights Commission.

It was clear that Mr. Willie Thompson's activities, such as being a co-signer with Mr. C.C. Bryant on an affidavit alleging discrimination at the Illinois Central Railroad, voter clinics, and his daughter's activities, have placed him as an "Uppity Nigger" due to being fired, etc, but he was reluctant to sign the statement. He argued that one of the foreman had told him that after things cooled down, he would be able to go back to work. He showed me his letter which he received from the Superintendent. He had had an administrative hearing where he had no representation, and that he had been dismissed finally. I explained to him that the information which I was seeking probably will not get him his job back. It is that the most beneficial use is to demonstrate before official United States bodies violations of civil rights. When I asked him the question, that since he was in the right in the very beginning, could he really believe that they are sincere in hiring him back, I said that he probably will have more to gain to his benefit of all if the statement is submitted as an affidavit or if he could make an appearance. Later, Mr. Bryant said that the foreman's statement that he would be hired back later is nothing but a trick in order to induce Mr. Thompson from inaction until he no longer had a right to appeal under the Union rules. Mr. Thompson agreed that he would sign the statement, have it notarized, and even try to go to Natchez for the hearing by the Committee. We found that there would be an NAACP meeting later that Sunday Afternoon; so we agreed to meet him there.

Bob Moses and I then left The Thompson's and walked for about 15 minutes until we came to a shoe repair store on a somewhat busy street next to a photograph store, owned and operated by white persons. He knew Bob. After we told him what he wanted, he closed his store and gave us his statement. He always had trouble, such as verbal abuse, etc. from the Klan type on the grounds that he was accused to be Bob Moses' father. However, he had been operating the shoe repair store for 19 years and serviced the shoes of the white rich man and the white business man. He pointed to the shoes on the racks, which were Florsheim or other $25.00 type shoes. The recent intimidation he had received was the fact that a cross was burned in front of his store. He also stated his knowledge of crosses burned all over town that night in January. He also pointed something up which was quite interesting. The owner of the High Hat, a white restaurant, was shot and killed by a member of the Klu Klux Klan, the same person who had beaten Carrel Thompson with a chain three years ago; The owner was shot with the gun of the deputy sheriff to whomtthe killer was related, in the presence of the deputy. Mr. Earl Moses said that he would be glad to have his statements notarized. I said to him that we would try to do this sometime Sunday or Monday.

Bob and I then called a cab and went to Rosehill Church, where a cross had been burned recently, to find information about a Rev. Tobias who had been told by Sheriff Daniel Jones of Liberty and Amite County, to leave town. When we got to the church, the service had not ended. In fact, the sermon was just beginning. I was impressed with the social message content of the sermon, which was "Don't Fight the Sun Rise." The sermon pointed out that the way of life in Mississippi is ever-changing, and that the people must prepare to meet the new society. Bob and I stayed outdoors to finish typing the statements, etc. Soon, however, when the sermon was over, some of the deacons spotted Bob Moses and we were ushered in to say a few words to the congregation. The minister introduced Bob Moses first, telling them who he was and what he was doing "for them" at the risk of death, and that they should be thankful for it. Bob said a few words about the United States Civil Rights Commission, the Mississippi Advisory Committee, and the hearings the coming Wednesday. Bob, in turn, introduced me as an attorney from Atlanta, Georgia, and what I was doing. I gave a few remarks, telling them how outside the church, I heard the sermon and its topic and how it was so relevant to the problems they were facing. I told them that although the South is ever-changing, there remains an anachronism from the past, the Klan, and the hate of man who fear other man only because of race. I told them that different from the days of the horse-buggy and kerosene lantern, we have now a federal government in which there is concern about what is happening in Mississippi, but that it takes them, not Bob Moses and me, to act. I told them that to act is to give information, that the federal government cannot act without information. Yet at the same time, I did not promise them that giving us any information would cause any immediate changes in their condition, but only that this is the way and only way to do anything which could cause a change which would contribute to a change in their way of life of intimidation, segregation, and separation. I asked them that if any person had any information, to please see me after church.

Yet after the sermon, we met again the stone wall of fear; we found no one to give us any statements about the cross being burned in front of that very church, or about Mr. Tobias of Liberty, Amite County.

A little teen-age girl and her sisters did come to to me to give a statement about their father, Jake Micellis. Mr. Micellis for many years worked as a plumber with a Mr. Guyton, a white man who owned a plumbing business in McComb, Mississippi. Early in March, 1964, late at night, a man came to their door of their home and hollered "Jake." Mr. Micellis walked to the door and saw a white man who handed him a note; the white man then walked to a car filled with other white men and drove away rapidly. The note read: "Jake Micellis, your job with Guyton Plumber is over, (signed) Klu Klux Klan." The next day, Micellis went to work and learned that Mr. Guyton, his employer, had received at his home a similar note. They both went to the McComb Police Station, and the Chief advised them to get a gun to protect themselves. Two weeks later, late at night, a large object came crashing through the Micellis's picture glass window. Mr. Micellis immediately called the police, who recovered the object which was a brick with a note attached, reading KLU KLUX KLAN. The very next day after the incident, Mr. Micellis went to work and learned that the same thing had happened to Mr. Guyton. Mr. Guyton told Jake Micellis that he would work there no longer so that no one would be hurt. Micellis found no work in McComb and is presently in Laurel, able to visit his family only occasionally.

After taking their statement, I told them that we would get it typed and would come later to get them to sign this statement before a notary. It was now getting late, and about time for the NAACP meeting; so we got a cab back in the main part of town.

Sitting there in the meeting hall, I realized that the Bob Moses, James Forman's, Martin Luther King's, and James Farmer's are not the real heroes. It is the C. C. Bryant's in the South, who get a little lead of publicity when they are mysteriously bombed or shot, who are the real heroes. For the latter are truly alone and more likely to confront the fact of death forsaken by their friends, as was forsaken a Jew 1,964 years ago. Yet these same C. C. Bryant's remain loyal, although alone, to their cause and their NAACP. At the meeting, Mr. Bryant exhorted the members to take up tickets for the NAACP "T.V. Spectacular" which was to be held in Jackson, Mississippi, May 14, 1964.

After the NAACP meeting, Bob, his wife, and I went back to Mr. Bryant's house and waited for John O"Neal, the other SNCC worker, to pick up Bob Moses" car which was ready but hidden from view. The owner of the repair garage asked for this, because he has white trade who would be suspicious of a car with a license plate from Jackson, Mississippi, who probably would be aware in this somewhat small town of an accident last night of a car in the name of "Bob Moses."

The NAACP meeting was held in a Negro masonic meeting hall on top of a Negro grocery store, the same store which Bob Moses and I tried earlier to get a statement from the owner or manager about the cross which recently burned in front of the store, but no one would say anything. About four or five men in their late 40's or early 50's stood about their parked cars, waiting for Mr. Bryant, the president of the local McComb NAACP. Driving by was a Mr. Stone who saw Bob. He stopped his car and was glad to see him. Mr. Stone once owned several cabs, and in 1961, used to help furnish transportation for Bob until he was forced to leave town. Stone has now settled in California, being in McComb to take care of some business.

Eventually Mr. Bryant arrived and the meeting began. It began with singing of "Leaning on the Everlasting Arms," which is hardly a Freedom Song. But in the hot stuffy room, coupled with my awareness of their experiences, made that song seemingly appropriate like the slave songs were appropriate. It seemed strange to see Bob Moses, a graduate of Harvard University, and his wife, a graduate of Chicago University, two people who some may describe as intellectuals, dressed in nondescript clothes, standing together and singing sincerely, softly, and sadly this old song.

I remembered how a few years ago some of my white friends and I, being self-appointed agnostics or atheists, would snicker and separate ourselves from the emotionalism in small Negro churches we were present in trying to influence into the movement. But that was in the days of abstract arguments. This day was a reality of life. While we stood up there singing that song, I finally realized that we were all alone--from society--from all that was outside that room. It was this fact that we were alone that we shared a common identity and were able to sing that song. Although others may marvel that so-called "intellectuals" with Northern middle class values for a background could sing with these people, it was not hard because in Southwest Mississippi, we all shared the only important background--we were all Negroes.

Although again Bob and I were introduced and we made our little talks, the most tearing thing odd of the meeting was Mr. Bryant pleading that the local branch of the NAACP provide him some protection to pay a person to guard his home, since volunteers are not reliable. It shocked me to find that his friend would not guard his place in shifts. The other members gave fine statements, and it was passed that Mr. Bryant's home would receive paid protection. Then Mr. Marshall made a statement which was really a cry, criticizing the local ministry for not supporting the civil rights struggle, who do not have in general any social message encouraging their church members to exercise their civil rights. It was now clear that in singing, there was unity, but that more often than not, each Negro is his own island.

Crosses have been burned in front of Negro churches in the area, although they have not been active in the Civil Rights Struggle. Maybe the Klan reggnizes their potential. Also, it is apparent that the Klan's activity does work--the cross burnings, beatings, and job firings; instead of uniting the community, it separates it--each family--even members of a family turning inward, separate from the other. Maybe this is brought on from experiences flowing from slavery days that unity invited total destruction.

By now, we had several statements which were typed and ready to be signed and notarized. I had also a new statement from Mrs. Lizzie Thompson, the wife of Mr. Willie Thompson, which was "hear-say" but still relevant. In 1962, after Carrol testified before the U. S. Civil Rights Commission's Mississippi Advisory Committee about her beating, the labor foreman told her son, also employed with the Illinois Central Railroad: "We have a Klu Klux Klan and anyone who draws the shortest straw has to kill someone, and if Carrol doesn't watch out, she will find herself dead."

I planned to be in the next county, Amite, and other counties Monday; so I gave Willie Thompson $5.00 to get these McComb, Pike County, statements notarized and to see the persons we talked with in order to get a car load of persons to come to Natchez to appear before the Advisory Committee of the U.S. Civil Rights Commission.

Bob, his wife, John O'Neal, and I said goodbye to Mr. Bryant and Mr. Thompson. Mr. Bryant again apologized for his wife and him not being able to be more hospitable under the circumstances which, to the contrary, was more than we expected. We stopped at a restaurant to eat supper and then went by side streets and alleys out of McComb, point to Liberty, Amite County.

Bob and his wife sat in front, and John O'Neal and I were in the back. During the 25 odd miles to Liberty, I shall not ever forget the light from the cars behind us as it reflected from his glasses as seen in the rear-view windows. We finally reached Liberty and drove farther a few more miles until we came to the farm of Mr. Westly.

Mr. Westly was one of the COFO contacts in Southwest Mississippi who had been very active in Aaron Henry's campaign for governor in Mississippi. Mr. Aaron Henry is President of COFO and the Mississippi Branches of the NAACP. Our main purpose in seeing Mr. Westly was to find out whether he or someone else would have a car and would be free to accompany me to see people in Amite County, Wilkinson County, and other surrounding counties.

Mr. Westly is a strong, wiry, and lean Negro in his early 40's. He owns jointly with his father and two other brothers a large farm, which he operates alone, except during the plowing and harvesting season, and that is why he could not be with me the next day to accompany me. This had been a very wet season and late Spring, and now it was dry. It was the first opportunity for him to plow for the planting of cotton and corn, and he must take every advantage of it. This would be the case for everyone in the county, Amite being a rural farm county. The use, too, of his car, would be very risky. The "whites" all knew Westly's car, and seeing a stranger--me--driving the car would surely put myself in jeopardy. They all knew that he had been busy in civil rights campaign of Aaron Henry; they all would therefore know I must have some "civil rights" purpose. I knew that I had to go to Jackson with Bob Moses and rent a Hertz car and return to the area.

Westly did take me to one brother who had had more contact with the "whites" in this area and may have information I could use. His brother lived in a small shack on the farm. By the time we got there, it was pitch black. Although Mr. Westly is a brave man, he was still cautious. When he drove to his brother's house, Mr. Westly told me to stay in the car and wait for him to see if he could talk to his brother. He called for his brother several times before the porch light came on, and his brother came out of the house. While sitting in the car, I remembered that when we had come to Westly's house, Bob had to call several times. It was obvious to me that Negroes just don't answer their doors at night unless they recognize the voice who is calling them, in Amite County. The shot-gunning of Herbert Lee and of Lewis Allen had made everyone cautious.

Mr. Westly and his brother began talking and before I knew it, I had fallen asleep. Mr. Westly eventually called me and I awakened, not aware of where I was for a few seconds. Mr. Westly's brother had no real firsthand knowledge except about Mr. Tobias, who, being a suspected president of the local NAACP, was told by Sheriff Daniel Jones to get out of the county. But being a farmer, he bought on credit and owed the local merchants alot of credit. When they found out what the sheriff had done, they were so angry that before Mr. Tobias and his family could move out, the sheriff came by and ordered him to stay. I asked whether we could see Mr. Tobias that same night. Westly's brother said that it would do no good anyway because Tobias denies now that this had ever occurred, he being so afraid. It seemed ironic that merchant creditors would protect a Negro from being run out of town but not from death. Their claims can be satisfied against the dead Negro's estate.

Mr. Tobias does have some relatives who live next to him, and they would have something to say, but it was obvious that Westly did not want to be going anywhere that night; but he did take me to see one of his share croppers. The story of Mr. Thomas Marshall was that in April, he and his family were tenant farmers on the property of Mr. Marshall, when one night he was aware of fire blazing in the bottom. He and his sons rushed to put out the fire and were busy fighting the blaze when Mr. Marshall's landlord drove up to see and then left. Soon he returned with the county fire department engines. He also had a shotgun. He was very angry and told the Marshall's to leave that same night, accusing them of starting the fire. The Marshall Family was able to borrow a pick-up truck from a neighbor, and not knowing where to go, came to Mr. Westly's farm. Mr. Westly has allowed them to stay at his place ever since.

At the time that night, I did not think that this was a civil rights case or even a Klu Klux Klan type activity. I did not think that this would be appropriate for a report before the Advisory Committee of the U. S. Civil Rights Commission. Now, I realize this may have been a mistake because this incident dramatized the usual lot of the Negro who in Southwest Mississippi is in a hostile society without legal protection.

Mr. Westly and I returned to his home. Bob Moses and the others had remained there; he was to finish typing the remainder of the statements I had procured. I told Westly that I would return to his home after 6 PM, Monday Evening. He was to bring to me another brother who had been fired from his job in Liberty when he attempted to register to vote. We left the Westly's home and finally reached Jackson, Mississippi around 2 AM.

On Monday Morning, I went to the COFO office on Lynch Street, Jackson. It was important to find Jesse Morris, the COFO-office staffer, who was to be coming to Natchez, Mississippi to contact witnesses and to develop an itinerary. The hearing was to be held the coming Wednesday.

On Monday Morning, I went to the COFO office on Lynch Street, Jackson, Mississippi. Bob Moses, before his departure to Atlanta, Georgia, said that Jesse Morris, a COFO staffer, was going to Natchez and with him I could plan my itinerary in Southwest Mississippi before the hearing on Wednesday Morning. While waiting for Jesse Morris, Rev. Arthur Thomas of the National Council of Churches, the person at whose request I was in Mississippi, came to the office, but soon he left on his way to Canton, Mississippi in special work of seeking to reach poor whites in that area on the behalf of civil rights for all.

Came also Mr. Courtney Siceloff who introduced himself as regional representative of the U. S. Civil Rights Commission. It was most fortunate that I was able to meet him, as he was the very one who was organizing the hearing by the Mississippi Advisory Committee in Natchez and who also was seeking witnesses who may testify at the hearing. I had already placed in my legal pad the names and addresses of contacts of COFO in Southwest Mississippi, plus places and persons involved in incidents that we were concerned with. Mr. Siceloff was going to be in Natchez Tuesday, so we compared notes and names of people and decided that we would meet there that day in Mr. Archie Curtis' Funeral Home. Mr. Jesse Morris Came, and since Mr. Siceloff and I would be in Natchez, it was decided that Jesse would not go. Instead, Miss Ann Bell, a COFO staffer who has researched Southwest Mississippi's intimidations, brutalities, and Klu Klux Klan activity, and whose home is in McComb, Mississippi, agreed to accompany me.

About 2 PM Monday, I finally picked up a Hertz Car, a fast 500 Galaxie Ford. Ordinarily, I preferred an unpretentious and cheaper compact, but since Ann and I were going back into Southwest Mississippi, I thought it was worth the expense. Only two years before, Bob Moses, Jim Travis, and Randolph Blackwell (the latter my fellow employee in Atlanta, Georgia) were in a car and were followed by a car-load of men who finally drew up to their side and shot into their car with automatic firing weapons. By some stroke of fate, no one was killed, but Jim Travis, the driver, suffered a serious wound in the neck. The Ford is hardly any real assurance against a similar type incident, but with its speed, it made me feel better.

Ema and I were finally on the road. As it was getting late, I decided against going to Port Gibson, Jefferson County, which is about 40 miles above Natchez, and decided to save the trip for Tuesday. Our plan was to drive straight South from Jackson to Brookhaven, Lincoln County, 60 miles away. We would see a contact there, a Dr. Lott, investigate cases of intimidation in that area, and then drive the next 40 miles or so until we reach Liberty, Amite County. We planned to spend the rest of the afternoon and evening in Amite County, looking for evidence and information and then go to McComb, Pike County, about 25 miles away from Liberty, Amite County, in order to sleep. I checking into a hotel and she staying with her mother.

When we reached Brookhaven, I had already called Dr. Lott and indicated my purpose. When we reached his office, he was very cordial in receiving us. He was a young Negro dentist in his early 30's. When I asked about cross burnings and other types of Klan activity, he pooh-poohed the very idea of it. When I asked about any kind of interference with voter registration, he answered that there is no kind of interference with registration whatsoever. He indicated here that the problem was Negro apathy, that any Negro who would attempt to register would be registered, if they would only pay their poll tax. He said that the last registration drive he ever knew about was the one conducted in 1952 by the Citizen's League, a group that is no longer functioning.

Ema and I glanced at each other, both of us thinking that it seemed incredulous that Lincoln County and Brookhaven were so free of the kind of intimidation that was present in the surrounding counties. I then asked him whether or not he heard about any cross-burnings and killings in any of the surrounding counties. Other than Pike and Amite Counties, which we were already aware of, he said that a patient of his, a Mary Clay, a girl from Beauregard, Mississippi, would be the only one intelligent enough to be able to tell me about the cross-burnings they have had in that area. He indicated that Beauregard is a Negro community, just off the road from where we had come, in Copiah County.

Mary Clay is a hair dresser and was working on a customer. She seemed to understand our purpose, etc., but she could only say that "she heard about cross burnings, but didn't see any." She would not give us any further help, but did direct us to her father-in-law home which was the biggest house of the group. When we drove up to Mr. Clay's house, they gladly invited us in and we were made to feel as if they had known Ema and me as long friends. Old Man Clay was now retired from the Illinois Central Railroad, and he has raised nine daughters and two sons, some of whom are college graduates. I marvelled that it was his wife who was so energetic and busy. Visiting them was an old friend and fellow worker of the Illinois Central Railroad by the name of Frank Glasp.

It was Mr. Glasp who gave me a signed statement that on April 24, 1964, a cross was burned at the railroad intersection leading into Beauregard, that crosses have been burned in the Negro quarters where we had just been, and that it was general knowledge that crosses have been burned all over Brookhaven near Negro businesses and housing projects. Mr. Glasp said that was especially true when in January many crosses were burned in Brookhaven the same time they were burned in McComb, Mississippi. Glasp also said that the cross at the railroad intersection was still there. Ema and I thanked everybody and drove off. Before I crossed the railroad track, I stopped the car, picked the charred cross, which broke when I picked it up. The biggest part was a 3 x 5, the cross being probably a 2 x 4. The cross was covered with half-burned rags, it being probable that not enough kerosene was thrown on it so that it could readily burn. A car was coming up, so I hurried, not caring for anyone to notice my interest in crosses.

In Beauregard, we found a Negro community of about 300 families, connected to the highway by a softly bending road which enters in the community after crossing a double railroad track, the Illinois Central Railroad. Just as soon as you cross the railroad track, there was a juncture road upon which were a general store and also upon which fronted several middle-class white-owned homes with spacious yards. I was then puzzled why Beauregard was called a Negro community. We doubled back towards the soft bending road and resumed it until shortly we came to the top of a hill. Upon the side of this hill were stretched 20 to 30 small houses, seemingly standing on stilts which were only patched up with weather boards, none with glass-paned windows, and all of them a funny weather-beaten reddish brown, the color of the earth upon which they stood.

There were emaciated dogs lying around, but it was the chickens that made the fuss as we approached. As we drove up into the housing section, Negroes peered out, half hidden in the darkness of the houses. We stopped at the first house and a young man, seemingly in his 20's, came to the door (the brave spokesman?). Ema Bell jumped out of the car. She had assumed the position of being "spokesman" before poor Negroes, feeling that she would know how to talk to them and put them at ease, she being, in a sense, "one of them." It was very hard for them to understand her or for her to understand them. There had been cross-burnings in the area but no one saw any. They were at least that smart They did tell us where the "Clays" lived, which was only a short distance away

The "Clays" were a settlement by themselves with about four houses grouped together. This area was altogether different from the area from where we had left. There was sufficient siding on the houses The dogs were still lazy, not even looking up when we drove up, but they were at least not skinny

Ema and I then stopped in Sesson, Copiah County, at the club or home of Mrs Mary Pendleton in front of which several crosses had been burned Several women, not relatives of Mrs. Pendleton, were sitting in chairs sunning themselves. Mrs Pendleton was not there but was due to return I decided that it hardly would be worth seeking to obtain her statement. If this was a "club" it seemed probable that she illegally sold whisky as all other "clubs" do. I also thought it was quite possible that that was not the only thing around ther that was sold illegally. She would therefore hardly do any reporting to me about cross-burnings. So Emma and I left Wesson.

As we drove through Brookhaven, we contemplated the fact that Mr. Glasp told us that it was "general knowledge" that there were cross-burnings in Brookhaven, whereas Dr. Lott had "ppoh-poohed" the idea. We knew that if we could not get any information about this from Dr. Lott, our COFO contact, it would do little good to ask a stranger--we mmight ask the wrong person. We were soon through Brookhaven, and by 5 or 6 PM, we were in Liberty, Amite County.

The first thing we wanted to find out was how to find Rev. Tobias' relative, Mr. Cassius Tobias. He lived somewhere near Liberty on a farm. An in-law of his lived in Liberty right on the highway going out of Liberty. As I drove, Emma looked for the house of the "in-law." It was on the left, but we had to drive until the next junction about 75 yards away, turn around so that we could park in front of her house. As I turned around and parked the car in front of the house, I saw that we had been followed by a young white boy in a white 500 Galaxie, who also turned around where I had and then sped back into town and parked where we could be visibly seen. I suddenly remembered that my car had been stopping when idling. I then wondered whether my black 500 Galaxie was tuned enough to out-speed his. I don't know whether I was comforted by the thought that probably I could because his car would be over-loaded with white farmers later that night.

We received instructions on how to reach the Tobias Farm and soon left the "in-law." Going back into town to take the road to the Tobias Farm, we noticed that we were not followed. Emma said to me that Liberty, Amite County, is off the main roads, and out-of-county cars are exceptions there. The white boy was probably a deputy who followed us enough in order to take our Jackson license number in order to find out who I was.

The Tobias', cousins to Rev. Tobias, were very friendly and very glad to see Emma. They knew her and had spoken to her on the phone many times about our case. They composed a tightly-knot family, owned land, and for generations, worked their own land and the land of others for set wages. They were a militant family and seemed to pride themselves that they have not been run-off, and have stood-off whites who would seek to harm them They are harmed. They told me that "they"(whites) won't bother us because they know that we stick together and would have to deal with everyone of us." This unity began, they said, when their grandfather was burned up in gasoline by the Klu Klux Khan many years ago.

I heard again the story of Rev. Tobias, who was believed by the sheriff to be president of the county NAACP, and because of this, was told to leave town, but because he owed money, was then told not to leave town

Of the Tobias"s, the one who did the most talking was Miss Evelina Tobias, who was about 29 years old. I asked her whether she would come with us that evening to see other people in Amite County. She said Yes, and she also agreed that she would go to Natchez Wednesday Morning for the hearing. She could tell the Advisory Committee the Tobias story and other incidents involving the family, such as the occasion where they would purchase money orders at the U.S. Post Office, other white persons who she did not know or say at the post office would demand from her to tell them where the money orders were being sent and who gave her the money or when their white neighbors with whom they had almost been friends many years all at once shot up their roof without any reason They also have been told to leave.

Evelina Tobias knew where the homes of other Negroes who had been intimidated; so at dusk, we found the residence of Mr. Lucious Woodard. He lived off the highway a few miles from Liberty; it appeared to me to be exposed to rifle fire from the highway. In his yard were cars in different stages of repair. Woodard, a husky Negro in his late 30's, gladly received us and understood easily what we were attempting to do and proceeded to give us a signed statement.

Mr. Woodard, having had specialized training in Detroit, had been employed 10 years as a mechanic for his employer, a white businessman, Harvey Motor Company in Liberty; but on Sunday Morning, April 19, 1964, his employer, Mr. J. T. Walsh, came by his home and said to Mr. Woodard, "I can't use you anymore. It aint nothing you done. You ought to know why. I can't tell you anymore." The way Mr. Walsh said it to him made it clear that Walsh was scared, and that he was a member of either the KKK or the WCC, or some gang. Mr. Woodard then gave me the names of six other Negroes who had been fired under the same circumstances as he, such as Charlie Caulfied, who had been in charge of deliveries at the IGA Supermarket; Earnest Hamilton, a presser and who did cleaning at the Liberty Laundry Company; Cleveland Walker, a highly-visible general handyman at the Fairway Food Store; Howard Floyd, who worked at the Sinclair Service Station as a service attendant; a James Carter, who owned a shoe repair shop in the town of Liberty, but was run out and is presently in California; and a Jack White, who had also been working as a service attendant at the local Texaco Service Station. There is also a community opinion among the Negroes that this same Jack White was hired to kill Lewis Allen, and is presently being held in the Baton Rouge Jail to keep him from talking.

Mr. Woodard and Evelina discussed a brother O'Quinn who lived in Centreville, Wilkinson County, who was "run" out of town recently after being "whaled by the law."; that it was this same O'Quinn's father who was bush-wacked the same way as was done Lewis Allen recently, over five years ago. Mr. Woodard believed that Mrs. O'Quinn would be willing to tell us about her son and also about another mysterious killing a la Lewis Allen a few weeks ago of a Mr. Clifton Walker, who was also shotgunned at both sides of his face as he was entering his home near Woodville, Mississippi. There was speculation that the murder grew out of the controversy around the integrating of the shower room of the Natchez Paper Mill where the deceased Walker had worked. However, also a la Lewis Allen, it was the widow who was made the prime suspect by the police. They also indicated to me the incident of an E. M. Jackson who was recently found dead in his car, supposedly from carbon monoxide poisoning, last Christmas, in Woodville, Mississippi. This was supposedly self-imposed despite the fact the man was severely beaten about the head.

With all these incidents in the neighboring county of Wilkinson, a county more than 70% Negro, it was clear that Tuesday Morning I should attempt to investigate and find people with personal experiences. For the rest of Monday Evening, it was decided that we see how many more affidavits, written statements, or persons who could appear before the Advisory Committee out of Amite County. We then left the Woodard's home, going to Mr. Westly's farm.

We had to go through Liberty in order to reach Mr. Westly's farm which was near a community called "Good Hope," 10 miles north of Liberty. It was now after 8:00, completely dark with lights producing little light. There was no discernible movement nor were people visible as we drove past the Courthouse through the town square. Evelina Tobias then pointed out a side road for us to take, for we did not want to return the same way we came in. The side road was enough only for one car, seemingly more like a tractor path. The rhythm and blues from a New Orleans station kept our spirits up, but I still thought I imagined that I saw a light reflect in the rear view mirror. After several minutes, we finally approached the state highway, and as soon as we neared the highway, bright lights from a car behind in the path from where we came blinded us, but only for a minute. After digging up some gravel, I accelerated the Ford at its utmost out of there, and in a short time, no lights were behind us. I felt very silly and began to wonder whether I was acting reasonable and becoming afraid too much.

We soon arrived at Mr. Westly's farm. He was chatting with a man who he had met earlier that day. His name was Frank Adam Robinson, who resides at Centreville, Wilkinson County. I talked with him while Mr. Westly went to get his brother, Roosevelt Lee, the one who was fired as soon as he attempted to register. Mr. Robinson is a self-employed junk man who works the several Southwest Mississippi counties. Although he could give no more information than that I already had procured in relation to the incidents in Pike, Amite, Wilkinson, and Franklin Counties, and it being all hear-say, I thought it may be useful to the Advisory Committee that he appear personally. He could indicate the atmosphere in these counties to the members of the committee. He agreed to go with us to Natchez Wednesday Morning. I told him that we would meet him there at the Westly Farm at about 8 AM.

Mr. Robinson, by his very own words, is typical of a growing number of Negroes, although to me a few in number, who in their early 50's are now willing to die. They have "Uncle Tomed" enough now that their children are out of school.

After a while, Mr. Westly returned without his brother, Roosevelt Lee. His brother did handwrite a statement which I took. It was now getting late, so we took our leave. As soon as we reached the highway to Liberty, I noticed we had a flat tire. I backed up into a driveway to a church, and with only the ceiling lights from the car, I was able to change the tire. The girls felt very uneasy in being seen inside the lighted car.

After the tire was changed, the drive back to Liberty to the home of Miss Evelina Tubins was uneventful. We dropped her off home and came back through Liberty to go to McComb where we were going to stay for the night. As we turned into the highway toward McComb, we saw eight to ten young white men standing around at a service station, this obviously being a place for the youth to hang around. Emma was uneasy. She told how she and Bob Moses, when they were working in voter registration in the county three years ago, would have to avoid being trapped by the Klan and had on occasions turned around in the highway to miss them. After we reached the "resume speed" sign, I relaxed and sped on towards McComb, Mississippi.

About 10 miles away from Liberty, we could see in front of us on the left side of the road a flashing red light. I was then approaching at 65 miles. At first I thought that just a state cop had stopped someone, and then I saw that someone was circling a flashlight in a large circle. A car approached me and passed me going in the opposite direction. So I had decided to go on through, having slowed down only to about 50 miles per hour. As I went through the area, a state cop who had the flash light jumped off the side of the highway as we went through. I then suspected that I might be in trouble and stayed at 50 miles per hour for a few hundred feet until I came through a curve and then I went back to 65 miles per hour. After a couple of minutes I noticed a car with even bright lights trailing me; so I let the engine brake down to 50. In a few minutes, red lights reflected in the rear view mirror. I marveled how calm both Emma and I were. As if a release of tension from trying to avoid the kind of situation, it had at last happened. I stopped the car on the side of the road and jumped out. Before I could turn to see him, the state trooper was there and ordered me to place my hands on top of the roof, and he searched me. He turned the flash inside the car and then into my eyes and cursed, asking why I tried to run him down. He was quite angry. I tried to explain to him that I could not see him on the highway until I was up to him, and I thought that his big circle was for me to go on like the other car. I started to apologize. It seemed a little out of place, but I said finally anyway that I was sorry. He answered that I bet I was sorry, saying that I was lucky that he did not shoot. He said that anybody who knocks him off the road is going to jail. He asked Emma whether she had a license. She said Yes. He told her then to follow us, he ordering me in his car.

He went back the scene where a prior accident had occurred, which he indicated was a terrible accident, in a tone of voice as if I was also responsible for it. I asked whether anybody got hurt in a soliciticus tone of voice. He said yes. My own survival instincts indicated that I must appear as a human being as much as possible, rather than as a "Nigger." I was concerned; being worrried about others took pressure off me from being worried about myself. While in the car, it was startling to hear on the police radio a description of Rev. Arthur Thomas, National Council of Churches, 475 Riverside Drive, New York. He must have been picked up, I thought.

We got to the scene of the accident where another state cop was also present. My arresting officer ordered me out of the car and in a loud voice told me to stay in front of his car and lights, and warned me that if I moved, he was going to put a bullet in my head.

Eventually the wrecked cars were towed away and the trooper turned to me. He asked to see my driver's license and I showed him both my license and RRB's Credit Card for Hertz Car. He asked me where I was going in such a hurry, and I said that I was taking my girl friend home to her mother. He asked me what we had been doing in Liberty and whether we were coming from Baton Rouge. I said no, thinking that was too much of a lie which might be used to catch Emma on the same question. So I told the truth, as vague as possible, that we were just visiting some of her people in Liberty, coming from Jackson. He asked where I worked, and I said that I worked for the Southern Regional Council in Atlanta. He was curious about it and asked what the group did. This gave me an opportunity to expound for a few minutes that the purpose of the Southern Regional Council was concerned in the economic development of the South. I told him that we were particularly concerned about Amite County where there is a high percentage of poor whites and Negroes unemployed and underpaid, and that we were interested in remedying this.

He then called me "Reverend" and asked me jokingly whether I wanted to be under the jail or in the jail. I told him that I never had been in jail and would not know which would be the better. The trooper then became friendly and said that I would be released on cash bond, and proceeded to call the sheriff who would approve the appearance bonds. He grinned and said, "I know how it is--you in your big car with your girl--and not caring what was going on." I followed with my concern about her getting home, indicating that her mother would be quite angry in keeping her out past 11 PM. I asked the trooper what time it was and after 11 PM; so I sighed again.

Eventually the sheriff, David Jones, came with a few men. Emma was made to get out of the car and she stood next to me. I told her what I had said to the cop. With chagrin, I saw that Sheriff David Jones was quite interested in what was in the back seat of our car. There were my brief cases and NAACP Legal Defense Fund materials which I had gathered from my trip in New Orleans. Also in the front seat were my legal pads and statements from McComb, Pike County, and Liberty, Amite County. By a stroke of fortune, the Hertz key chain had broken, so only the ignition key was in that car. I had the trunk key in my pocket. Even now, I wonder how the sheriff and his friends would have reacted if he had found somewey toopen the trunk and saw the cross. What surpeised Emma was that the sheriff did not recognize her despite her past activities in the area.

What I had in the car interested them. Emma was told to get in the police car with me. The State Cop solicitous said that the sheriff would "drive my car into Liberty." Knowing the state trppper's quick changes of temper, I did not think it worthwhile to protest the illegal search of my car at that time, it being better that I try to get out of the situation as quickly and easily as possible so that I could finish the work for the hearing by the Advisory Committee.

The state trooper drove us into town and stopped by the doctor's office to see about the persons hurt in the accident. The light in the car was on, and I asked him to turn the light off. He said sternly that the light was staying on. So Emma and I sat exposed to the eyes of people who would later identify or recognize us, but fortunately, no one came by. We looked at his report and saw that his name was Sgt. B. Butler. The trooper came out of the building. I asked about the patients, and he said that they would live. We asked Ann whether she was attending school. She answered in a sweet-girlish voice, yes, that she was a sophomore at Jackson State. I then interjected how angry her mother was going to be at me for keeping her out late.

Sgt. Butler then drove us to Sheriff Daniel Jones' office. Our black car was parked right next to its twin, the white Ford Galaxie. I said out loud, "There is the Deputy's car," but the State Trooper did not respond one way or the other.

They let Ann sit in the car. When we entered the lighted room, only Sheriff Daniel Jones was there. I wondered to myself where the other two men were who had been with the sheriff down the highway when he had first searched the car. Jones was looking through my legal pads, one for Pike County, the other for Amite County. Also in his possession were statements and affidavits, and also the COFO materials concerning intimidation and brutality in Southwest Mississippi. He also asked for whom I worked, and I repeated the same story but being a little more explicit that I had been researching the "economic conditions" in Amite County, knowing where my notes were going to lead him. By that time, Butler had demanded my billfold and spent much time going through my cards. He found my membership card to the Florida Bar, my NAACP membership card, and my CORE membership card and threw them to the sheriff, saying "that communist organization."

The sheriff took my Florida Bar card and asked me if I was an attorney. I said yes. He then said, "Well attorney, what good is being a lawyer doing you now?" I admitted that it was not doing me much good. Sheriff Jones went briefly through my report on Amite Countyand said, "Well, we don't want Bobby Kennedy down here, so I will give these papers bil back to you nice and pretty." I don't think he noticed where he had been involved in the Lewis Butler Allen murder or the Tobias story.

The State Trooper then motioned the sheriff into another room and discussed something about which I could not hear. The sheriff then came out, took my papers and placed them in his safe. The trooper then left. After I had been charged with reckless driving and failure to stop for an emergency vehicle, the sheriff then said that my cash bond was $100, and asked whether I wanted the trial in the morning or in the afternoon on Wednesday. I chose the afternoon. He then said for me to be there at 3 PM, warning me that he wanted me to be there.

I was free. I got in the car, and Ann drove off. She drove past a place where Lewis Allen was shot, which I really didn't care to see at that time; and she searched for the road that would lead out of Liberty other than the highway toward McComb. It had been two years since she had been in the area, and she couldn't find it. We drove back into the main part of Liberty and went past the courthouse into the highway toward McComb. It was now after 1 AM and it seemed that no one was stirring. Ann drove slowly, both of us keeping close eyes to the side of the road. About 15 miles away from Liberty, we drove past a building behind which a state trooper was parked. About six or seven miles away from McComb, lights of a car approached us from behind. We were traveling only about 50 MPH. The car passed us, and with our bright lights shining into it, we could see six tall men sitting ram rod, straight—who seemed to be farmer types—all of them wearing wide-brim hats. Ema in about a mile turned off from the highway onto a county road which leads to Magnolia, Mississippi. From Magnolia, we entered McComb from the side. Ema said that if we had gone farther on the highway, they probably would have met us at an under-pass where the highway divided with no place to turn around.

As we drove into McComb, we passed a Billingsley All-Night Gasoline Station, at which Mr. C. C. Bryant had said earlier that he does not like to do business because he believed that the owner was a member of the Klan. There were several cars of people gathered at the station, but we did not tarry there in order to determine whether Mr. Bryant's belief was true or not.

Ema then dropped me off by the Negro hotel. I told her to return at 6 AM. I wanted to be out of Amite County before the sheriff would get to his office. Also, we had to get all the information as soon as we could out of Wilkinson County and get to Natchez, Mississippi so that I could report to Courtney about the sheriff seeing my papers.

I had a very restless night; however, I was dressed and ready to go when Ema came by. I decided not to take the most direct route to Centreville and Woodville, Wilkinson County, which was by Liberty, Amite County; but rather, we drove south out of the way and then took the county road to Centreville. One pick-up truck followed our car for about five miles, but it went on to Liberty when we turned off into a very rugged county road that finally led into Centreville.

We soon reached the home of Mother O'Quinn, 94 years old, but seemed to be in her 70's. When we introduced ourselves, she invited us in her half-lighted living room. We explained to her why we were there. She understood and was eager to cooperate. The daughter-in-law, Ida O'Quinn, owner of the club, who we were looking for was in Florida; so we decided to take her statement.

Her own son, married to Ida O'Quinn, was shot-gunned one dark night as he was coming into his driveway, over five years ago. Their own son, Clarence O'Quinn, who had made his home in Florida and was teaching, came to Centreville to live and comfort his mother. Around the first of April of this year, he came home and told her that Bill Ivory, Chief of Police in Centreville, had beaten him. She asked what happened. Clarence said that he was only going in the post office and was on the steps when the Chief approached him without any explanation or cause and said, "You damn uppity Nigger, you think you own the town," and began to beat O'Quinn. Clarence asked his grandmother what he should do. She said, "You have a life worth living; you should not throw it away. You have no rights and privileges here." She told him to get all his things and leave Centreville that day. Clarence did leave Centreville that day to save his life and is presently in Florida.

In this work, I had been objective, not emotionally involved with the particular person, but tears came to my eyes as Ann and I turned to leave. I had almost become used to stories of beatings and "mysterious shot-gunnings." I had not become used to a mother telling her son to leave her--in order to live--because he had no rights and privileges. I suddenly remembered the hot argument I had with a high school chum back in 1951. He had volunteered for the Air Force rather than waiting to be drafted in the infantry. He argued that he did not want to die in Korea fighting people of his color, when here in the United States he was not even treated as a human being. I do not remember the counter arguments I used, but whatever they were, they are implicit in the activity of Ann and I trying to get statements before the Mississippi Advisory Committee to the United States Civil Rights Commission; but moist eyes belied the same old frustrations felt by my old high school chum.

Ann and I then went to the O'Quinn's restaurant in Centreville to see her daughter who might be able to tell us about the Walker killing sis Lewis Allen in Woodville a few miles away. Although Mrs. Ida O'Quinn was in Florida, her daughter was there managing the restaurant. She was able to direct us only to the address of his mother-in-law, who could tell us nothing. She was only able to give us a vague direction to his former residence, which was supposed to be on the way to Natchez near Woodville. We didn't find the house, but rather than spending anymore time, I decided that we should go on to Natchez. I didn't want to miss my appointment with Courtney Siceloff of the U.S. Civil Rights Commission. I wanted to tell him what happened, hoping the USCRC would procure my papers by a court order.

It was a relief to arrive in Natchez. Ann didn't understand my feelings because the very reason the hearing was being held in Natchez is that most of the known cases of brutalities and beatings have occurred in Natchez. After a while, we finally arrived at the funeral home of Mr. Archie Curtis, the place where I was to meet Siceloff.

[illegible] is a Negro who seemed to be in his 50's. He has an Adenauer-type face resulting from having recently suffered from a stroke. It had not incapacitated him except to require him to speak slowly and to write slowly. He welcomed us into his private study. Although it was already planned that he appear before the Advisory Committee, he told us what had happened to him. One night in March of this year, he received a telephone call for him to pick up a body. He and his assistant, Willie Jackson, took the hearse wagon and drove in the direction of the given address. He said to Jackson, "We must have the wrong address" because they were in a deserted area when a car drove up behind them and they were ordered to stop. Curtis told me that six armed men in hoods got out of their car, and one of them demanded from him his NAACP membership card. Curtis told them that he had no NAACP card (it so happened that his new one had not yet arrived). They proceeded to beat him and his assistant. He begged them to stop beating him, telling them that he had had a stroke, but they continued until they were tired of it and then left him and his assistant in the street. This same "trick" happened to another Negro funeral director, George West.

Mr. Curtis is actually not active in any NAACP but has been active with Natchez Negro Business League which has been urging Negroes to register. Their success which would arouse the KKK to be excited is that only about 200 Negroes are registered.

Mr. Siegloff arrived, and while eating a lunch brought by Emma, I told him what happened. He expressed a great concern about my papers because now in jeopardy were all the people I talked with, being that they were in the possession of the Sheriff, Daniel Jones, the same one accused of being involved in the Lewis Allen killing and who was said to have ordered Rev. Tobias to leave and then ordered him to stay. Siegloff said that he would be willing to go and get the papers. Before that moment, I did not see any need to go back to Liberty. I assumed that it was the usual practice of being able to forfeit the appearance bond. I called the CORO office in Jackson and reported what had happened to us. They asked what I thought I should do, and I said I may sue Sheriff Jones for damages and for the return of my papers in a federal civil action. Both Sheriff Jones and State Trooper Sgt. Butler had violated my civil rights for their illegal search and seizure. Then I called my Atlanta office, and I was advised that I should call Sheriff Jones to see whether it would be acceptable for me to forfeit the bond. Then Mr. Siegloff was called by his office and was instructed that there is a question whether the U.S. Civil Rights Commission had already acquired an interest in my papers because I was not working for them and, therefore, was not acting as their agent. The CORO attorney then called me and advised that if I forfeited the bond, a bench warrant could be issued for my arrest, and I would have to leave Mississippi. Also, any federal action would be clouded by the forfeiture. They, too, agreed that I should sue Sheriff Daniel Jones. Rather than forfeiting or even getting consent that I could forfeit the bond, I decided to return to Liberty and appear for the trial and stand mute; but at the same time, I believed that I should present a written demand for my papers.

Upon the advice of Mr. Wiley Branton, I asked Mr. Siegloff to be a witness or ascertain whether a member of the FBI would be present. Siegloff was willing but said that he had to call Washington to make sure that they were on notice. As it was after 2:00 and the trial was at 3:00, Emma and I left Natchez.

When we arrived in Liberty, I already felt like a martyr. I had solemnly prepared written motions, such as, appearance to stand mute, demand for papers, and request for an attorney and a jury trial. I gave copies to Emma, putting them in an envelope which she did. I anticipated that they would deny that I ever presented the motions.

When I arrived in the office of Sheriff Jones, a quite sullen deputy sheriff was waiting for me. Soon, I heard the voice of Mr. Siegloff, and I felt as if the U.S. Marines had arrived. Mr. Siegloff identified himself and expressed an interest in the papers which Sheriff Jones had. The sheriff, in a surprised voice, said well, he was going to give the papers back anyway. "I had information which was useful for his investigations," he said. We all then went up to the Justice of Peace's office.

The Justice of Peace was an elderly man who seemed almost gentle. After reading the accusation, he asked me for my plea and I told him that I stood Mute and explained what that meant. Sheriff Jones interfered, saying that in Mississippi there is no such plea, that NOLO CONTENDERE took the place of "standing mute." I admitted that I was not all that familiar with Mississippi law except that it was a common law state, and "standing Mute" is part of the common law. I then presented the written motions and the demand for my papers. I may have made a mistake, but I proceeded to explain my action on account of the fact that the sheriff had taken my papers without my consent. Sheriff Jones exclaimed that he was going to return my papers regardless of whether I plead guilty or not guilty; so he hurriedly went downstairs and restored to me my papers.

I then pleaded "guilty" after a long pause of thinking. It seemed unreasonable to fight both the traffic case and the sheriff's action. I decided to fight Mississippi's methods of dealing with traffic violations another day. The Justice of Peace then gave a statement about the seriousness of what I had done and that the maximum sentence included 30 days; but because I was so "reasonable and fair," so said the Justice of Peace, I was fined $50 for both charges and $19 for the cost of court. After paying the fine, we all left. Soon Ema and I were leaving Liberty.

The day before, Monday Afternoon, I had planned to go on Tuesday to Port Gibson, Claiborn County. COFO had a contact there who could probably lead us to persons who probably could make an appearance for the Committee or at least give us some signed statements; but it was already 4 PM, and we were reluctant to be driving after sunset. Siceloff had offered to give us his car because of the belief that our enemy now knew our car. We planned to stay in McComb Tuesday Night, and Port Gibson was too far away. We decided therefore, to go only to Bude, which was only 30 miles away from McComb.

Bude is in Franklin County, in which is comprised mostly of the Homochitto National Forest. COFO had received a newspaper account dated in March of this year picturing the Negro club, the "Horseshoe Circle, owned by a Mr. John Clark, to be demolished in front by dynamite. The picture shows the stone front demolished by, again, "unknown persons." When we arrived there, we talked to Mrs. Clark, who was obviously afraid and who did not give us a statement. Other than that, she was friendly, and we took our leave.

On our return to McComb, we took a state highway which was out of the way, going to Brookhaven rather than going directly to McComb. While driving to Bude, we noticed several sheriff cars going in the opposite direction. Although they were un-marked, Ema stated that she knew that they were sheriff cars because of antennas, etc. I joked that they might just be going to a sheriff's meeting. She said that there must be a Klan meeting in the area, and that, of course, local sheriffs are the principal figures in Klan meetings. So leaving Bude going towards McComb, we didn't take the same road because the people we had met on the road previously might just be interested in two Negroes in a "fast-back" black Ford Galaxie with a Jackson license plate after getting the word from Sheriff Daniel Jones. Being in even a national forest did not seem a safe way to keep Mississippi's wonderful reputation of not having had lynchings in recent years.

When we arrived in McComb, Mississippi, we re-visited Mr. C.C. Bryant and Mr. Willie Thompson, seeing that the affidavits which he had would be notarized and sought to assure that a car load of people from McComb would come to Natchez. Mr. Willie Thompson said that at least he and Mr. Bryant's brother would drive to Natchez. Ema then dropped me off by the hotel I stayed the night before, and she then drove to her home.

Around 6:30 AM Wednesday Morning, Ema and I left McComb going to Liberty to pick up Evelina Tobias. We again wanted to be out of Liberty before too many people stirred around. We then remembered that we had procured no real information about the Lewis Allen Killing of February of this year. During the excitement evolving around my situation, we had relied upon the Jackson COFO office to follow through in reaching Mrs. Allen in Louisiana. Ema called her and told her as I had promised, that we would pay for her expenses if she would come to Natchez, but Mrs. Allen told her that she didnit want to have anything to do with Mississippi. However, we still had hopes that she might come.

After we picked up Evelina Tobias, she told us about how the Sunday before , a high school boy by the name of John Harris was beaten by the Klan. Evelina knew where the family lives, so we went there to talk to them. They lived in the town of Gloster, 12 miles west of Liberty on a small farm. In reaching their home, we had to pass the homes of Sheriff Jones and the deceased Lewis Allen! Both of them had been neighbors. We turned into the driveway of the Harris' home, and Evelina went to the door and brought to the car Mrs. Lillie M. Harris, the mother of John Harris. I told her what we were doing and asked her what happened to her son. She said that on Sunday, April 19, her son, the members of the family, and members of the choir were coming home from church when hoodlum whites, without their hoods, drove up in their car and stopped, ordered John Harris to come to them and proceeded to assault him with the blunt end of their pistols. He screamed for his mother and then begged for them to not kill him. Without hearing more, I asked her whether she and her son would go with me to the hearing in Natchez. She said yes, and in a short while we had picked up her son, who wore a cap to cover the stitches on his head wounds. We then picked up Mr. Franklin Robinson at Mr. Westly's farm, and finally reached Natchez at about 11 AM.

When we arrived at the place of the hearing at the Natchez Post Office, Mr. Siegloff asked us to return later because members of the Mississippi Advisory Committee were having a preliminary discussion. We went to a Negro restaurant, and while there I met Mr. Archie Curtis, who notarized my affidavit that I witnessed personally the signatures on the signed statements I had in my possession. He also brought with him a man by the name of Mr. Willie Birdie who lives in Kingston, Adams County, a community which is just outside of Natchez. Mr. Willie Birdie had somebody for me to see. I told Ema to take everybody on down to the U.S. Post Office and that I would be there later.

Even Mr. Curtis could not come with Mr. Birdie and me because it was a secret hiding place, and with him already having been beaten, he could be beaten again in order to tell the Klan where the place was. Mr. Birdie brought me to the place, and as I entered a bedroom, there was lying on the bed a young Negro of about 25 years of age. (Whereas only this person is in immediate danger as distinguished from the other persons who gave me their statements and who gave me their statements and who are in probable danger only, I shall not expose this person's name.)

He had worked as a general handy man for a white farmer. On April 13 of this year, on a Sunday Night, he was in the barn. He was trying the ignition because the truck had not been starting. He just happened to turn around and stared in the barrel of a shotgun. A man in a black hood holding the gun said, "Get out boy." The Negro pushed the gun out of the window and quickly rolled the window up. He turned around to roll the window up on the other side of the truck and looked into the barrel of a rifle. This man also in a black hood told him, " You better do as he says." Each of them got to the side of him and began marching him to the back of the barn. As soon as he came to the edge where he could see back of the barn, he said about six more men in hoods were all armed with guns. One man said, "We have been waiting for this a long time" He immediately pushed the two by his side together and turned, sprinting toward the house. He was able to get one side of the barn between him and them for a while, but he had at least 50 yards to reach the porch of the house. He ran screaming for Mrs. X, (the owner of the farm), and had attained about 20 yards when he received a shot in his shoulder and back. The force of the bullets spunned him slightly around when he was dropped by a shot in his leg.

Mrs. X ran out screaming, "What is the matter, what is the matter?" She saw that he was covered with blood. She told him to "play" like he was dead, and she ran and got him a raincoat to cover up with. With both of them straining together, they were able to get him on the floor of a car and she drove him to the hospital.

Why did this happen? He is the only Negro in Kingston who has been registered and he has been voting since 1960. Whites have made pointed remarks about this, his voting being a common known fact. Because of this, he has acquired a personal debt of more than $435 medical expenses incidental to four bullet wounds.

I then returned the the hearing of the Advisory Committee. While the hearing was in session, I saw now that there remained only one more hurdle--to get my witnesses back safely in Liberty and McComb, and then get back to Jackson. Courtney Siceloff was worried about this. So was William Taylor, the General Counsel to the United States Civil Rights Commission, who was there with the Advisory Committee. We also were worried about retaliation by the Klan against these people.

When we first had arrived in Natchez and when my party first got out of the car, I noticed how we attracted the attention of curious people, such as the white attendant, who in the service station next to the bus station "studied" us and then made a phone cal and talked to someone while still "studying" us.

On my return to the post office and when I went back to the car to get the cross out, and as I carried the cross down the block across the street, going to the hearing room, I deliberately avoided looking into the face of the same attendant or other white persons standing about. I left the cross outside the door of the hearing room, not wanting to take it in. I felt that it might just interrupt the proceedings.

Pretty soon two car loads of men drove up th the post office, disembarking their passengers. Although there were a few thin high school youths and a thin man about 40 in a business suit, the most of them were husky white men in their 20's and 30's wearing tight levis and khakis, western hats, string-ties, and sunglasses. One wore sun-mirrored glasses which he wore throughout the hearing, and sat in the front row easily frightening the members of the Committee. However, most of them were in good spirits, even joked about the cross standing by the doorway. When they first came to the door, they hesitated when they were confronted by the scene of an integrated panel presided by the Negro, Britton. Not wishing them to be standing by the door because of my example, I pointed to vacant seats. They nonchalantly took their seats, even next to Negroes--some preferring to cluster together and some preferring to sit in the front row, as did the one with mirrored sunglasses.

They remained quiet, but they were still an ominous group by their mere presence. One of them got a pad out and as each witness would identify him self, the "cowboy" would busily write down the person's name, address, etc. I received a hidden joy to see the members of the committee become a little unnerved, especially Mr. William Taylor of the U. S. Civil Rights Commission who seemed plainly frightened. I was glad the Klan was there because that was exactly what we wanted to show the committee, and eventually the American people's fear and intimidation produced by the Klan. Only Dr. Britton, although wet with beads of perspiration on his forehead--which I cannot blame because of all the stuffiness of the hearing room, seemed brave when he dryly stopped the proceedings. He indicated that the committee noticed the presence of new people who had just arrived. He explained the purpose of the committee and indicated that if any of them had any information to present, such as being injured by violations of their civil rights, etc., the committee would hear them.

In a few minutes, I saw Attorney William Taylor abruptly leave and then return-turned. Dr. Britton then called a short recess and asked everyone to leave. I then saw the local police come in the room. At first I thought he was after my charred cross, but I learned later that Taylor had received a bomb warning.

After my people from Pike and Amite Counties testified, I presented my statements and explained to them why some of them were not notarized. I also produced the charred cross, since some of the members of the committee had never seen one.

For the closed session, Dr. Britton asked everyone except the witnesses and their families to leave. After a short recess, the closed session was called and more testimonies were taken.

By this time, Robert Moses and his wife had made their appearance. Dr. Britton acknowledged their presence and asked Bob whether he had anything to say. Bob then gave a run-down of all the cases and killings and brutalities which had been reported to COFO and demonstrated the need for federal protection in the area. Dr. Britton then asked Bob a leading question about the kind of people doing violence. Bob told the Committee that these people believe that the U. S. Government is an illegal government and that their actions are a response to their beliefs.

It was now after 4 PM, and by an unspoken unanimous agreement, it was decided that we terminate the hearing so that everyone would be able to get home before dark. Because my people has to go to Liberty, Amite County, and McComb, Pike County, I was able to persuade Dr. Britton, with his car load of committee members, and Courtney Siceloff, both of whom were going to Jackson, to go out of the way and go as far as Bude, Franklin County, following us. This would leave only about 30 miles for us to go, but this 30 miles was all in Amite County. Robert Moses and his wife were also in a car. It was clear that a caravan of five cars was now attracting attention, but at a very slow pace, we finally reached Bude and waved goodbye to Dr. Britton and Siceloff, who continued on their way to Jackson. Mr. Robinson, who was in my car, offered that I should go only as far as Mr. Westly's farm and that he would take Misses Tobias and the Harris"s home. I appreciated that realizing that my black car was well known in Liberty, and it would be safer if they were in Mr. Robinson's car. We reached Mr. Westly's home and I said goodbye to these good people of Amite and Wilkinson Counties. I was glad that I had given to Mr. Taylor of the USCRC the names and addresses of persons I brought to the hearing

Our caravan of three cars went by an out-of-the-way country road until we were about six miles from McComb, and then we said goodbye to Mr. Thompson and Mr CC C. Bryant who drove their car on to McComb

I let Ema drive. She complained about how slow Bob habitually drove She wanted to hurry to Jackson--she wanted to party. Ema Bell is a young girl about 19 who is really no different from other 19 year olds She had already forgotten the experiences of the last three days. She had the vaguest notions about whether to return to school. She is one who truly lives for the moment When I later saw her in the shop where the COFO staffers ate, she hardly recognized me.

Whereas myself--10 years older--must walk in a state of shock of savoring each day the experiences of being with these people existing in a brutal state whose Southern spokesmen from Alabama had just finished crusading in my denied home state of Indiana to win 30% "Stand Up for America" vote. There was a temporary relief when we finally reached Jackson, but I knew that in Jackson, Wisconsin, Indiana, Maryland, and Atlanta, there are people no different from the Western hat, sunglass-wearing people sitting in the hearing room in Natchez, Mississippi.

When I had paid the cash bond to Sheriff Daniel Jones the Monday Night before, I asked the sheriff whether I could speak to him frankly. I had already seen an "Impeach Earl Warren pamphlet" on his desk. He said that he always intends to speak frankly. I then said that I was interested in Mississippi and the rest of the South in being better places for all the people, both black and white. The sheriff rejoined, not in an agry tone of voice, that that was his duty--to make his county a safe place for all the people He said he has been surely tamed by outside agitators--who are bent to break the law and stir up people, and that he intends to enforce the law. He mentioned Bob Moses. He then produced the well-known picture of Martin Luther King sitting with a couple of so-called Communists at a Highlander Folk School meeting. He said that "this is the type of people we are dealing with." He then looked at me and said, "I don't know how you are tied up with this. I think you are just brain-washed. I advise you, I am not ordering you or warning you, I am just advising you to leave Amite County and not come back."

Therefore, Bob's statement before the Advisory Committee is indeed true. I believe that the sheriff was actually sincere in believing the civil rights movement is a communist conspiracy. But so was the KKK sincere in the belief that in the 1870's the Scalawags and the Carpetbaggers were raping the South. But how can this justify the murder of innocent Negroes?

One night in February of this year, Mr. Lewis Allen had just got out of his truck when obviously he found himself in trouble. It seems that he was trying to run and get under the truck when he was shot from both sides by deer shot and buck shot. His face was so indistinguishable that at his funeral the casket was shut.

He had signed an affidavit, with a copy filed with the COFO office that he had witnessed the murder of another Negro, Mr. Herbert Lee, by the member of the Mississippi Legislature.

Mrs. Lewis Allen was arrested by Sheriff Daniel Jones for the killing of her husband and was subsequently released. Robert Moses came to the funeral. His assistant, Dave Dennis of Core, cried without shame before a gathering of New York area attorneys.

Such, as this report indicates, is the war against communism.

November 18, 1961, McComb, Mississippi: A shotgun was fired through the window of the bedroom occupied by Dion Diamond and John Hardy.

December 13, 1962, Jackson, Mississippi: Rev. Thomas E. Johnson, a member of the Mississippi State Advisory Committee to the U. S. Civil Rights Commission, was indicted and his wife jailed as a result of his forwarding to Washington complaints that Negroes are being mistreated.

February 28, 1963 Greenwood, Mississippi: Three registration workers were attacked with gunfire on Highway 82 just outside Greenwood. The shots were fired from a 1962 white Buick. The car in which the workers were riding was punctured by eleven bullets. One worker was wounded in the neck and shoulder. The other two escaped injury.

Negroes Seeking Vote Have Trouble in Delta

By Robert E. Baker
Staff Reporter

JACKSON, Miss. — Mississippi is tough for Negroes engaged in voter-registration programs.

While violence has been nil, they are subjected to arrest and intimidation and the shout of "Communist."

Negro registration efforts are being concentrated in the Delta, around the Sunflower County area, home of U. S. Sen. James O. Eastland, who has few peers if any as the Deep South's "top banana" segregationist.

In Quitman County, a Negro went to the Court House at Marks, where the registrar sits, and was arrested. When two bondsmen showed up, they were jailed too.

A Negro who uses his yellow bus to transport workers to the cotton fields recently used it to transport prospective Negro voters from Ruleville to Indianola in Sunflower County. The Highway Patrol arrested him. They said his bus should have been painted green.

Business Closed Down

In Ruleville, a Negro who operates a dry-cleaning shop got interested in voter registration. Police suddenly found that his boiler had no protective wall as required by law. His business was closed down. So was the business of another Ruleville Negro, suddenly found to have improper bathroom fixtures.

Last Sunday, officials in Ruleville remembered the Sunday law and forced Negro businesses to close down that day.

A Negro photographer in Greenwood sublet office space to some of the voter-registration workers. The photographer was arrested on a bigamy charge after police questioning.

Recently, Charles McLaurin of St. Louis, a worker for the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee of Atlanta, was distributing registration literature in Ruleville and was brought before Mayor Charles N. Dorrough.

The Mayor explained the ordinance against distributing literature without a license. McLaurin asked if the ordinance didn't violate the U. S. Constitution.

"Boy, you don't know where you're at," came the reply.

The Negroes know where they're at. They're in Mississippi, the heart of the defiant South, and it's been a long, hot summer.

One day last month in Clarksdale, where Negroes have been engaged in a boycott of white merchants, Willie Griffin spoke to some Negroes about registering to vote.

A policeman accused her of trying to take the Negroes away from downtown and thus enforce the boycott. She was marched to the police station and put in a cell without a chair or cot.

Finally Miss Griffin was charged with restraint of trade, resisting arrest, destroying public property and possessing obscene literature. Her bail; $1500.

The Negro voter push is a coordinated affair, comprising the SNCC, CORE, the Urban League, the Southern Christian Leadership Conference and the NAACP.

Part of Project

It's part of the Voter Education Project, operating out of Atlanta and financed by highly reputable foundations to conduct research in the best methods of expanding suffrage in the South.

The Mississippi delta was picked for strategic reasons. Two out of three of its citizens are Negro. Clarksdale is the home of Aaron Henry, State NAACP president, who has built an active NAACP chapter there.

And the fact that it's Sen. Eastland's home territory must have played a part.

But into the picture last July popped Carl Braden, field secretary of the Southern Conference Educational Fund of New Orleans.

In a 1954 Louisville trial, Braden was accused in a Kentucky State court of blowing up his own house to foment race unrest and was convicted. The decision was reversed when the U. S. Supreme Court, in another case, ruled that Congress had preempted the field of subversion laws from the states.

Branded Communist

At a House Un-American Activities Committee hearing in Atlanta in 1958, staff director Richard Arens accused Braden of being a Communist. Braden, longtime enemy of the Committee, invoked the First Amendment and served 10 months for contempt of Congress. Outside Committee hearings Braden has denied he is a Communist.

Last July, he visited Negro voter workers in Mississippi. He later sent a report to contacts all over the country. He marked it "confidential."

Beginning last Friday, the Jackson Daily News, perhaps Mississippi's greatest segregationist newspaper, began a sensational series of articles about the "secret" report, which it had "intercepted."

It labeled Braden an "identified Communist" and noted he was accompanied on his Mississippi visit by Robert Moses of New York, a field worker for SNCC in the voter-education project. Braden's report told of a workshop near Jackson in Hinds County. Screamed the News in headlines: "Commies Recruiting Members in Hinds?"

State Attorney General Joe Patterson picked up the ball. After comparing U. S. Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy to a Jackass baying at the sky, Patterson wondered aloud about the Justice Department's lack of concern in the activities of a "known Communist in Mississippi."

Paper Sent to Negroes

Negro leaders throughout the delta received copies of the News stories, bound in a wrapper proclaiming: "Communist workers, race agitators arrested in Indianola." Now it's hard for the Negro voter-registration workers to get a Negro church for meetings.

The Indianola arrests occurred last week, along with arrests in other delta towns, of Negroes on such charges as distributing literature without a permit, loitering (in a moving car) and being on the streets of Clarksdale after midnight "without reasonable cause."

The Justice Department in the past 27 months has filed nearly two dozen civil rights actions in Mississippi, about nedy to a jackass baying at clearing roadblocks to Negro registrations. But the courts move slowly here on such matters.

The U. S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals will decide one case on Sept. 17 in Hattiesburg: what to do about Forrest County Registrar Theron Lynd, who simply has refused to register any Negroes, court order or no.

Few voices of moderation are heard in Mississippi today. The Tupelo Journal raised its voice last July 30 by warning Mississippians that they are "building up serious troubles for themselves when look on the south ... we educate Negroes and then deny them the basic rights to which they are entitled as citizens."

But mostly the voices emulate Gov. Ross R. Barnett. When the Department of Justice recently filed a sweeping suit attac tionality of registratior one requi character" Governor a Governmer bad moral THINGS HAVE REALLY GOTTEN TOUGH IN CLARKSDALE, WHEN A NEGRO CAN BE ARRESTED FOR TALKING TO OTHER NEGROES ON THE STREET. THE CLARKSDALE CITY OFFICIALS IN ARRESTING MISS WILLIE GRIFFIN LAST FRIDAY HAS AGAIN PLACED THIS COMMUNITY IN ILL REPUTE LOCALLY AND NATIONALLY. MISS GRIFFIN TOOK THE DOWNTOWN SECTION OF THE CITY ON FRIDAY AUGHST 17TH TO TRY TO PERSUAD NEGROES DOWNTOWN TO GO OVER TO THE COURTHOUSE AND REGISTER. GOING FROM PERSON TO PERSON WAS A MYSTERY TO THE LOCAL POLICE AND THEY COULD RESIST NO LONGER THIS ACTIVITY WITHOUT ARRESTING HER. WE PROMISE THEM THEY HAVE NOT HEARD THE LAST OF THIS EPISODE!!!!!!!!!

THOSE OF US WHO GO TO THE WEEKLY MASS MEETINGS AND HEARD MISS GRIFFINS REPORT OF HER EXPERIENCE OF THIS ARREST WERE NOT TO SURPRISED AT THE ..... NUMEROUS INDECENT EXPERIENCES SHE HAD

WE HAVE ALSO FOUND A FORMULA THAT CAN BRING UNITY TO CITY HALL. AS WE OBSERVED AT MISS GRIFFINS TRIAL ON MONDAY AFTER NOON ALL THE COMMISSIONERS AND THE MAYOR WERE THERE AS A TEAM IN PERFECT HARMONY AND ACCORD WITH THE PERSECEUTION OF MISS GRIFFIN. THE LOOK OF SATISFACTION ON THEIR FACES WHEN THE JUDGE HANDED OUT HIS UNSUALLY LARGE FINES, WAS OBVIOUS TO ALL. " THE SECRET TO UNITY AT CITH HALL, IS TO INJECT AN OPPORTUNITY TO BE UNKIND TO NEGROES", AND YOU WILL HAVE UNITY AT CITY HALL FROM NOW ON. SO PERHAPS SOME GOOD HAS COME OUT OF THIS FOR THE POET SAID, "IT IS AN ILL WIND INDEED THAT BLOWS NO ONE ANY GOOD."

LIKEWISE THE PECULIAR ARRANGEMENTS THAT WERE MADE RELATIVE TO BONDING MISS GRIFFIN OUT OF JAIL. THE OFFICIAL PLAN APPARENTLY FROM NOW ON WILL BE TO MAKE IT AS DIFFICULT AS POSSIBLE FOR NEGROES TO GET OUT OF JAIL ON BOND. WELL WE ALL KNOW THE ANSWER TO THAT ONE. WE WONDER IF THEY KNOW THAT JAIL WITHOUT BAIL IS BECOMING WHAT'S HAPPENING. IF THEY CAN DISH IT OUT, THANK GOD WE CAN TAKE IT.

IT IS GREVIOUS TO SEE THE COMMUNITY OF OUR WHITE BROTHERS AND SISTERS PERMITTING ONE OR TWO WHO HAPPEN TO HAVE SOME SEMBLENCE OF POWER TO SO MISUSE THIS POWER THAT THE WHOLE NEGRO COMMUNITY REALIZES THAT IT IS JUST A MATTER OF TIME BEFORE ANY ONE OF US CAN BE THEIR VICTIMS, WITHOUT ANY SPOKEN OPPOSITION FROM ANY OF THEM. WE REPEAT IT IS NOT THE BLATANT NOISES OF THESE ONE OR TWO BAD PEOPLE THAT DISTURB US SO, IT IS THE THUNDERING SILENCE OF THE GOOD PEOPLE THAT SIT BY AND SAY AND DO NOTHING

WE MUST INCREASE OUR BOND STRENGTH, FOR THOSE WANTING TO GET OUT OF JAIL FOLLOWING "NON VIOLENT DEMONSTRATIONS". MRS. VERA M PIGEE IS THE NEW CHAIRMAN OF THE BONDING COMMITTEE. IF YOU ARE WILLING TO SIGN A BOND TO INSURE THE FREEDOM OF ONE WORKING IN THE CAUSE OF FREEDOM, THEN PLEASE CHECK WITH HER IMMEDIATELY. "IT IS NECESSARY TO INCREASE THIS LIST IMMEDIATELY. THE TIME THAT WE WILL NEED THEM IS NOT FAR OF.

DONT FORGET:
MINISTERS LUNCHEON, CENTENNIEL BAPTIST CHURCH, MONDAY AT NOON
MASS MEETING, HAVEN METHODIST CHURCH, WEDNESDAY NIGHT AUGUST 29th BE PRESENT AND SEE THE MOVIE, " WALK TO FREEDOM". THIS MOVIE IS VERY MUCH LIKE THE CLARKSDALE STORY AND FEATURES THE REV. MARTIN L. KING JR.

BE SURE TO PROTEST THE FIRING OF MRS. NOELLE M HENRY BY THE COUNTY SCHOOL BOARD. THEIR DAY IN THIS SITUATION IS COMING SOON.

LET US TAKE THE TIME TO EXPRESS OUR APPRECIATION TO MISS WILLIE GRIFFIN FOR HER DETERMINATION. THE NEXT DAY AFTER SHE WAS OUT OF JAIL SHE WAS TRYING TO GET NEGROES TO REGISTER. IF YOU ARE NOT REGISTERED, WON'T YOU PLEASE GO OVER TODAY AND TRY. MISS GRIFFIN WILL BE MIGHTY APPRECIATIVE.

SPECIAL NEWS FLASH!!! SPECIAL NEWS FLASH!! SPECIAL NEWS FLASH!

EXTRA EXTRA EXTRA EXTRA EXTRA EXTRA EXTRA EXTRA

MISS WILLIE GRIFFIN, A WORKER IN THE VOTER REGISTRATION CAMPAIGN HAS BEEN ARRESTED, AND SHE IS STILL IN JAIL. SHE WAS ARRESTED FRIDAY AFTERNOON. HELD IN CITY HALL UNTIL LATE FRIDAY NIGHT BEFORE ANY OF THE AUTHORITIES OF CITY HALL WOULD ADMIT SHE WAS UNDER ARREST. THANKS TO COMMISSIONER BELL FOR BREAKING THE LOG JAM AND AIDING US IN TALKING WITH HER. IT HAS BEEN REPORTED THAT MISS GRIFFIN WENT INTO THE DOWNTOWN SECTION OF THE CITY PROSPECTING FOR VOTERS. EVERY NEGRO PERSON OF ADULT STATUS SHE SAW, SHE ASKED IF THEY WERE REGISTERED TO VOTE.. WHEN THE ANSWER WAS NO, SHE INVITED THEM TO ACCOMPANY HER TO THE COURTHOUSE AND REGISTER. FOR THIS ACTIVITY MISS GRIFFIN WAS BOOKED ON A RESTRAINT OF TRADE CHARGE,(THAT SOUNDS FAMILIAR) HER ACTIVITY WAS TRYING TO GET NEGROES TO FOLLOW HER OUT OF THE DOWNTOWN SECTION OF THE CITY(WHERE THEY HAD NO BUSINESS ANYWAY) TO THE COURTHOUSE AND REGISTER.

GIVE YOU ONE GUESS AND YOU WILL KNOW WHO THE ARRESTING OFFICERS AND THE INTERROGATOR WERE. YES YOU GUESSED IT, FIDDLE AND FADDLE. IF MISS GRIFFIN IS GUILTY OF A CRIME, THAT IS TRYING TO GET NEGROES SEEN DOWN TOWN TO GO AND TRY TO REGISTER, LET US ALL BECOME GUILTY OF THE SAME CRIME AND FILL THE CITY JAIL. LET EVERY ONE OF US GO INTO THE DOWNTOWN SECTION AND ASK EVERY NEGRO THAT WE SEE TO FOLLOW US TO THE COURTHOUSE AND REGISTER. LET US PLAN NOW TO MARCH ON CITY HALL IN A PROTEST OF THESE COMPOUND HARRASSMENTS. A CALL IS GOING OUT TO THE CIVIL RIGHTS LEADERS OF THE NATION ASKING THEM TO COME AND HELP PLAN AND ORGANIZE SUCH A MOVEMENT.
THE OFFICERS OF THE VOTERS LEAGUE GOT TOGETHER $1,500.00 CASH TO GET MISS GRIFFIN OUT OF JAIL SATURDAY NIGHT. BUT WE WERE INFORMED THAT ONCE WE GOT HER OUTOF THE COUNTY JAIL WHERE SHE WAS PLACED AT 2:30PM ON SATURDAY, THAT THE AUTHORITIES OF THE CITY WERE WAITING TO REARREST HER AND CARRY HER BACK TO CITY HALL JAIL. MISS GRIFFIN REFUSED TO BE BONDED OUT OF THE COUNTY JAIL, CHOOSING TO REMAIN IN JAIL THEIR, RATHER THAN BE CARRIED BACK TO CITY JAIL AT CITY HALL.

HOW ANY NEGRO COULD HAVE THE GALL TO SHOW DOWNTOWN WHILE NEGROES ARE RECIEVING THIS KIND OF TREATMENT IS BEYOND US. IF YOU HAVE A DROP OF FREEDOM BLOOD IN YOU, YOU SHOULD NOW ATLEAST STOP SHOPPING DOWNTOWN UNTIL THE LOCAL AUTHORITIES STOP HARRASSING US AND THE MERCHANTS TREAT US COURTESLY AND EMPLOY US ABOVE THE MENIEL LEVEL. THIS ARREST OF MISS GRIFFIN SHOULD MAKE ALL OF US DETERMINED TO STAY AWAY FROM THE DOWN TOWN SECTION ATLEAST UNTIL AFTER THE CHRISTMAS SHOPPING SEASON.

WE ARE CONVINCED THAT IT IS IMPOSSIBLE TO RELY UPON OUR WHITE FRIENDS ANY FUTHER, TO AID US. THEY SIMPLY WILL NOT GO AGAINST ONE OF THEIR OWN, REGARDLESS HOW WRONG HE IS, FOR NEGROES. YES, WHEN THE BIG LION ROARS, ALL OF OUR WOULD BE WHITE FRIENDS TUCK THEIR TAILS AND SAY, WELL I AM AGAINST IT, THERE IS NOTHING "I" CAN DO ABOUT IT.
WELL WE CAN DO SOMETHING ABOUT IT. MASS DEMONSTRATIONS FOLLOWING SIMILAR CONDITIONS IN OTHER COMMUNITIES, IS THE ANSWER. THE TIME HAS COME FOR NEGROES TO GET UP OFF OF THEIR WISH BONE, AND START RELYING ON THEIR BACKBONE, STAND UP AND BE COUNTED. WHEN THE MASS DEMONSTRATIONS AND PRAYER PILGRIMAGE SCHEDULED TO SHOW OUR FEELING CONCERNING THE WAY WE ARE BEING TREATED BY CITY HALL AND SOME COUNTY OFFICIALS COME OF, WILL YOU BE IN THE NUMBER? LET US MAKE THEIR JAILS "TEMPLES OF FREEDOM", LOVING OUR OPPRESSORS ON THE AGAPPE LEVEL. NOT BECAUSE WE LIKE THEM OR THEIR TREAMMENT OF US BUT BECAUSE GOD MADE THEM AND LOVES THEM TOO. IF WE FOLLOW THIS TECHNIQUE, HE WILL SEE US THRU.

WE HAVE GONE TO THE LENGTH OF OUR CABLETOE, TRYING TO APPEAL TO THE RESPONSIBLE WHITE LEADERSHIP OF OUR COMMUNITY. TO DATE THEY WILL NOT EVEN ANSWER A LETTER, MUCH LESS GIVE US THE OPPORTUNITY TO DISCUSS OUR PROBLEMS WITH THEM. NOW IT ISUP TO US. WE WILL NEED BONDSMEN (PERSONS TO SIGN BONDS FOR THOSE WANTING TO GET OUT OF JAIL) MARCHERS, HYMN SINGERA AND MANY OTHER PARTICIPANTS. THERE IS A ROLE WE ALL CAN PLAY. IT DOES NOT TAKE TOO MUCH COURAGE, IT ONLY TAKES A BEING TIRED OF BEING PUSHED AROUND AND A WANTING TO BE FREE.

DONT FORGET THE MINISTERS LUNCHEON, MONDAY AT NOON, CENTENNIEL BAPTIST CHURCH. MASS MEETING WEDNESDAY NIGHT AT MT. MARIAH. IF THE CROWD IS TOO LARGE ANOTHER CHURCH WILL BE USED.

LET US JOIN MISS GRIFFIN IN THIS NEW FREEDOM SLOGAN, " I AIN'T GONNA LET NO MR. NOBODY, TURN ME 'ROUND , TURN ME 'ROUND, TURN ME 'ROUND I'M GONNA KEEPING ON WALKING AND TALKING DOWN FREEDOM LANE.

A PROGRAM FOR A STATEWIDE VOTER REGISTRATION CAMPAIGN IN MISSISSIPPI

Submitted by the COUNCIL OF FEDERATED ORGANIZATIONS:
Dr. Aaron Henry, President, Clarksdale, Miss.
Atty. Carsie Hall, Secretary, Jackson, Miss.

I. Aims and Goals

A. Voting and Economics:

We do feel that the basic aim of the program should be more than the mere registration of the large majority of Negroes in the state, for there is evidence that unless some degree of economic independence is achieved along with the ballot, the lot of the majority of the state's Negroes will not be greatly improved.

We feel it will be necessary for the Council, therefore, to articulate the needs of the Negro in the areas of Labor, Education, Housing, Justice, and Voting. More than articulation is needed, however, and the Council will have to lobby for specific programs at all levels of government, through its state office, or its member organizations.

B. County Organizations:

Since the fundamental political unit in the state is the county unit, one of the goals of the program should be the development of leadership at this level to ensure an on-going program in voter registration and to press for progress at the county level. Local conditions should determine the type of organization developed at this level.

II. Organization and Scope:

A. We propose to partition the state into twenty districts. (See attached maps and table.) Each district would be manned by a full time paid field secretary. These field workers would meet bi-weekly in Jackson and other cities to evaluate the program.

B. Priorities:

Following the political outline of the state and the concentration of Negroes, it seems natural to give priority to the second, third, and fourth congressional districts, where the Negroes comprise 50%, 66%, and 45%, respectively, of the population. Cities where Negroes are free to vote without fear of economic reprisals would also receive priority.

C. Summer program:

We envision the use of 100 students to work this summer in the rural areas and the towns where the adult leadership is unable, for some reason, to conduct the program.

These students would live in rural areas bringing with them an educational, political, cultural program. We hope to include white students.

These students would be recruited across the spring semester and all subjected to an intense week-long conference before taking the field for the summer. They would include specialty groups such as gospel quartets and folk dance teachers who would travel across the state.

III. Timetable

The following steps may be profitable taken now, even before further developments with the directors of the South-wide program.

1. The establishment of a date for a meeting of representatives from Urban areas to discuss the mechanics and operation of a city voter registration office.

2. Organizing regional meetings across the state to prepare for the total program. Bob Moses, of the S.N.C.C. and James Bevel of the S.C.L.C. are available for leg work in setting up these meetings. A representative of the executive committee of the Council should be present at each meeting.

3. A search began for field workers and students.

4. The Council should designate persons to solicite the support and cooperation of ministers and professional people at the local and state level; liberal white persons should also be contacted and their assistance solicited.

IV. Table of proposed working districts:

Breakdown on the 3rd Congressional District

Note: If the redistricting plan now before the Mississippi legislature goes into effect, it will create a third Congressional district in the South-west corner of Mississippi, with eleven counties, with a white voting age population of 117,122 and a Negro voting age population of 78,452.

I. Statistics:

County	Voting age population
	White	nonwhite
	NO.	NO.	NO. registered	% reg.	% of County
Adams	10,888	9,340	1,050	11.2	46.2
Amite	4,449	3,560	1	.03	44.4
Claiborne	1,688	3,969	138	3.5	70.2
Copiah	8,153	6,407	20	.31	44.0
Franklin	3,403	1,842	146	7.9	35.1
Hinds	67,836	36,148	5,000	13.8	34.8
Jefferson	1,666	3,540	0	.0	62.8
Lincoln	statistics not available
Pike	12,163	6,936	207	3.0	36.3
Walthall	4,536	2,490	0	.0	35.4
Wilkinson	2,340	4,120	110	2.7	63.8
Total:	117.122	78,452	6,672	40.0	3.0

Analysis of statistics:

There are two counties in the district, Hinds and Adams, in which Negroes may vote without fear of economic reprisals and physical violence, and may register if they persist in their efforts.

Analysis of the above statistics reveal that these two counties have a total of 45,488 Negroes of voting age, or 57% of all the Negroes and 38% of all the people of voting age in the district. If we launched a program which successfully registered 60%, or 27,292 of these people, we would have 23% of the voting age population in the district on the books.

Further, these are areas of increasing population and will become more important as the years pass: Hinds county increased its population by 31.6% and Jackson, the county seat and state capital, by 47.0%, in the years 1950-1960. Adams county experienced a 17.0 increase and Natchez, its county seat, a 4.6% increase, in these same years. (of. "United States Census Population, 1960)

II. Proposed Industrial Basin.

The new four lane thru-way from New Orleans to Chicago will parallel highway 51 through the south-west portion of Mississippi. Several small cities along this highway deserve separate attention Crystal Springs, Hazelhurst, Brookhaven and McComb. They are all increasing their population in an area which is otherwise decreasing. They reflect the Southwide trend of movement from rural to urban areas, and are located in a basin designed for extensive industrial expansion.

Statistics:

City	Population	% increase '50 - '60	% non-white
Crystal Springs	4,496	22.3	34.6
Hazelhurst	3,400	0.1	51.6
Brookhaven	9,885	26.7	37.4
McComb	12,020	15.6	28.4

In these cities and counties (Copiah, Lincoln and Pike), local leadership will probably not lend their name in public to a voting program though they will push it in the Negro community by word of mouth and through the churches. The publicity and projection of the program should be carefully worked out with these Leaders.

We anticipate in these areas covert white resistance, taking the form of economic reprisals and whisper campaigns. It is not likely that physical violence will erupt over voting in these counties. (Note: This is so, even though a man was shot and killed on the courthouse lawn of Brookhaven a few years ago in a case connected in the people's minds with voting. Recently, however, several people have been registered in Brookhaven and the registrar was not hostile, nor was there any other trouble).

We have contacts in two of these cities, McComb and Brookhaven, who are interested in voting registration drives and McComb is ready to receive a group of student and adult workers. We hope to make sufficient preparations across the spring to enable similar groups to work in Brookhaven, Hazelhurst and Crystal Springs.

III. The remaining counties, Walthall, Amite, Wilkinson, Franklin, Jefferson and Claiborne are rural, without any urban areas at all. The chief institution in the rural community in which we may find leadership and support will be the Church. The chief leaders, however, will not be ministers, since, in most cases, they do not live in the community and only offer service once a month, their active support is, however, indispensable.

In these areas any sustained voting drive successful in getting Negroes to attempt to register, is likely to be marked by physical violence, as well as economic reprisals. It is these areas of Mississippi which are accurately described by the following section of a report on voting issued by the Southern Reginal Conference:

> All forms of violence, intimidation, and discrimination reported from other states were found here. Where other sections usually rely on one or two means of limiting Negro registration, Mississippi, home of the White Citizens Council, apparently uses them all. As a result, the state which has the hishest percentage of Negroes in the country has the lowest percentage registered.

It is in these areas that the questions of accompanying persons to the registrar's office and continuing a drive in the face of terrific tension built by white resistance and threats and acts of violence, should be carefully thrashed out.

We have made contacts in every rural county , except Wilkinson and Franklin.

We have started classes in Amite, Claiborne & Jefferson and anticipate using the spring to establish personal contact in the communities and locate areas where students will be able to live during part of the summer & conduct voter registration classes.

	POPULATION	% INCREASE	% NON-WHITE

Contract Denied By King

BROOKLYN, N. Y. — It was reliably reported, from sources close to Martin Luther King, here this week, that the suit brought by him against Doto Records was brought after every effort to reconcile the matter had been exhausted.

The suit is said to have been filed in Los Angeles, Calif., after five months of persistent attempts to persuade the record company to tee, in quest of funds for the Greensboro school. Kerr proceeded to grill him after he made his presentation.

"Is is not a fact," Keer shouted, "that your students have been involved in a sit-in in Greensboro?" Dowdy did not make an immediate reply but answered a strong "yes" when Kerr called out:

Answer me yes or no!"

The outspoken legislator said, "I have been here 22 years and we have donated generously to this institution . . . that that activity is antagonizing race relations."

Almost as an apology, Dowdy explained after Kerr's blast: "We are working on better behavior for our students.

In contrast to this exchange, another old-time lawmaker, Rep. Tom Woodard of Wilson, paid tribute to Dr. Alfonso Elder, Negro president of North Carolina College in Durham.

Elder had quoted former University of North Carolina President Gordon Gray as saying he hoped he would always return to the committee with requests for funds. "But I will soon reach my 65th birthday," Elder said, "so I will be retiring and won't be returning."

Woodard said, "I'm sorry you will be retiring . . . the people of North Carolina are indebted to you for your service."

The case developed yesterday when cemetery caretakers found the body of a stillborn Negro male infant in a wooden box with one corner of the box sticking out of a shallow grave in the Negro section of the cemetery.

Shore said further investigation showed that the grave had been been only 21 inches deep and that at that point the box had been placed on top of another coffin already buried there.

Investigation by police disclosed that the infant had been born in a hospital here Dec. 30 and had been buried the next day by Thomas Funeral Home.

Wadsworth was sent to the Nash County Jail, without the privilege of bond, to await the action of the Nash County Superior Court, according to information furnished by officers.

The couple had reportedly "been and gotten some whiskey to drink" and returned to Miss Moore's home where an argument ensued, each charging the other with "being out" with someone else on a previous evening. So heated did the verbal battle become until the Moore girl allegedly cut Wadsworth with a butcher knife, whereupon Wadsworth went to his home obtained a .22 calibre rifle and returned. As the Moore girl saw Wadsworth approaching she ran out the front door across a vacant lot in a futile effort to escape. Two shots from Wadsworth's rifle dropped the woman inside a neighboring house. One ties, Chief Davis said in one breath that he knew nothing about a Negro quota in the police department. Shortly then after he said he was hoping to be able to employ 2 other Negro policemen so that he could have sufficient Negro police officers to work together.

Now since both of these department heads have publicly announced they are operating from a Negro quota basis, it would be quite interesting to know just how they arrive at their quotas. Quotas are usually based upon the ratio of population. We are sure that this type of base is not used because if it were it would mean that Negroes were entitled to at least one fourth of the jobs in these departments. It appears however that these heads, possibly in consultation with their superior, abitrarily decide themselves upon the number of jobs and the kind of jobs Negroes will be given. Of course this means that no matter how badly the city needs more firemen and more policemen, no matter how many vacancies exists or regardless how well qualified Negro applicants might be, if the Negro "quota" has been filled, no more Negroes will be hired. Should this type of practice be tolerated in this enlightened day and time? Should the city of Raleigh be deprived of adequate fire and police protection because of race?

We have every reason to believe that the Negro who at long last has broken the fire department's racial barrier, is amply qualified and there are no reflections we could cast upon him, but the news story about his appointment would seem to indicate that the surest road to employment here as a fireman is to know someone who knows someone in the fire department.

KEEPS ON POINTING THE WAY

The Kennedy Administration continues to point the way to the current administration in North Carolina how to practice what it preaches.

The recent appointment of a Negro federal court marshal following upon the appointment of a Negro federal assistant district attorney seems to be saying to Gov. Sanford, "It is fine to urge industry and business to give Negroes equal job opportunities but you should set the example.

There are those who are saying that the governor's plea in behalf of more Negro employment in this state was politics, pure and simple.

We have not and cannot agree with those who believe that. It is our opinion that Gov. Sanford is honestly and realistically interested in the forward progress of North Carolina. He realzes that the state can never make the progress of which it is potentially capable until all of its citizens are in a position to make the contributions they are potentially able to make. This is not a sentimental equatio, it is based upon solid, practical realities. Beyond that, we believe that Gov. Sanford is also motivated from a humanitarian standpoint, he believes that what he has asked for is not only practical but it is also right.

We also believe that Gov. Sanford knows that he can best get his Negro job program going by doing something about the matter in the area for which he is directly responsible, the executive department. Negro faces in the offices on Capitol hill will eventually be seen, why not now, Mr. Governor? Of course, with the show of strength shown by the Republicans in Guilford County, the Kennedy Administration was plainly mixing equal job opportunites with politics in the Negro opportunities it recently made in that area. It might not be bad for Gov. Sanford to also consider the political angle also. Negroes in North Carolina cast a lot of votes.

MORE BUNGLING

The recent announcement that the renovations needed at Raleigh's Memorial Auditorium will cost almost $60,000 more than the amount voted and passed in the bond election last fall, is a direct challenge to the ability of the present city council to make proper evaluations.

QUESTION THIS WEEK: "I saw in the newspaper that a group of Raleigh Citizens has formed a committee to raise $8,500.00 to buy new uniforms for the J. W. Ligon High School band. Do you think that the band members need uniforms?"

MRS. J. N. GREEN, JR., 14-18 Oakwood Ave. "Yes, the band is an overt ambassador of the school, representing a large section of the general public Perhaps more than any other school activity New uniforms would improve the general appearance of the group as well as lift the moral of each member of the band. New uniforms would have its influence on our entire school and build up the pride of the community. With this in mind the committe should not have any trouble geting the support of all of our citizens in this worthwhile project."

MRS. L. M. BIVINS, 218 Lee St.: "The band members, in my opinion, are very much in need of new uniforms. Neat, uniformity in a band raises the spirit of the group. I think all of us should help the young people attain their goal Certainly the Ligon High School Band wants to look as well as they play. It is our duty to be responsible for our young people and make them look and play the part as they represent all of us."

MRS. PERCY L. LEAK, 404 Rand Mill Road Garner: "Yes, If you have ever gotten close enough to the band, you could clearly see that the band need is great for new uniforms. It is our band, therefore, we must support its program the best that we can."

MRS. DORIS M. HOLLOWAY, 1421 Oakwood Ave.: "Ligon is a growing institution. I think that the band must grow along with the other departments of the school. The band should be much larger in size. This within itself means more uniforms. A band representing the Capitol City should be first-class in everyway."

MRS. Z. H. NOBLE, 1509 Battery Drive: "Certainly, I feel that the Ligon High School Band needs new uniforms. We want our children to be first-place in scholarship, sports and any of the other activities. We must see to it that they are 'first' when they represent us in band. Our band uniforms are far below the rating of bands in our day."

N. C. Vote Drive Seeking Sign-up Of All Negroes

CHARLOTTE, N. C.—Kelly M. Alexander, president of the North Carolina State Conference of Branches, announced that the North Carolina State NAACP Conference will launch a vigorous register and vote state-wide, non-partisan campaign to begin on Jan. 1, to get every Negro in North Carolina, who is qualified to register and vote.

The immediate goal of the campaign is to get at least 100,000 new Negro registered voters.

There are approximately 195,000 Negro voters in North Carolina and an additional 100,000 will increase the Negro voting strength to 295,000.

The campaign will be under the supervision of the Rev. Charles Ward of Raleigh, N. C., who is chairman of the North Carolina State Conference NAACP Political Action Committee.

THE IMPLEMENTATION of the voter registration will be on the congressional district, county and community levels, by the NAACP leadership.

More than 100 branches are in the process of organizing voter registration committees to actively engage in getting the job done on the community level.

The youth councils and college chapters will play an important part in the voter registration campaign. Quinton Baker, president of the North Carolina State Conference of Youth Councils and College Chapters, will supervise the youth phase of the voter registration campaign.

THE NAACP youth councils and college chapters recently sponsored a Voter Registration Institute in Rocky Mount, N.C., Nov. 22, 23 and 24, for youth councils and college chapters to receive instructions as to the mechanics of practical voter registration organization techniques.

Mr. Alexander stated that it is a very healthy sign to see so many groups who have become interested in increasing Negro voter registration.

The Negro vote will be very important in the 1964 political campaigns, and there will be a big grab for this vote by both political parties. In a close gubernatorial contest in North Carolina, this cohesive Negro vote will be essential for victory.

THE NAACP will endeavor to multiply the effectiveness of the Negro vote throughout the state.

Mr. Alexander also said that the state-wide voter registration program will be launched with a pre-campaign Voter Registration Clinic on Saturday, Dec. 28, and a Voter Registration Mass Meeting in Raleigh, N. C., on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 29. The campaign will officially begin on Wednesday, January 1.

Governor

Negro Group Gives Okay To Preyer

By JOE DOSTER
Observer Staff Writer

L. Richardson Preyer has won the endorsement of a bi-partisan Negro political-action group in his campaign for governor.

The organization is the Mecklenburg Organization on Political Affairs (MOPA), which has been active in local and state politics for several years.

Dr. R. A. Hawkins, a dentist, is chairman of the group. MOPA has endorsed candidates in city local and state contests in most recent elections and in 1960 endorsed Gov. Terry Sanford.

Hawkins said Thursday that MOPA had voted "unanimously to endorse and actively support at the polls the candidacy of Judge Richardson Preyer for the next governor of North Carolina."

"We feel that Judge Preyer possesses the necessary qualities that are needed to keep North Carolina on the go, and to give North Carolina the momentum for greatness that is necessary during these changing times."

"This decision was not made on the racial question, but on needs for North Carolina as a whole."

MOPA is in the midst of a registration drive to add more Negro voters to the books. In the first stage of the drive late in 1963, the organization added about 5,000 new names.

Write-In Out

Atty. Gen. Wade Bruton ruled Friday that a person cannot win a party nomination through a write-in vote in a primary.

The ruling was made for Congressman L. H. Fountain of the Second District who has been threatened with opposition from a write - in candidate.

A. C. Cofield, Negro funeral director of Weldon, announced Thursday that he will oppose Fountain in the general election as a write-in candidate if he cannot run as a write - in candidate in the primary.

"I am definitely in the running," Cofield declared.

Bruton wrote in his ruling that "a person cannot become a nominee of any political party . . . except in compliance with the provisions of the primary law; therefore, a person could not become a nominee by means of 'write-in' candidate in the November general election, but such voter would not be running as the nominee of any political party."

Talking Nonsense

Hanover Record, 5-8-64

We know that this is the season of madness as the time for the May primary draws closer and charges and counter charges are being hurled by opposing candidates, much of which is utter non-sense.

For instance Gubernatorial Candidate Dan K. Moore was talking utter non-sense at Smithfield, if he was correctly quoted by the daily press. After paying his respects to the pending civil rights bill in Washington, he related it to the Governor's race as follows:

"Could we dare put a liberal in the Governor's office who is a captive of the NAACP and CORE? Could we dare put an extremist from the other side in the Governor's office and chance the confusion of emotion with reason? Can we chance another Birmingham, or Little Rock ,or Oxford, Miss., here in North Carolina?"

His reference to a captive of NAACP and CORE was of course aimed at candidate Preyer, whose race relations, we think, would be somewhat along the lines of Sanford. We are not in Candidate Preyer's confidence and we do not know whose captive he is, but we do know that few Negroes in their right mind are going to vote for Dr. racist in the last election, or for any racist in the last election,or for any candidate endorsed by Senator Ervin who has been carrying on a running fight with the Supreme Court ever since the school integration ruling of 1954. The Negro vote is going to Preyer in part because Negro voters have no other way to turn.

"Could we put an extremist from the other side in the Governor's office and chance the confusion of emotion with reason?"

How would the election of a racist or an ultra conservative to the governor's office lessen the chance for "confusion of emotion with reason?" It would seem to us that the election of a Governor whom the Negroes feel would give them a fair break could do much to lessen emotions and give more chance for reason.

"Can we chance another Birmingham, or Little Rock, or Oxford, Miss., here in North Carolina?"

Before attempting to answer this bit of rhetoric, we should try to analyze the reason for the troubles that brought troops and bloodshed to two of the other states mentioned. Racists were in the governors' chairs in both Mississippi and Alabama when their racial troubles began, with both governors defying the Federal Government. Are they the kind of governors that North Carolina needs?

North Carolina has been blessed with good governors and there have been no or few racists in this high position in our memory. Contrast the admission of Negroes to colleges and universities of this state with that of Alabama and Mississippi which led to bloodshed in Mississippi and made Alabama rediculous in the eyes of the civilized world. Negroes have been attending the University of North Carolina for more than a dozen years without the first incident, with profit to the Negro students and no visible harm to the University. Now they are admitted to practically all the leading colleges and universities in the state, public and private. Deep down most of our citizens are proud of North Carolina's record in this respect and are rather thankful that we don't have a Barnett or Wallace for governor of this state.

We should, it seems to us, be very careful that we don't elect anyone with the views of a Wallace or Barnett as our governor, and that we do not let our peeve with Bobby Kennedy cut our own throats.

Georgia was having considerable race trouble under the unit rule that kept reactionaries in the governor's seat. The rule was changed and Georgia elected a new governor and with the cooperation of a "liberal" mayor of Atlanta most of her racial troubles are on the way to being solved. We were impressed with the statement of the new governor as quoted in an article in The Saturday Evening Post. He said, "I am a segregationist, but I hope that I am not a complete damn fool." That statement should be pondered by all of us.

Let Reason Rule

We can well understand how many of our white people are segregationists, for segregation has been a part of the customs and mores of the South for a hundred years, and customs and mores are not changed overnight. At the same time, in the language of Governor Sanders of Georgia, a man can well be a segregationist without being a "complete damn fool." Incidentally, the same may be said of the Negro—he can be an integrationist without being a "complete damn fool." He, too, can, without relinquishing his objectives, realize that the white man has his problems and his difficulties too, and both white and colored must show understanding and forbearance.

We write these thoughts on the eve of the Democratic primary of May 30, when race is playing a big part in the vote of Warren County citizens, with many in fear and frustration inclined to cast their votes for the candidate they deem to be the most fervent segregationist in the blind hope that he will be able to "save our way of life."

That may be understandable, but it is hardly realistic, and it could well worsen conditions. North Carolina, we think has made a good record in race relations under the Hodges and Sanford administrations and we would like to see the progress we have made continued.

It is downright silly to think that any Governor of any state can change the course of integration, or to feel that any governor of North Carolina will not enforce the federal laws he will swear to upheld when he takes the oath of office as Governor. Even a moron should know by now that if a state, town or county refuses to enforce Federal laws that the Federal Government will enforce them. This has been borne out in Arkansas under a Republican and in Alabama and Mississippi under a Democratic administration. Due to the good sense and leadership in North Carolina since the Supreme Court decision such action has not been necessary in this state. We would like to see it kept that way.

We would that each voter going to the polls tomorrow would realize that we are not voting on the race issue, but whether or not we wish to continue the progress in education, in industry, in the training of drop-outs from our schools, and in the retraining of those who have lost their jobs because of automation, and for improved care of the mentally ill. Do we want to keep North Carolina moving, or do we want this progress stopped? At a time when an airplane is used by big business executives and by governors of most states almost like an automobile in order to expedite their business, do we really want for Governor a man whose mentality is such that he advocates the selling of the Governor's plane, and who makes of the ownership of the plane a campaign issue? Surely the people of North Carolina are not that naive.

We trust that our citizens will weigh this matter carefully and let their heads and not their blind prejudices rule tomorrow as they cast their votes for the man whom in their judgment can best keep North Carolina moving.

N.C. Primary Today May Draw 700,000

Atl. Const., 5-30-66

By JAY JENKINS
Special to The Constitution

RALEIGH, N.C.—An estimated 700,000 North Carolinans are expected to go to the polls Saturday to pass upon the claims of two former judges and a former law professor to the Democratic nomination for governor.

Interestingly enough in this Southern state, the candidate who is due to lead in the first primary is former U.S. District Judge L. Richardson Preyer, 44, the most liberal of the three major contenders.

Vying for the second spot and the right to call for a second primary, if Preyer fails to get a majority, are former Superior Court Judge Dan K. Moore, 57, and Dr. I. Beverly Lake, 58, for 18 years a law professor at Wake Forest College.

Each candidate is counting on his home region to provide a cushion for possible victory. Preyer is from Greensboro, in the populous Piedmont. Moore is from Canton, in the mountains. Lake is from Wake Forest, in the East.

As the campaign has developed, Preyer has emerged as the go-forward candidate with his theme of "Keep North Carolina Growing." Moore has depicted himself as a middle-of-the-roader between Preyer's liberalism and Lake's conservatism.

Preyer, who has the backing of Gov. Terry Sanford's formidable organization, has given his unqualified endorsement to an increase in the state minimum wage from 85 cents to $ an hour, and to a $300 million highway bond issue that can be financed without raising gasoline taxes.

AGAINST RIGHTS BILL

Moore has taken a wait-and-see stance. Lake is opposed to both the wage increase and the highway bonds.

All three have expressed opposition to the pending civil rights bill, with Lake using the strongest language. Each is pledged to improve public education.

The first primary campaign, at least, has been relatively clean. In his unsuccessful quest for the governorship four years ago, Lake ran as an extreme segregationist and some of his rallies carried an angry spirit of racism and hate.

BECOMES SYMBOL

This time, Lake has carefully avoided that subject. He didn't have to dwell on it, for one thing, because he had become a symbol. Preyer has embraced the "North Carolina way" of dealing with racial matters, and Moore also has been a moderate on the issue.

The Negro vote, which may reach 150,000, is expected to go almost solidly for Preyer. Organized labor also has endorsed him, but the vote will be far from solid. Lake, for example, is popular with unionized tobacco workers in Durham and wilth some textile workers in the Piedmont.

Preyer's occupancy of the federal bench from 1960 to 1963, apparently hasn't been an issue.

Lake apparently has managed to hold onto most of his 1960 support, but he was beaten by Sanford, who had a 75,000 vote margin that year.

FOUNDED VICKS

Preyer's grandfather founded the Vick Chemical Co. The candidate studied at Princeton and Harvard, and practiced law in Greensboro until former Gov. Luther Hodges named him a Superior Court judge in 1956. President John F. Kennedy named him a federal judge in 1960, and he quit the lifetime job to run for governor.

Moore took his undergraduate and legal studies at the University of North Carolina, served as Superior Court solicitor and judge. Since 1956 he has been general counsel for the big Champion Paper and Fiber Co. of Canton.

Lake got his bachelor's degree at Wake Forest College and his law degree from Harvard. After teaching law at Wake Forest, he held several government jobs and subsequently served as an assistant state attorney general. He now practices law in Raleigh.

Poll Workers Try Hard

By JAMES K. BATTEN
Observer Staff Writer

Late Saturday afternoon John Francisco, a middle-aged voter, stood in the parking lot of Marie Davis School, patiently studying a long list of candidates endorsed by a local political club.

Standing to one side, a hopeful look on his face, was a 15-year-old boy who since 6:30 a.m. had been handing out his lists.

Finally, Francisco nodded and said: "I think his thinking is all right." With that, Francisco, list in hand, marched into the school to play his part in Saturday's democratic ritual.

All over Charlotte and Mecklenburg County, the story was the same: voters waded through forests of placards and hordes of eager poll workers to help select their parties' nominees for the pay-off election in November.

Whether motivated by love, money, or political conviction, the poll workers did their best to woo the wavering, and if possible, to convert the opposition.

Some voters obviously were impatient with the whole business. At Myers Park Elementary School, an attractive young matron in aqua-colored pedal-pushers brushed past the card-and-brochure hawkers and murmured to a friend:

"If you don't know who you're voting for by this time, you ought not to come."

Across town at Piedmont Junior High School, James McManama of the AFL-CIO got even more curt treatment as he handed out a list of organized labor's recommendations.

"How stupid do you think I am?" demanded one woman, not even slowing down.

Not surprisingly, most of the people doing the leg work were convinced that their day's labor was not for naught.

Bob Smith, a 17-year-old Catholic High junior and an ardent backer of Dan K. Moore, insisted that his propaganda-dispensing at the Veterans Club, (Precinct 4), was having its effect.

"These people come in here undecided," he explained. "Then they see these signs and all, and it makes a big difference."

Jim Hill, a veteran poll worker at Firemen's Hall, Precinct 17, agreed. Pointing to his list of endorsements, Hill declared, "A lot of people say, 'I'm glad you gave me that. I didn't know who in thunder to vote for.' "

Whatever the effect or lack of it, hundreds of pople got into the act. Even the youngsters were drafted to help boom their parents' favorite candidates.

Wake Runners-Up Play it Cautious

By LAURIE HOLDER JR.

The runners-up in Saturday's Democratic primary for Senate and Wake County Board of Commissioner seats were playing it cautious Sunday about second primary prospects.

W. G. Enloe, former Raleigh mayor who ran a close third to Ruffin Bailey and Jyles Coggins in the Senate race, wouldn't commit himself.

Enloe said he was waiting to see the official returns (they'll probably be in Tuesday) and to study them precinct by precinct before he decides whether to challenge Bailey and Coggins in a run-off.

Unofficial returns showed that Enloe polled 14,351 votes in Wake County (9,307 of them in City precincts). Neither Bailey (15,874 votes) nor Coggins (15,482) gathered enough votes for a majority.

Negroes Reject Enloe

A change of voting sentiment in Raleigh's predominantly Negro precincts put Coggins into the No. 2 position ahead of Enloe. The Negroes, who usually supported Enloe during his long tenure as Raleigh mayor, rejected him decidedly in Saturday's voting.

This change of heart indicated Negro resentment of Enloe's handling of Negroes' integration demands during the final months of his administration as mayor.

Local theaters became targets of segregation protests here last spring, and the Ambassador Theater, part of a theater chain which Enloe manages, was the main one. Daily protests by hundreds of Negroes led Enloe to threaten to resign as mayor. He changed his mind, however, when local Negro leaders promised to call off the picket lines.

The theaters have since been integrated, but Negro dissatisfaction with Enloe was clearly indicated in the voting totals. In Raleigh's four predominantly Negro precincts, the Enloe-Coggins results were these:

No. 20 (Lucille Hunter School), Coggins 249; Enloe, 76; No. 26 (Ligon High Gym), Coggins, 343; Enloe, 33; No. 34 (Mary E. Phillips School), Coggins, 365; Enloe, 64; No. 35 (W. H. Fuller School), Coggins, 323; Enloe, 54.

Rand also got a good vote in these precincts.

In the City's other large Negro precinct, No. 25 (Fayetteville St. Fire Station), none of the Senate candidates got a substantial total of votes.

Bailey, a local attorney and a newcomer to politics, showed surprising strength in topping Coggins, who represented Wake in the House last term.

Walter Rand of Garner, another Senate candidate, also has the privilege of calling a second primary. He placed fourth with 11,130 votes. Rand said Sunday he hasn't decided yet about a run-off.

In the Democratic contest for Wake County's three House seats, three men won comfortable majority votes — two incumbents, Thomas D. Bunn and A. A. McMillan, and Samuel H. Johnson. These three, all attorneys, can't be challenged to a run - off. Bunn polled 22,125 votes, McMillan, 21,672 and Johnson, 20,885.

In the District Five (Raleigh) race for two seats on the board of commissioners, the two top men — Joe Barber and Deal Watkins — failed to acquire a majority vote. They could be challenged to a run-off by Swannie D. Bryan and Negro candidate Clarence E. Lightner.

Neither of the runners-up was saying Sunday whether he plans to call for a second primary. Bryan, retired oil company owner, said: "I'm giving it serious consideration but I haven't talked to the ones I want to talk to." He said he would decide this week.

Lightner, owner of a funeral home, said he will probably make his decision today about calling for a run-off. "It's a little premature for us today," he stated Sunday. "We haven't gotten our material together yet."

Vote totals of the District Five leaders were: Barber, 14,552; Watkins, 12,403; Bryan, 12,071; and Lightner, 8,866.

Haigh Beaten

Watkins, a food distributor, conducted an active campaign against incumbent candidate Ben Haigh, who placed fifth Saturday to lose his seat — and the chairmanship — on the board of commissioners. Watkins attacked Haigh's handling of the hiring of Wake County's new health director, Dr. Millard Bethel, and Haigh's connection with the resignation of former health director Dr. Isa Grant.

He also blasted Haigh about conditions at the overcrowded Wake County jail.

A run-off could also be in the offing in Commissioners' District Four. Although the incumbent, W. W. Holding III of Wake Forest, polled almost as many votes as his two opponents together, he didn't get a majority. Unofficial totals were: Holding, 15,484; Vasser P. Shearon of Rolesville, 10,733; and Johnnie M. Powell of Raleigh, Rt. 7, 5,393. Shearon has the right to challenge Holding to a second primary.

Shearon said Sunday he was undecided, but expects to make up his mind early this week.

Stewart Beats Ranzino

Incumbent Harry Stewart of Raleigh and Roland Danielson of Raleigh, Rt. 7, won nominations in two races for seats on the Wake County Board of Education.

Insuranceman Stewart, chairman of the school board, won in District 1 (Raleigh) by the slim margin of 227 votes over Sam Ranzino, a former N. C. State basketball star. Ranzino is employed in the State Department of Public Instruction's driver education program.

Heavy votes against Stewart in the Millbrook and Zebulon areas, where the County school board has encountered sharp criticism over the selection of school sites, helped Ranzino to make it a tight race.

In the St. Matthews No. 1 precinct (Millbrook), Ranzino got 627 votes to Stewart's 364, and in the Zebulon precinct, it was Ranzino 664 and Stewart 254.

Danielson, a contractor, ousted school board incumbent W. M. Satterwhite of Wake Forest in a District Two (northern Wake) contest. Danielson got 16,700 votes and Satterwhite 13,655.

Irregular Sample Ballots Turn Up

By STAN BRENNAN
Observer Staff Writer

Irregular sample ballots for the Democratic primary for state officers turned up at several Mecklenburg County polling places Saturday, with the Mecklenburg Headquarters for L. Richardson Preyer accepting full responsibility for their circulation.

The ballots, printed on white paper, carried the title: "Sample Democratic Primary Ballot for State Officers."

Thereafter were listed the names of the Democratic candidates for governor, lieutenant governor, commissioner of labor and commissioner of insurance.

An "X" was imprinted in the square beside the name of L. Richardson Preyer, Democratic gubernatorial candidate. The squares beside the names of other candidates on the ballot were left blank, but in many instances had been checked in ink or pencil.

Each ballot carried at the bottom the imprinted signature of William Joslin, chairman of the state board of elections.

"Sample ballots are supposed to be printed on colored paper," said Mrs. Samuel C. Hair, chairman of the County Board of Elections. "The official ballot is printed on white paper."

Regular sample ballots for Saturday's Democratic primary were printed on yellow paper. They were used to instruct voters.

The official ballot for the Democratic primary was printed on white paper.

Joseph Grier, Mecklenburg County chairman for Preyer, said the county headquarters "accepts full responsibility for distributing sample ballots printed on white paper in Saturday's primary here."

He noted that the action "was not illegal under the statute but we were not aware that it had been customary to print such ballots on colored paper. It was an oversight."

Grier continued:

"When this departure from custom was brought to our attention Saturday morning, we immediately retrieved all of the sample ballots we could get our hands on.

"No other candidate could possibly be hurt. Only voters who intended to vote for Preyer would inadvertently drop the sample ballot in the box. And since it was clearly marked "sample ballot," any such ballot would not be counted."

Mrs. Hair noted that the improper ballots would not be counted if any appeared in the ballot boxes.

The ballots, which were being distributed outside polling places, were confiscated by elections workers in these precincts: 17, Firemans Hall, 2601 E. Seventh St., where 35 ballots in a bundle were found with the same candidates checked off; 11, Wesley Heights School cafeteria; 2, Second Ward High School; Crab Orchard No. 1, Hickory Grove School; Clear Creek, volunteer fire station, Mint Hill Station; Mallard Creek No. 1, Mallard Creek Fire Station, and Long Creek No. 1, Long Creek School.

Two Local Posts May Have Runoff

One of the most interesting and stimulating features of Saturday's primary in Durham County was the comparatively large number of candidates for the Democratic nomination to three offices, the state House of Representatives, the Board of County Commissioners, and the County Board of Education. Five candidates contested for the nominations for Durham County's two seats in the state House, nine sought the nomination for the five seats on the Board of County Commissioners, and eight ran for the nomination for the five seats on the Board of Education.

According to the unofficial returns of the primary, as compiled by this newspaper, a second primary may be called in two of these contests, the House of Representatives and the Board of County Commissioners. All top five runners for the Board of Education, Kenneth Royall, Walter Dozier, L. R. Chambers, Mrs. Willard Marley, and J. M. Whitfield (listed here in the order of the vote received), received a majority of the total vote cast and therefore constitute the slate nominated.

In the race for the House of Representatives, however, the second runner, Ted Stone, and in the county commissioners' race, the fifth runner, James A. Ward, received less than a majority. The third runner in the House race, W. Hance Hofler, may ask for a second primary to determine the second nominee for the House; and the sixth runner in the commissioners' race, I. O. Funderburg, may ask for a runoff to determine the fifth nominee for the county board.

In the House race 44,270 votes were cast. To determine a majority, this total is divided by the number of posts to be filled, in this case two. This quotient is then divided by two, and 11,068 votes would be a majority in this race. Since Mr. Stone's vote of 8,106 is less than this, the next runner, in this case Mr. Hofler with 6,944 votes, may ask for a runoff primary.

A total of 86,462 votes was cast in the commissioners' contest. This total is divided by five, the number of seats to be filled, which gives 17,293. The latter figure is divided by two, to determine a majority in this race, which comes out as 8,647. Each of the four top runners, Messrs. Clements, Kirkland, Scarboro, and Fowler, received a majority. Mr. Ward, who ran fifth, received 8,520 votes, or 127 fewer than a majority. The sixth runner, Mr. Funderburg, with 7,989 votes, is entitled to call for a second primary. In this race, however, the seventh runner, Clarence A. Williams, received 7,981 votes, only eight fewer than Mr. Funderburg. Since the figures used are those of unofficial returns, it should be noted that in so close a result as this, the official canvass of the votes may show a standing different from that indicated in the unofficial tally sheet.

In the county commissioners and school board races, the returns indicate that Negro voters concentrated on candidates of their race for these posts, Mr. Funderburg for commissioner and Howard M. Fitts Jr. for the school board. Solid-shot voting failed to put either candidate among the first five in their respective races. Mr. Funderburg may, as indicated, call for a second primary. Mr. Fitts received a majority of the vote cast in the Board of Education contest, running sixth in the race, but since each of the top five runners for the five seats on this board received a majority, they have won the nomination.

Formula Fixes Margin For Majority Vote Win

How does a candidate know when he's got a majority vote and thus is assured of going on the Democratic ticket in November?

There's a formula for arriving at the majority figure in the State election laws.

First, figure the total number of votes cast for all Democratic candidates for any particular office. Divide the total by the number of vacancies to be filled. Then divide again by two. Any total over that figure constitutes a majority vote.

For example, in Wake County's State Senate race, the total number of votes cast for Ruffin Bailey, Jyles Coggins, W. G. Enloe, Walter Rand and Aakers Moore was 65,232. Two Senate seats are vacant, so the total is divided by two, yielding 32,616; and divided once more by two, yielding 16,308. Any vote over that would be a majority.

In this instance, no candidate acquired a majority. Bailey, the leading candidate, received 15,874.

When a candidate doesn't get a majority, he can be challenged to a second primary by a runner-up. In the Senate race there are two seats to be filled and no majority for either candidate, so the two runners-up (Enloe and Rand) can challenge. The two top candidates in the first primary must run in the second primary, whether one or both of the runners-up call for a run-off.

Had one candidate obtained a Senate majority, only the second-place candidate would run in the second primary, and he could be challenged by only the man in third spot. Under the law, a run-off can be called only "by any one or all of the candidates equal in number to the positions remaining to be filled and having the second highest number of votes."

The deadline for written notification of a second primary for legislative, county or township office is noon of the fifth day after official elections returns are in, and Sundays don't count.

If the official Wake returns come in Tuesday, as elections board clerk Martha McLaughlin expects, the deadline for calling a Senate or County commissioner second primary will be next Monday at noon.

Close Race Brings Second Primary

The returns from Saturday's Democratic primary confirmed the predictions that the gubernatorial race would be close among the three major contenders. With reports from fewer than 100 precincts missing, only 62,000 votes separated the top runner, Judge Preyer, from the third runner, Dr. Lake; and fewer than 25,000 votes separated Judge Preyer from the next runner and the challenger to a second primary, Judge Moore.

While no doubt he would have preferred to lead in the first primary, Judge Moore actually accomplished his objective in the first primary. He realized that the conservative wing of Tarheel Democracy was split by Dr. Lake's and his candidacies, and that a substantial liberal element combined with the excellent Sanford organization to give Judge Preyer an advantage in the first primary. Consequently he adopted the goal of getting into a second primary, with the hope that he would, if Judge Preyer should be his opponent, draw heavily from the Lake forces. And if perchance Dr. Lake might have led in the first primary, as a campaign actually continuing since 1960 and the dedication of his followers might have brought about, Judge Moore hoped to attract a substantial following from among the supporters of Judge Preyer.

Now that the race in the runoff is between Judge Preyer and Judge Moore, the latter has already invited Lake supporters to back him. The Moore strategy thus far has paid off, and he renews his campaign preliminary to the runoff in high hopes that it would work out as he has planned.

As the self-styled moderate candidate running, Judge Moore would seem to be in a more favorable position for a second primary than Dr. Lake was four years ago when he challenged Governor Sanford to a runoff. Then the moderate vote had been split between John Larkins and Malcolm Seawell. While their combined vote topped Dr. Lake's, he could not count on heavy support from their backers, for moderates could be expected to split between the liberal and the conservative.

Not only is a second primary to determine the Democratic gubernatorial nominee in prospect, but a runoff to choose the nominee for lieutenant governor looms between Robert Scott, who led the field, and Clifton Blue, who ran second. Mr. Blue at this writing has not definitely made up his mind to challenge Mr. Scott, though he leans in that direction. His decision will no doubt be influenced by how a substantial bloc among the supporters of Senator Jordan for nomination for the second office may be expected to vote in a contest between Messrs. Scott and Blue. In this case, the indications are not so clear as they seem to be in the gubernatorial race among supporters of the candidate who ran third.

Gilmore Tops Field In Race For 2 Senate Seats In 18th

RALEIGH — Voit Gilmore, former director of the U.S. Travel Agency, topped the field in a race for the two State Senate seats in the 18th District, and several veteran legislators were defeated Saturday in Democratic General Assembly primaries which saw a Negro win a House seat.

Gilmore, of Southern Pines, polled a whopping 26,165 votes in the five-county district. Incumbent Sen. Robert Morgan ran second, but faced a possible runoff to hold his seat.

Rev. William R. Crawford of Winston-Salem became the first member of his race since Reconstruction days to win a Democratic party nod for a legislative seat. He will face Republican opposition in November.

The Rev. Mr. Crawford placed third among six candidates seeking Forsyth County's three House seats.

Intra-party defeats were handed out to veteran State Senators Henry Shelton of Edgecombe, Robert Lee Humber of Pitt and P. D. Midgett of Hyde.

Former state Rep. Carson Gregory defeated incumbent Rep. H. D. Mabe Jr. in a fight for Harnett County's House seat.

Rep. Alden Baker of Pasquotank topped a three-man field in his bid for renomination but failed to gain a majority and faced a run-off against former Rep. C. D. (Keppie) Ferrell.

The Republicans nominated John L. Osteen, father of state Rep. William Osteen, and James L. Williams to Senate seats.

A run-off is in the offing to decide the Democratic nominee for Richmond County's House seat between Rep. Tom Hunter and Bill Land.

T. Clyde Auman was nominated for Moore County's seat vacated by House speaker Clifton Blue.

Incumbent Sen. James V. Johnson of Statesville won renomination in the 27th District and Sen. Carl Meares of Fair Bluff won the ninth district nod.

F. D. B. Harding, Yadkinville attorney and currently state representative to the General Assembly from Yadkin County, will call for a runoff primary in the 29th Senatorial District for the Republican nomination.

Harding was second man in the voting Saturday. Sen. T. E. Story of North Wilkesboro was high with a total vote of 1,942 in 81 of the district's 82 precincts. Harding had 1,841. S. Clyde Eggers of Boone was third with 1,090.

Harding was not available for comment Sunday, but close associates said he would call for a second primary in the district which includes Yadkin, Wilkes, Watauga, and Avery Counties.

In Mecklenburg County, which gained two Senate seats in the recent redistricting, incumbent Sen. Erwin Belk of the chain store family was re-elected, along with Mrs. Martha W. Evans, who moves over from the State House of Representatives, and Herman A. Moore, a commercial banker.

Three incumbents were returned among the five Mecklenburg state representatives. They were Elmer H. Garinger, veteran school superintendent; Ernest L. Hicks and James B. Vogler. Newcomers are two lawyers, Arthur Goodman Jr., whose late father, Arthur Goodman, was a state representative, and Marvin Lee Ritch.

Sam M. Bason of Yanceyville was nominated for Democratic senator from the 24th District which includes Caswell and Rockingham counties.

Worth Gentry of King won the Democratic primary for Senate from the 29th District, but did not have a majority and faces a runoff with F. D. B. Harding of Yadkinville. The Democrats did not put up a candidate.

C. G. Reavis of Yadkinville won the Republican nomination for the State House of Representatives from Yadkin. Lewis H. Smith won the Democratic nomination for the House from Watauga.

A. V. Choate, a former member of the House, was nominated on the Democratic ticket from Alleghany. Robert A. Collier won the Democratic nomination for the House from Iredell.

RALEIGH (AP) — Richardson Preyer launched his runoff campaign for governor Sunday by challenging Dan Moore to a series of television debates.

"We think these debates are so important," Preyer told a Raleigh news conference, "that we are willing to accept any conditions within reason."

Preyer, who led the ticket in Saturday's first primary for the Democratic nomination, read a telegram he had just sent to Wallace Jorgenson, chairman of the North Carolina Association of Broadcasters.

"I will debate my opponent anytime, anywhere, on an station, and with any format," he said.

Moore said he had not had a chance to read Preyer's wire but added, "I will be glad to consider a TV debate in the event the North Carolina Association of Broadcasters makes time available."

RALEIGH (AP) — Richardson Preyer launched his runoff campaign for governor Sunday by challenging Dan Moore to a series of television debates.

Preyer, who led the ticket in Saturday's first primary for the Democratic nomination, read a telegram he had just sent to Wallace Jorgenson, chairman of the North Carolina Association of Broadcasters.

"I will debate my opponent anytime, anywhere, on an station, and with any format," he said.

Moore said he had not had a chance to read Preyer's wire but added, "I will be glad to consider a TV debate in the event the North Carolina Association of Broadcasters makes time available."

Preyer suggested at least three one-hour debates "in order to have sufficient time to discuss the issues fully."

He pointed out that the broadcasters' association had offered free time for a series of debates before the first primary.

Preyer said he and I. Beverly Lake, who was eliminated Saturday, "were willing to accommodate this proposed series." But, he added, "Mr. Moore continued to find conflict so that it became apparent that he never wanted to debate in the first place."

"It should be fully understood by the public," Preyer said, "that if Mr. Moore again finds objection, then he must carry the full burden of attempting to avoid the series and of not wanting to debate the issues before the people."

Preyer urged Jorgenson to notify the candidates quickly as to dates and times "while Mr. Moore has a free schedule."

news conference, Preyer commended Lake for conducting what he called "a clean, high-level campaign."

Preyer expressed to Lake "my respect for his integrity and ability."

Moore denied blocking negotiations for a TV debate before the first primary and said Preyer rejected the first offer of free time because he did not want to debate on WRAL-TV in Raleigh.

"As every North Carolina broadcaster knows," Moore declared in a statement, "he filed a letter of complaint with the Federal Communications Commission attacking the reputable television station that offered the free time."

More than 700,000 North Carolinians voted Saturday in the primary that propelled Preyer and Moore into the runoff, scheduled for June 27.

Along with Lake, staunch segregationist who was trying to gain the nomination for the second time, three men whose candidacies were never considered serious were eliminated. They are Kidd Brewer of Raleigh, Bruce Burleson of Bakersville and Raymond Stansbury of Hillsboro.

Preyer, who ran with the unspoken blessings of Gov. Terry Sanford's administration, polled 266,856 votes with 2,071 of the state's 2,164 precincts reported.

Moore, a candidate from the mountains who labeled himself a middle-of-the-roader, ran second and won the right to challenge Preyer in the runoff. He indicated immediately he would do so Monday. The latest count gave Moore 242,483 votes.

Although Lake was eliminated, he is not out of the runoff picture. He polled 205,116 votes in the precincts reported, and his support was being sought by both Preyer and Moore in the second primary.

The ticket for the Democratic lieutenant governor nomination was led by Robert W. (Bob) Scott of Haw River, former state Grange master and son of former governor and U.S. senator W. Kerr Scott. House speaker Clifton Blue of Aberdeen came close enough to call for a runoff, and said he probably would ask for the second primary after conferring with his supporters.

The third-place finisher in that race, State Sen. John Jordan of Raleigh, is considered to be just as important to the two top finishers in this race as Lake is in the gubernatorial picture.

Jordan polled well over 100,000 votes, and it is believed that Blue will try to have Jordan swing that support to him.

Lake, who was defeated by Sanford for the Democratic nomination in 1960, conceded shortly after midnight that his second bid for the governorship had failed.

Moore quickly made a bid for support of the Lake forces. He told newsmen, "I will be most happy to have the support of all those fine people who voted for Dr. Lake. Many of them are already wearing Moore badges."

The total vote of well over 700,000 was a record turnout for a North Carolina primary.

As had been expected, Preyer got his biggest vote in the heavily-populated Piedmont, Moore ran strongest in the mountains and Lake piled up margin mostly in the Eastern counties.

Two members of the council of state, Labor Commissioner Frank Crane and Insurance Commissioner Edwin S. Lanier easily won renomination. Crane eliminated Frank Castlebury of Raleigh and Dan B. Wardell of Jamestown while Lanier defeated John N. Frederick of Charlotte and John B. Whitley of Statesville.

Clifford Lee Bell of Gastonia won the Republican nomination for lieutenant governor, whipping Robert A. Flynt of High Point, and John C. Clifford of Winston-Salem won the GOP nomination for insurance commissioner, defeating Ralph B. Pfaff of Winston-Salem.

James C. Gardner of Rocky Mount won the Republican nomination for Congress in the Fourth District over John W. Thedieck of Raleigh while W. Hall Young of Kannapolis was leading Edward H. Smith of Kings Mountain in a close race for the GOP nomination for Congress in the Tenth District.

Cooley defeated Raleigh attorney Wayne Albright in the race for Congress in the Fourth District while Henderson eliminated S. A. Chalk of Morehead City and Scott whipped Fran Freeman of Dobson.

Gavin won the Republican nomination for governor by whipping State. Sen. Charles W. Strong and State Rep. Donald Badgley, both of Greensboro.

Blue Calls For Runoff With Scott

Speaker Refers To Himself As Underdog, Expects An Uphill Fight For No. 2 Spot

RALEIGH — (AP) — House Speaker Clifton Blue called for a second primary with Robert H. Scott of Haw River to decide the Democratic nomination for lieutenant governor.

"In calling for a second primary, I realize that I will be the underdog and that it will be an uphill campaign," Blue said, in a statement read at a news conference Tuesday.

In the first primary May 30, Blue trailed Scott by 53,500 votes. He was entitled to call a runoff because Scott did not get a majority.

Blue said that since the first primary, "I have been deluged with telephone calls, letters, wires and personal visits from people requesting that I call for a second primary.

"Many have expressed the feeling that a man who is totally inexperienced in North Carolina legislative background should not be conceded the position of lieutenant governor by a minority vote," Blue said. "This office carries with it the duty of presiding over the Senate, naming its committees and the chairmen, serving as a member of the legislative council and as a member of the State Board of Education."

Blue added, "My record and views of the issues facing our great state are well known." He said, "It has been a record pointing in the right direction for a progressive and growing state."

Scott was already on the campaign trail when he learned of Blue's announcement. "We welcome a runoff with Mr. Blue," he said in Wilmington. "For our part we pledge to continue our campaign on a high level and refrain from becoming involved in personalities."

N. C. Vote Frauds Being Probed

Newport News, 6-10-64

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The State Board of Elections heard charges Tuesday of "open, flagrant and repeated" violation of the elections laws in Madison County in the May 30 primary and decided to go to Madison to investigate.

The board will open its probe at the Mars Hill High School at 10 a.m. Thursday.

The board voted to go into Madison after hearing lawyers for Clyde Norton of Old Fort contend that their man came in second in the race for the Democratic nomination for the State Senate in the 34th District because of widespread irregularities in Madison.

Norton was edged by Zeno Ponder, well - known Madison County political leader for the nomination by a vote of 7,508 to 7,108. Madison gave Ponder the margin, after Norton led in each of the three other counties in the district.

One of the things the board is expected to probe is the disappearance of all the Madison County poll books which are used to make a list of all the voters who come to the polls.

Chairman William Joslin of the State Board of Elections called the disappearance of the poll books "a very serious matter." He indicated it would hamper the board in its probe of the alleged irregularities.

Joslin asked Chairman Roy Freeman of the Madison County Board of Elections what had happened to the poll books. Freeman said he had stored them in the office of the Madison register of deeds and "from there I haven't been able to find them."

Joseph B. Huff of Mars Hill, an attorney for Norton, asserted that the "poll books disappeared because they didn't have time enough to fix them."

Huff told the board he felt a probe by the State Bureau of Investigation would reveal that not more than half the votes counted in Madison County were actually cast and that the remainder were fraudulent.

"A buzzard would have to hold his nose if he flew across Madison County," Huff declared.

Moore, Preyer Talks Asked

By DWAYNE WALLS

Gubernatorial candidates Dan K. Moore and L. Richardson Preyer have been invited to make a joint appearance in Charlotte on June 22 before the Mecklenburg County Young Democrats Club.

The invitations to the candidates, sent out by YDC President James H. Boswell, suggested that the two candidates decide on the format to be used for the program.

"If no format can be agreed upon within a short period of time," Boswell told the candidates, "we will suggest that a panel of four newsmen be invited to pose questions to both candidates. These four newsmen will be invited upon two recommendations from each candidate."

Boswell said the invitations were in line with the club's policy of giving platform space to all party candidates to allow discussion of issues.

During the campaigning before the first primary May 30, the YDC invited all three of the major candidates for governor to speak at separate meetings of the club.

Preyer and I. Beverly Lake accepted. Moore declined because of a conflict in scheduling.

Robert W. Scott, who has been forced into a runoff election for the Democratic nomination for lieutenant governor, was still insisting Tuesday that he won't take sides in the governor's race.

But he hinted that he and gubernatorial candidate Preyer had something in common.

Scott was asked at a Greensboro news conference if big business and special interests were opposing him as Preyer claims they are opposing the Preyer candidacy.

Moore Says Bennett Pulling Preyer Strings

Charlotte Obs.
6-10-64

DUNN — (AP) — Dan K. Moore asserted that former state Democratic chairman Bert Bennett "is pulling the strings as usual" in the Democratic gubernatorial primary.

That was Moore's reply Tuesday when a reporter asked him for comment on Bennett's speech last week in support of L. Richardson Preyer for the nomination.

Asked if he expected [illegible] I. Beverly Lake to actively campaign for him, Moore said that was "up to Lake. I told him I'd appreciate anything he could do."

Lake, who ran third in the first primary, has thrown his support to Moore in the runoff.

Moore indicated again he will not take part in a television debate Preyer has tried to arrange for Friday night at Charlotte.

Moore noted he had a speaking engagement at Burlington Friday night when asked if he was going to take part in the debate.

Asked for comment on a statement by Preyer that he was not qualified to be governor, Moore said, "We'll let the people of North Carolina decide that."

Oakes, Pace Call For Runoff Vote

Enf. Dis. 6-12-64

Second-place finishers in two county races in the May 30 Demoncratic Primary have called for a second primary.

L. Taylor Oakes, who is seeking the senate seat vacated by N. C. Democratic Party Chairman W. Lunsford Crew, and W. L. (Bill) Pace, trying for election as coroner, have requested a runoff vote. They made their announcements Monday.

Both men are from Roanoke Rapids, where Oakes is an insurance man and Pace is currently in retirement.

Oakes, with 3,049 votes, came in second to Julian R. Allsbrook in the May 30 primary. Allsbrook polled 5,166 votes, which amounted to about 41 per cent of the total votes cast. There were two other candidates for the senate post.

William H. Crawford was high man for coroner with 4,063 votes, and Pace netted an even 3,000. Five men entered the coroner's race. The post has been vacant since Rufus Britton died in February.

Allsbrook, who formerly served in the General Assembly, and Crawford each received a plurality of the total vote, but not a majority, which is necessary for clear-cut election.

Oakes, requesting the second primary, said, "Now that the votes in the senate race have been officially canvassed, I have noted, and many citizens from throughout Halifax County have called it to my attention, that the high man in the four-man Senate race received only 41 per cent of the total vote cast. It is thus apparent that 59 per cent of those voting voted against the high man.

"In any democracy, it is the inherent right of the majority to exeress their approval for a candidate. Since no candidate received a majority of the total votes cast, and since my calling for a second primary will not cost the taxpayers any additional money, as the Governor's race has already made a second primary necessary, I have today decided to enter into a second primary in order that voters throughout the county may select their next senator in the democratic fashion by a majority vote.

Pace congratulated his opponents on a "clean campaign" and added, "Being a veteran of World War 1, retired and life-long citizen of Halifax County I feel that I am fully qualified and have the time to devote to this important office.

"Thanking you again, I say that if elected I will strive to serve all of Halifax County."

The second primary will be held on June 27.

"I am grateful to those who supported me in the first primary and have promised to work and vote for me in the second primary. I congratulate my opponents on their strong and vigorous campaign. I invite all citizens who are interested in the welfare of Halifax County to join me in this fight for continued good government and victory on June 27.

"My sincere thanks to you all. Your vote, support, confidence and advice will be sincerely appreciated."

Pace said, "I would like to take this opportunity to thank the people of Halifax County for their loyal support in the Democratic Primary of May 30 for county coroner.

Court Ruling Is Setback For Negroes

RICHMOND, Va. — (UPI) — The Virginia Supreme Court ruled 6-1 Monday that Virginia cities and counties can legally abandon free public schooling.

The ruling was a setback to Negroes attempting to reopen public schools in Prince Edward County, where they were closed in 1959 to circumvent court-ordered desegregation. The effect of the ruling was to leave the final decision up to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Chief Justice John W. Eggleston wrote a vigorous dissent stating that "the refusal of the highest court of this state to recognize here the rights of citizens of Prince Edward County. . .is a clear invitation to the federal courts to step in and enforce such rights."

Prince Edward County, a rural tobacco-producing area about 70 miles southwest of Richmond, was one of the principals in the U.S. Supreme Court's historic desegregation decision of 1954. It became in 1959 the first Virginia locality to cease operating public schools under provisions of the state's "freedom of choice" statute.

Public schools remain closed in the county where two different education systems operate. One is a private segregated system for whites started in 1959. The other is a privately financed free school system started in August for all children of the county — white and Negro. A handful of whites and about 1,600 Negro pupils are enrolled in the school.

Register-Vote Drive Is OKd

By JAMES K. BATTEN
Observer Staff Writer

The most intensive voter-registration drive ever held in Mecklenburg County was authorized Monday as a prelude to next month's referendum on the "little federal" amendment.

In providing $8,370 to finance the drive, county commissioners strenuously disclaimed any intention of piling up a heavy Mecklenburg vote against the amendment.

"We want them to vote," declared Chairman Charles M. Lowe, "regardless of how they vote."

The "little federal" proposal would amend the N.C. constitution to give each of the state's 100 counties equal representation in the N.C. House of Representatives.

If approved, the plan would cut Mecklenburg's House delegation from five persons to one.

A massive campaign to defeat the amendment has been organized here and in other urban counties that stand to lose political power if the change is approved. The local campaign is headed by lawyer Thomas C. Creasy Jr.

Democrat Raymond E. King and Republican Marcus T. Hickman, county chairmen for their parties, appeared before the commissioners Monday to request the $8,370 needed for the registration campaign.

Although both men have worked closely with Creasy's committee, they insisted Monday that the voter-registration drive should not be considered part of the strategy to defeat the amendment.

It is generally conceded, however, that the idea for the drive originated with the Creasy committee, although commissioners said they would have thought of it without outside help.

One well-informed committee member said Monday night that the idea for an all-out registration campaign before the referendum "evolved with Creasy, King and Hickman."

The county commissioners were unanimous in voting the needed money, even though Craig Lawing, J. Frank Blythe and Alfred W. Shriver Jr. had expressed strong reservations last week.

All three said they were satisfied that the drive was not designed to help defeat or pass the amendment, but simply to insure full participation by the county's voters. The other commissioners — Lowe and Henry B. Wilmer — had favored spending all along.

King and Hickman predicted that the drive could add as many as 20,000 voters to the nearly 100,000 persons now on the rolls.

Hickman argued that the pre-Christmas effort would make next year's registration efforts easier and less expensive. Major registration drives would normally precede 1964's primaries and general election.

The $8,370 voted by the commissioners will pay for an 11-day campaign beginning on Dec. 11 — the day after the school bond vote — and continuing until Dec. 23, when the books must be closed prior to the Jan. 14 vote. There will be three aspects to the campaign:

—The County Elections Office, 720 E. Fourth St., will remain open six days a week. The hours will be 8:15 a.m. to 5:15 p.m. on weekdays and 9 a.m. to sunset on Saturdays.

—On Saturday, Dec. 21, polling places in the 27 precincts outside the city limits will be open from 9 a.m. to sunset for registration.

—Voting booths, equipped to register voters from anywhere in the county, will be set up in shopping centers. On weekdays, four booths will be open from 12:30 p.m. to 8:30 p.m. On Saturdays, ten booths will be open from 9 a.m. to sunset.

Election officials say that a voter - registration drive of this magnitude is unprecedented in Mecklenburg County.

21 Voter-Registration Officials Are Dropped

By JOE DOSTER
Observer Staff Writer

What Mecklenburg County's Board of Elections hoped would be a quiet administrative wrist-slapping has caused a chain reaction of problems.

Three separate but related events, all touched off by the board's investigation of reports of voter registration at unauthorized times and places, took place Tuesday:

— The Elections Board revoked the authority of all 21 of its registration commissioners.

— Two Negro commissioners who had already resigned at the request of the board attempted to withdraw their resignations.

— Negro leader Dr. R. A. Hawkins said he intended to ask the Civil Rights Commission to conduct an investigation into the case.

Late Tuesday, however, the Elections Board was standing firm on the two commissioners' resignations and its policies.

Mecklenburg has a full-time elections office, and the registration books are open each week day except during the period immediately proceeding and following an election when state law requires them to be closed.

The Election Board also allows registration at precinct polling places — generally on Saturdays — before an election. In addition it also schedules mobile registration units at specified times and places before an election.

Registration commissioners have the same authority to conduct registration as precinct registrars but may register voters in all precincts. They were used primarily to staff booths, mobile registration units and the Elections Board office.

Here's what caused the flare-up, according to minutes of the Election Board.

On Nov. 19 the board received reports that registrations had been conducted at unscheduled times and places in violation of its policies. It agreed to look into the reports.

The registration period coincided with a six-week drive for new registrations under the direction of Hawkins and other Negro leaders. About 4,000 new Negro voters were added to the books.

On Nov. 20 the board called two registration commissioners to its sessions to discuss the reports.

They were Mrs. Virginia Stepteau of 1808 Van Buren Ave. and Mrs. Thera Garvin of 705 Baldwin Ave. Both were veteran election officials and well-regarded by the board. According to the minutes, Mrs. Stepteau said that she was approached by Hawkins and Mrs. Garvin on Nov. 8 and asked to work on Nov. 9—the regular registration day— but that she could not.

She was approached again on Sunday, Nov. 10 about working the next night, and, although it was the Veterans Day holiday, she agreed.

She told the board that Hawkins and Mrs. Garvin told her to date the forms as of Saturday, Nov. 9, instead of the actual day—Monday, Nov. 11. (Monday was not a scheduled registration day because of the holiday.)

Mrs. Stepteau said that she thought the registration would be a public service, but that she attempted to call the board offices to ask about back-dating the forms.

She told the board that she also went to the Spring Lanes Bowling Lanes at 2300 Statesville Ave. on Monday, Nov. 11, and registered persons there. (The bowling lane was not a registration place authorized by the Elections Board.)

Mrs. Garvin, according to the minutes, told the board that on Sunday, Nov. 10, she had gone to the Brooklyn Presbyterian Church at 418 S. McDowell St. and registered people at the request of Walter Alexander, Democratic precinct chairman in the Brooklyn area. (Sunday Nov. 10 had not been authorized for registration by the board.)

The registration forms were back-dated to Saturday, Nov. 9.

Mrs. Garvin and Mrs. Stepteau said they had registered people on their own in past years at places and times not specified by the board.

The minutes show that Mrs. Stepteau and Mrs. Garvin both offered their resignations and that they were accepted.

Mrs. Garvin was not removed as the regular registrar in Precinct 2 (Second Ward High School), and Mrs. Stepteau was left in her position as a Democratic election judge in Precinct 54 (Northwest Junior High School).

Election office personnel estimated that 200 registrations were involved.

Mrs. Hair said that the voters themselves would not be affected. "They registered in good faith, and we won't disturb them," she said.

The minutes indicated that the meeting with the two commissioners was friendly, a sentiment that was echoed by election officials.

But in letters written to the [illegible] board's instructions [illegible] but Dalton parade held on Sunday, the legal registration [illegible] any persons from registering.

(It was references in the letters to misunderstanding or confusion about board policies that led the board to revoke the authority of all 21 commissioners. When new ones are appointed, the board plans to instruct them more specifically.)

Mrs. Garvin said she felt it was her duty to permit them to register the following day.

Hawkins told The Observer he intended to fight the local board, "all the way to the Civil Rights Commission."

"Contacts have already been made," he said.

Hawkins said that the case was just part of a pattern that showed that the Elections Board was opposed to Negro registration.

He said that registration was held at times and places inconvenient to Negro voters and that Negroes had "been intimidated for so long in the past that they are now reluctant to go to the election offices" on Trade Street.

Mrs. Samuel C. Hair, the chairman of the local board, issued this statement:

"Mecklenburg County has a progressive registration system that is well regarded by the State Board of Elections and Institute of Government personnel.

"This board has done everything possible — including mobile registration units, precinct registration, county-wide registration booths and night registration tailored to the needs of the voting public — to insure that any qualified person who wants to register and vote is able to do so.

"Such programs, however, must be carried out in conformity with state law and under policies established by this Election Board."

"The Board of Elections went on record in 1960 with a policy that registration opportunities must be equally available to all parties, groups and races.

"Accordingly the board ruled that registration would be conducted only at times and places specified by the board and duly publicized.

"It should be noted that leaders of both races have always told us they considered that registration had been conducted fairly and without discrimination.

"The result of this policy has been that registrars are supervised by and receive compensation from the Board of Elections in all their official duties.

"Registrars are thus not at the beck and call of any one political party, candidate or group and are not permitted— even if they wished — to offer registration on a selective basis.

"The board has taken these steps because we believe the basic democratic process of voting is involved. We have wanted to make sure that the public can have confidence in the entire election process."

Mrs. Hair said that new commissioners would be appointed and new instructions given them. There will be Negroes in the new group.

The board is composed of Mrs. Hair and John Kirk — Democrats — and J. E. Presser — a Republican. All actions in the mixup were unanimous.

The registration forms were back-dated to Saturday, Nov. 9.

Mrs. Garvin and Mrs. Stepteau said they had registered people on their own in past years at places and times not specified by the board.

The minutes show that Mrs. Stepteau and Mrs. Garvin both offered their resignations and that they were accepted.

Mrs. Garvin was not removed as the regular registrar in Precinct 2 (Second Ward High School), and Mrs. Stepteau was left in her position as a Democratic election judge in Precinct 54 (Northwest Junior High School).

Election office personnel estimated that 200 registrations were involved.

Mrs. Hair said that the voters themselves would not be affected. "They registered in good faith, and we won't disturb them," she said.

The minutes indicated that the meeting with the two commissioners was friendly, a sentiment that was echoed by election officials.

But in letters written to the board after they had conferred with Hawkins, both Mrs. Stephen and Mrs. Garvin denied any wrongdoing, said they had been forced to resign and asked that the resignations be withdrawn.

Dear Mr. Minnis:

Your letter of November 21st received in which you requested that we send you our best estimate of the number of white, and the number of Negro registered voters in North Carolina. Our best estimate is 1,900,000 whites and 200,000 Negroes.

You also requested a list of the names, addresses and telephone numbers of the chairmen of our various county boards of elections. We enclose, herewith, a list of the names and addresses of the chairmen of the county election boards, but we do not have the telephone numbers.

Dear Mr. Meyland:

We are doing research on voter registration in several southern states. A part of our research is to determine the number of persons registered between selected dates in 1963.

Could you tell us how many Negroes, and how many whites were registered in your county between May 10 through June 29 inclusive, and from September 26 through October 20?

We shall greatly appreciate your cooperation.

Dear Mr. Minnis:

This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 6, regarding certain registration statistics.

The statistics of registration are not kept in a manner for me to give you the exact information you requested in your letter. Cumulative totals between closing dates for elections are kept; therefore, from April 16, 1963 through October 14, 1963, the following number of new registrations were made in Guilford County, North Carolina:

Total New:	2,539
Total White:	656
Total Negro:	1,883

Several registration drives have been made for the Negroes during this period and this accounts for the unusually high ratio of Negroes to white registrations.

If this office can be of any further help in this matter, please let me know.

Dear Mr. Minnis:

Your letter of July 17th addressed to the Secretary of State has been referred to this office for reply.

In your letter you asked for the latest compilation of registered voters for this state by counties and independent cities, broken down into white and Negro if we have such data. We are enclosing list by counties of whites and non-whites registered as of November 1960. These figures were compiled by the N. C. Advisory Committee on Civil Rights and furnished to us in 1960. These are the latest figures we have on white and non-white registration.

spectrum. What is more, it is a group which is thoroughly bipartisan in its makeup.

This eminent array of Senators who have joined with me in this resolution gives me great hope that early consideration might be given to the resolution by the Senate Committee on Rules. It is my earnest hope also, that the resolution might be reported to the floor and adopted by the Senate during our present session.

I—and I am sure each of the Senators who are cosponsors of Senate Resolution 30—will work diligently toward that end.

ADDRESSES, EDITORIALS, ARTICLES, ETC., PRINTED IN THE APPENDIX

On request, and by unanimous consent, addresses, editorials, articles, etc., were ordered to be printed in the Appendix, as follows:

By Mr. CANNON:

Address delivered by Gov. Grant Sawyer, of Nevada, before the grazing, water, and revenue conference of the National Association of Counties, at Las Vegas, Nev., December 11–13, 1962, on the subject of administering a public-land State.

RACE RELATIONS—STATEMENT BY THE GOVERNOR OF NORTH CAROLINA ON DEVELOPMENTS IN SOUTH CAROLINA

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, on the subject of race relations in this country, I call to the attention of the Senate and the Nation a statement made recently by Gov. Terry Sanford, of North Carolina.

North Carolina has long been in the forefront of the movement to improve opportunities and the climate of cooperation for all its citizens. The movement was given great impetus by former Gov. Luther Hodges. It is being carried on by Governor Sanford. Governor Sanford has just established a new State agency, called the North Carolina Good Neighbor Council. Its purpose is to promote employment opportunities for all qualified persons, regardless of race, and to encourage better training of those persons. This commendable endeavor is outlined in a statement by Governor Sanford on January 18, which I ask to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the end of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I should also note that a chapter in good human relations is being written by the people and their public officials in South Carolina. I refer to the peaceable admittance of Mr. Harvey Gantt to Clemson College. The enrollment of Mr. Gantt has proceeded in orderly fashion. Those involved in his admittance may not be in favor of integration, but they have shown wisdom in not defying the law of the land.

I commend the people of South Carolina, the students and officials of Clemson College, and the State authorities for showing that a sense of fair play and a realization of legal responsibility are America's greatest protection of individual rights.

EXHIBIT 1

OBSERVATION FOR A SECOND CENTURY

(Statement by Gov. Terry Sanford)

The American Negro was freed from slavery 100 years ago. In this century he has made much progress, educating his children, building churches, entering into the community and civic life of the Nation.

Now is a time not merely to look back to freedom, but forward to the fulfillment of its meaning. Despite great progress, the Negro's opportunity to obtain a good job has not been achieved in most places across the country. Reluctance to accept the Negro in employment is the greatest single block to his continued progress and to the full use of the human potential of the Nation and its States.

The time has come for American citizens to give up this reluctance, to quit unfair discriminations, and to give the Negro a full chance to earn a decent living for his family and to contribute to higher standards for himself and all men.

We cannot rely on law alone in this matter because much depends upon its administration and upon each individual's sense of fair play. North Carolina and its people have come to the point of recognizing the urgent need for opening new economic opportunities for Negro citizens. We also recognize that in doing so we shall be adding new economic growth for everybody.

We can do this. We should do this. We will do it because we are concerned with the problems and the welfare of our neighbors. We will do it because our economy cannot afford to have so many people fully or partially unproductive. We will do it because it is honest and fair for us to give all men and women their best chance in life.

In North Carolina we will attempt to provide leadership for the kind of understanding America needs today.

To carry out these hopes we will do five things right now:

1. We have established the North Carolina Good Neighbor Council. It will consist of 24 outstanding citizens of the State. David S. Coltrane will be chairman; Dean James T. Taylor will be vice chairman. Coltrane is former director of administration and presently special consultant to the Governor. Taylor is former dean of men at North Carolina College.

We will also name an additional advisory committee to reach more sections of the economy and the State.

The council will have a twofold mission (1) to encourage employment of qualified people without regard to race, and (2) to urge youth to become better trained and qualified for employment.

2. We are asking all mayors and chairmen of county commissioners to establish local good neighbor councils.

3. We have issued a memorandum to heads of State agencies, departments, and institutions, asking them, if they have not already done so, to examine and formulate policies which do not exclude from employment qualified people because of race.

4. Being aware that complete success cannot be achieved without wise and vigorous leadership from private business and industry, we will conduct a conference this spring, inviting leading industrialists and businessmen to participate.

5. We call on church leaders, pastors, civic organizations, to support the objectives of the good neighbor councils in their own effective ways.

In addition to Coltrane and Taylor, the members of the North Carolina Good Neighbor Council are: J. Marse Grant, of Raleigh, editor of the Biblical Recorder, official publication of the North Carolina Baptist Convention; John H. Wheeler, president of Farmers & Mechanics Bank at Durham; J. P. Strother, managing editor of the Kinston Daily Free Press; John W. Winters, Raleigh realtor and member of the Raleigh City Council; Roy D. McLaurin, Laurinburg businessman; Dr. Reginald A. Hawkins, Charlotte dentist; Bruce F. Jones, Edenton automobile dealer; Clark S. Brown, Winston-Salem funeral director; J. S. Stewart, president of Mutual Savings & Loan Association and member of the Durham City Council; Edward Loewenstein, Greensboro architect; and Dr. John R. Larkins, State department of public welfare.

Other members of the council will be announced later.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE ON EDUCATION

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I wish to speak very briefly on the message on education which the President sent to the Congress yesterday. It seems to me that it is likely to be the most important message the President will send to the Congress at this session.

The President's message on education was an excellent one; and I believe that at this session, education, rather than tax reduction, should have the No. 1 priority, because certainly nothing would more greatly aid in the development and improvement of our Nation than improvement of the skills and understanding of its people.

A particularly noteworthy aspect of the President's message on education is that in it he emphasized that education must be handled at the local level. He appropriately quoted Thomas Jefferson, the great founder of our party, and his emphasis on education as the most important endeavor of government.

I understand that the President's very excellent message on education was printed on yesterday in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; therefore, I shall not request that the message be printed in the RECORD today. I commend a careful reading of the President's message on education to all my colleagues. I believe his proposal is moderate, thoughtful, and practical.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

TRIBUTE TO OTTO A. HARBACH

Mr. MOSS. Mr. President, there will be buried today in Salt Lake City one of America's greatest librettists—a man who has written the words to more than 1,000 songs, including such favorites as "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes," "Indian Love Call," and "One Alone." I am referring, of course, to Otto A. Harbach, world famous playwright and lyricist who died last week in New York City at the age of 89, but who chose to return to his birthplace, where many members of his family still live, for burial.

Otto Harbach was born in Salt Lake City on August 18, 1873, one of nine children. He was educated in the Salt Lake City schools, working after school hours selling papers and shining shoes for his pocket money. He was graduated from the old Salt Lake Collegiate Institute, now known as Westminister College, and left Salt Lake in 1891 to further his education at Knox College at Gales-

Mr. F. B. McKissick
213½ West Main Street
Durham, North Carolina

Dear Mr. McKissick:

This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 27, inquiring about the possibility of financial assistance to a registration effort which will be conducted by the Multi-County Civic and Educational Association.

I note that we previously made an assignment for a registration program to the Southern Christian Leadership Conference for work in Bertie county, and to the NAACP for work in Edgecomb county. I would imagine that very little has been done by way of actual registration in either of these counties since we made the assignments in view of the fact that you can only register during a certain period immediately preceding an election.

If it is true that you are not able to register in any of the counties which you mentioned except for a brief period preceding the May elections then I agree that you want to develop plans immediately for a registration program which will be conducted next month. It would be helpful to us if you would inform us of any other elections which will be held anywhere in the Second Congressional District during 1963.

You state that your group is "formulating detailed plans" and we will be pleased to consider any requests which you care to submit. At the present time, we cannot consider any plans which would begin or run from and after March 31, 1964, and your best chances of support from VEP would be for you to submit a proposal for your immediate efforts.

This letter should not be construed in any way as approval of your plans or as a promise of financial support.

Very truly yours,

Wiley A. Branton

Dear Mr. Minnis:

Your letter of May 22nd received requesting information concerning registration of voters in this State.

Answering your first question, the following counties have established the loose-leaf registration system as permitted by G. S. 163-43: Alamance, Davidson, Henderson, Lee, Lenoir and Rowan. Counties operating under the loose-leaf full time and permanent registration system as permitted by G. S. 163-31 and G.S. 163-31.2. are: Cumberland, Forsyth, Gaston, Guilford, Mecklenburg, Stanly, Union, Wake, Wayne and Wilson. It is correct that counties which have established the full time and permanent registration system do conduct registration at any time subject to reasonable office hours prescribed by the respective county boards of elections. In those counties, however, the registration closes twenty-one days prior to each primary or election.

You also asked if this office maintains records of the dates when registration is possible in counties which do not have permanent registration. Dates for registration in those counties is set by statute. The registration in those counties opens on the fourth Saturday before each primary or election and closes on the second Saturday before the primary or election.

Raleigh Conference Snubs Negro Workers' Demands

freedom

"Break thy slavery's want and dread. Bread is Freedom, Freedom bread!"

Office at 605 Brown Street, MONROE, NORTH CAROLINA

VOL. I. NO. 1. July 15, 1963 10 cents per copy

By Richard Crowder

The Governor's conference of Negro leaders, which Terry Sanford called in Raleigh June 25, was a joke.

The 150 Negro leaders who attended — and I was one of them — thought they were there to settle some business and make some progress towards Freedom. It turned out we were fooled. The Governor had no intention of doing anything. The conference had no power to do anything. The whole thing was like a big bi-racial committee meeting.

What was good was the mood among the Negroes who attended. They were all determined to continue fighting. Kelly Alexander, state head of the NAACP, who backed Sanford by calling off NAACP demonstrations for a week, proposed that we go along with the Governor, and send a committee to meet with his representatives. Alexander was voted down.

Of course that made the Monroe Youth Action Committee proud. We suspected the Governor from the first. We didn't think he would do anything. We felt the only hope for any action was continued pressure.

So when the NAACP cancelled demonstrations we did not go along with that. We felt it wrong. The NAACP attacked us for it. But the conference proved that the great majority of Negro leaders in the state agreed with us, and not with the NAACP leaders who cancelled the demonstrations and wanted to go along with the Governor. This must have really surprised the NAACP leaders, because they picked the people who attended the conference!

But if the demonstration that Negroes around the state are determined to keep fighting for their Freedom was the good side of the conference, there was also a bad side. The bad side was this: of the 15 points that the conference demanded the Governor act on, only one was about jobs.

And even though the main problems that Negro workers face are equal pay for equal work, opening up jobs, and raising the pay, the point on jobs didn't mention these things. Worse yet, the demand on jobs came ninth in order in the list of 15 demands. Ahead of it come things like getting Negro lawyers into local Bar Associations and integrating the Democratic and Republican parties.

This was a proof that the majority of Negroes were not really represented. If they had been, jobs, equal pay and more pay would have been at the top of the list instead of buried down in it.

Also disturbing was the fact that the NAACP leaders still believe that the Governor and the other white bosses are going to act because they know we are right.

Of course we are right, and of course, down deep even the white bosses know we are right. But we have been right for the past 350 years and they knew it and didn't act. Why believe they will change now?

In fact they haven't changed. The white churches want the businesses to desegregate, but not the churches. The state government is not integrating. The Jaycees (local business leaders) in city after city are opposing desegregation. The politicians are against desegregation. The white hospitals, Y's and clubs are doing nothing about ending segregation.

We say the time is past for believing in the white bosses' good intentions. He doesn't have any. He has to be forced to act.

And we also say that it is up to the Negro workers, and farmers, men and women, to organize themselves to force the white boss to act. As it stands now the workingman is being left out. The Raleigh conference proves that. But most of us happen to be workingmen and workingwomen, and poor to boot.

The Raleigh conference was a failure. It didn't help us along to Freedom, Jobs and Justice. But if we learn the right lessons from it, we can turn it into future successes.

Domestic Workers Organize League for Jobs and Justice

By Marti Moorer

A study shows that domestic work is the number one job open to Negroes in Union County. According to government figures, domestic workers make up the largest group of employed Negroes—male or female in the County.

To find why so many Negro women do domestic work, and whether they are satisfied with it, a FREEDOM reporter talked with members of the Union County Women's League.

All of them domestic workers, the women were bitter about their situation.

Mrs. Ruby Simpson, a former domestic worker and President of the Women's League, said it doesn't pay to do domestic work in Monroe nowadays. "It's the hours you put in for the pay that makes it so bad. Nobody minds working. It's working for nothing that gets you down."

Mrs. RUBY SIMPSON

The usual pay for the drudgery of cleaning someone else's home is $3.00 for a 9 or 10 hour day, Mrs. Simpson said. What makes matters worse, Miss Ann doesn't see fit to allow her domestic worker time out for lunch, and many must eat and mop floors at the same time!

One Women's League member told how her white boss lady didn't want to raise her pay to $12 a week because the boss was afraid she might "get rich." "I told her she could just keep that job. She must have thought I was stupid."

"The whites try to encourage you to just work on like you always have by telling you that you'll make out fine on $11 a week," a woman said, "But we know that our grocery bills add up to more than our paychecks. Miss Ann will soon find out that if she can't add, unfortunately for her, we can!"

Many women complained of one of the great injustices of domestic work: "While we work long hours for little pay, our own homes and children are neglected. Our children are forced to drop out of school because we can't afford to give them lunch money and proper clothing." The white bosses would get hot under the collar pretty quickly if someone told them to treat their children that way, so they shouldn't be too surprised to find that domestic workers are already hot.

Perhaps Miss Ann's biggest mistake is that she thinks domestic workers are stupid. Why else are they domestic workers?

We asked the women: Why not get another job if domestic work is so bad? Mrs. Simpson answered that even when jobs are available in local industry, they are reserved for whites.

For example, an application which shows Mrs. Simpson to be perfectly qualified for a job at Winn Dixie hes been collecting dust in the manager's office for several years.

Another woman proved herself qualified for a "White Only" job at Allen Overall by passing their 3-hour aptitude test. Here is the story she told us: In 1961, she was given a card saying she had passed the

WHOSE TOWN HALL?

. . . "The substantial three-story red brick Town Hall was built in 1847-48 for use as the county jail. A runaway slave unwittingly made possible its erection. When captured by his angry and drunken master, he was dragged the eight miles into town with a log chain around his neck. His master, found guilty of his murder, pleaded an old English law and escaped with paying a fine of $3.000 and $390.39 courts with which the County built the jail."

FREEDOM HOUSE OPENS— CENTER OF ACTIVITY

Headquarters of the Monroe Youth Action Committee is FREEDOM HOUSE. Located in Newtown at 605 Brown Street, it is the center for meetings, planning sessions and is where the MYAC organizers live.

Support for the work of the organization comes in the form of donations to keep up FREEDOM HOUSE. Workers and farmers from all over the County have donated food, money for rent, electricity and gas for the car.

"We appreciate all the community has done so far," Richard Crowder president of the MYAC said, "But the help has to keep coming. After all the food does get eaten, and the gas gets burned, and it all has to be replaced daily or we can't carry on our work." Crowder said donations can be brought to the House at any time, or word should be left so someone can pick up the money or food.

Freedom House, which is open to all members of the community, is always filled with people who want to discuss the MYAC program and see what they can do to help win Freedom, Jobs and Justice.

Mistaking the open invitation to the community as applying to him, one "brave" white cop arrived at 6 a.m. one day and stole onto the porch. Ripping the page of Freedom House Work Rules (which describe what all the residents of the House have to do each day) off the wall, he fled back to his car and rushed uptown. MYAC organizers have taken steps to make sure that such "visits" by uninvited "guests" don't happen again.

Two of Freedom House's five rooms are set aside for meetings and work. The rest of the House is used as living quarters by the six full-time MYAC organizers. None of the organizers gets any pay for his work, as all money raised goes to pay the expenses of the House and organization. According to the rules, each organizer gets two meals a day, in the morning and evening, and all take turns cooking and cleaning up.

"We want the Negro community to know that the welcome-mat is out at all times at Freedom House," Crowder said. "We want everyone to come by whenever he can so we can talk things over and unify our efforts. It is the only way we will win.

In slavery times it was a crime punishable by death to teach a slave to read and write. It was so important to the white masters that their slaves not learn anything that those slaves who tried to learn were whipped, beaten, and sometimes killed for trying.

Why was it so important to the masters that their slaves be kept in the darkness of ignorance? The reason is simple. As long as a man cannot read, it is hard for him to know what is going on in the world. And if he doen't know what's going on—if he is ignorant —it is hard for him to change his condition. And of course the slaveowner wasn't very anxious for his slave to change things.

When the slaves were freed, their old masters still tried to keep them in ignorance. The old Master—now the bossman—still tries. One of the ways he does this is by printing only certain kinds of stories in his newspapers. These stories are either all lies, or mainly lies. But the purpose of all the stories is always the same: to keep the Negro in ignorance so that it is harder for us to change things.

That is why we are publishing this newspaper—FREEDOM. We know that if we are ever to get Freedom, Jobs and Justice, we must leave ignorance behind us. A man once said that knowledge is power. If we want to have the power to change the world (and the world has to change if we are to get Freedom for our people) then we must have true knowledge. It can't be the kind of knowledge the slaveowners fed to their slaves. It can't be the kind of knowledge fed us by the bossmen—the very people who are keeping us down. Because that knowledge is not true knowledge. True knowledge is the knowledge that we need to free us. To give true knowledge—that is the reason for this paper.

But true knowledge by itself is not enough. Together with it must come action. And action, the right kind of action, is what . . .

THE MONROE YOUTH ACTION COMMITTEE

. . . Is organizing. This newspaper supports the program of the MYAC. What the MYAC is saying is this: most Negroes are workers and farmers. They are poor. They are without their rights.

The MYAC says that poor people without rights are no better than slaves. "Bread is freedom, freedom bread," is the message of the Monroe Youth Action Committee.

To win Freedom is to win a better way of life. If the white bosses—the modern slavemasters—and politicians refuse, to end modern Negro slavery, then Negroes must end it themselves.

Negro history is full of slave revolts. It is time now for the modern slaves to say: give me mine, which you have stolen from me. If the slave-masters and their government refuse, then the slaves must begin to control the government and the slavemasters. 350 years of slavery is long enough.

Some ask why the MYAC is not demonstrating just now. The answer is that the MYAC says demonstrations have to be about the right things, called at the right time, and led by the right people.

Demonstrations to intergrate lunch counters are not bad, but integrating lunch counters is not the main problem. The main problem is improving jobs and pay and life.

So the MYAC is holding off demonstrating downtown just now in order to organize workers and farmers, women and young people. When that is done it will be the right time for the right kind of demonstrations, and they will be led by the right people—the working people themselves. FREEDOM agrees with this point of view.

FREEDOM calls upon all Negroes in Union county to unite. That is the way to Freedom, Jobs and Justice.

Letters To The Editor

Dear editor,

I saw the report of the June 13 demonstration in the Charlotte paper. It would seem that the "respectable" leadership in Monroe is opposed to a militant program—just as they seem to be everywhere.

I wish you well in your efforts. The MYAC program indicates awareness that the fight for Freedom is a broad one that can't end with "integration." Opening up hotels and restaurants leaves the masses of exploited Negroes virtually untouched. It is obvious that you know this.

Dear editor,

I see the South as the only area that will, in the final analysis, solve the Negro question in the U. S. So it is necessary that a serious effort be made to organize the Negro workers, both agricultural and industrial.

The demands the Monroe Youth Action Committee are making can and should be made all over the South. But to my knowledge Monroe is the first, and so far the only city, where these fundamental demands, especially "effective political power by the Negro people," are being made. Wonderful for you, too bad for the rest.

Election of members of our people to political office is very important; but not just any Negro. Our representatives should be those who have deep roots among the Negro people, and who will truly represent the Negro working men and women and be responsible to them.

Lots of luck. If there is anything I can do, let me know.

MYAC Sets Up Series of Classes In Negro History

The first of a series of classes in Negro history and current events was held last week by the Monroe Youth Action Committee.

Some of the topics to be covered in future meetings are: Negro emigration to America, Life under slavery, Non-violence and self-defense, African life and imperialism.

Purpose of the classes is to help educate the Negro community in the history of our people, and to help them understand their present conditions.

Another aim is discussing what ways and means are needed to get Freedom, Jobs and Justice. Attention is being paid to the work and program of the Monroe Youth Action Committee, the Union County Women's League and other community organizations.

The classes, open to all regardless of age, meet in the evening once a week in two-hour sessions. When necessary, more classes will be set up so that they will be convenient to all.

"In order to organize ourselves for our fight for Freedom we must educate ourselves for the fight," Richard Crowder, MYAC president, said.

Only Our Own Action Will Bring Us Freedom

By Amziah Craig

To be a "man" in this discriminative society is, for the Negro, far from reality. We Negroes are "disequal in manhood" because our white brothers refuse to acknowledge the fact that we are men.

And we are men not because of our physical prowess or characteristics, but because of our contempt for, and refusal at being kept down on our knees.

Since the slave ships crossed the Atlantic bringing us as chattel slaves to the New World we have kneeled and prayed that God send kindness and sentiments of fraternity to our white brothers; that He give them the strength and the courage to realize that which the white man says he so ardently worships and consecrates — the Christian way of life. We have been praying that the white man help us off our knees.

For almost three centuries we accepted the bottom of the pit and hoped that our prayers would be answered and that God's eternal cry would be the creed of the white master—all men are created equal.

But now we realize that without our own active concern for our Freedom, our hopes will never be a reality. Without our action nothing will happen to benefit us.

Prophets of Freedom have arisen and epitomized the way to Freedom, laying foundations for our present movement, giving strength and intensity to our hopes and our desire to get off our knees and stand on our feet in equality, in Freedom, in dignity, as true men should; and giving us the courage and ability to look our fellow men in the face.

Although we are on the way to our Freedom we are not yet off the battlefield. We are still fighting.

We are like a strong baby just beginning to walk, stumbling sometimes and sometimes falling, but determined to walk so much that any barrier only produces a greater fight to walk and a greater determination to stand.

KENNEDY TALKS BIG BUT STILL NO JOBS

A stament by a high official in the Kenhedy administration revealed segregated hiring practices are followed in Federal government projects.

W. Willard Wirtz, Secretary of Labor in the Kennedy Cabinet, stated that there are only 300 skilled Negro workers employed on 47 Federal construction projects. Skilled white workers on the same projects total 5,358.

Wirtz also revealed that the same segregation practice is followed on white collar jobs by companies doing business with the government.

Wirtz said that there are a total of 7,795 workers employed on the construction projects. Of these, 1,389 are Negroes. But all except 316 of the Negroes are laborers.

Of the 316 Negroes, 300 are journeymen, or skilled workers. Sixteen are apprentices. But on the same jobs, there are 287 white apprentices working, revealing discrimination in apprentiship training.

The Labor Secretary gave three examples which prove discrimination in white collar employment:

In New York, where Negroes are 11.5 per cent of the population, less than 7 per cent of the employees of government contractors are Negro, and Negroes hold only 2.5 per cent of the contractors' white collar jobs.

In Chicago, where 14.3 per cent of the population is Negro, only 9.2 per cent of the government contractors' employees are Negro, and there are only 1.1 per cent Negro white collar workers employed on government projects.

In Atlanta, where Negroes are 22.8 per cent of the population, 14.9 per cent of the work force of government contractors are Negro and only 2.5 per cent are white collar workers.

This discrimination exists even though there has been an Executive Order since March 6, 1961 which was supposedly to insure equal employment opportunities for Negroes on government jobs.

Observers noted that not much had been done to enforce the order.

In view of the Kennedy administration's lack of interest in enforcing the Executive Order (which got a lot of publicity for the President when he made it) many feel, that even if the Civil Rights bills the President is asking for get passed by Congress they will not affect the situation much.

If Kennedy wanted to, he could have removed the government contract, and the big profits that go with it, from any company that segregated in its hiring.

The figures revealed by Wirtz show that Kennedy-who, like Terry Sanford, has also called for an end to demonstrations—is apparently more interested in getting some good publicity for himself than in really solving the job problem. Wirtz has said in the past that the Kennedy administration has no intention of cancelling contracts even if segregation is shown because that would "cause unemployment."

The point is that unemployment already exists for Negro workers, and the Order was supposed to help solve that. What Wirtz was saying was that the Kennedy administration was either not willing to, or was unable to do anything about creating jobs for Negro workers.

A Certain Doctor Has A Certain Problem

A certain crafty Negro doctor we know said the other day that he was "actually concerned and trying to the best of (his) ability to secure better conditions for the residents of Union county."

Of course that made us very happy, since everyone's help is needed if we are ever going to win Freedom, Jobs and Justice. What bothered us was this: Why did this doctor have to say that he was concerned? A man is known by his acts and we naturally figure that everyone knows who is helping by what he does. If he isn't doing right, no amount of talk will cover that up. People can't be fooled.

We heard one woman say that if the doctor was so concerned about bettering conditions he could start right away by fixing up the houses he owns and rents so they are decent and fit to live in. It seemed to her, she said, that all he was really interested in was collecting rent from his tenants.

Last we heard, nothing had been done to fix up the houses.

Another man we know said he thought the doctor was talking out of both sides of his mouth at the same time, or trying to anyway. The other day, at a meeting uptown, this doctor said he agreed there ought to be an ordinance passed making discrimination in any place serving the public in Monroe a crime subject to penalty, like the Monroe Youth Action Committee proposed. He also said he thought it was a good idea to have another ordinance making discrimination in hiring in Monroe a crime, another MYAC proposal.

But then he said, almost in the same breath, he was against passing both of these ordinances, or even recommending to the City Council that they be passed.

Now it can't be both ways. Either he is for the ordinances or he is against them. If he is for them, like almost the whole community is, then he should act to get them passed. If he doesn't act to get them passed, then he is against them, no matter what he says. And if he says he is for them, while acting against them then he is just trying to fool people. And if a man is trying to fool people, then we have to ask ourselves: what is he getting out of it?

This is the same doctor who said a few weeks ago that the Mayor's Bi-Racial Committee was making "progress" toward desegregating Monroe's eating places. The only "progress" we heard anything about took place at two lunch counters after demonstrations were called by the Monroe Youth Action Committee.

So it turns out that the only progfess came as a result of the demonstration called by the MYAC. And this doctor said he "does not approve" of the MYAC and "our children are not taking part in the demonstration."

RICHARD CROWDER
. . . he's not the doctor.

That is true, of course—his children didn't take part in the demonstrations. But what must have embarassed him was that one of his sons went and joined the Monroe Youth Action Committee. The doctor explained that by saying that everyone knows his son "isn't all there." People who heard about that are wondering if the doctor meant that everyone who belongs to the MYAC and supports its program is crazy, or if he just meant that anyone in his family that supports Freedom, Jobs and Justice should have his head examined?

We understand the doctor gets around this by saying that one of his sons went off to another part of the state to join with another group that is travelling around. Some people, who lost money on the deal, remember that this is the same group that breezed into Monroe, demanded that demonstrations start, ran up a bill at different places, raised some money for itself, bought some whiskey, then breezed out of town. A few weeks ago a representative of that group told a meeting the reason the group left Monroe was that they got "scared."

We don't know what they got "scared" of, but the Monroe Youth Action Committee hasn't run out, and some of its organizers have been shot at.

Some people uptown say that the MYAC is "trying to stir up trouble." And the fact of the matter is—this is true. They are trying to stir up trouble for the Klan, for Mr. Charlie, for Miss Ann—for all that have become rich and powerful and content by exploiting the Negro, by grinding him down, by beating and robbing and raping. The MYAC says these things can be set right, and naturally this means trouble, and is dangerous, for the rich and powerful and content white man. And it also means trouble, and is dangerous, for any Negro who has been able to benefit personally by helping Mr. Charlie do his dirty work.

So when some people heard that this Negro doctor said to the MYAC, "I don't know whether you want to help or not. You could be trying to stir up unwarranted trouble in the Negro community," they began to wonder which side this doctor was really on.

When people saw that this doctor told an uptown newspaper that his organization thought the Monroe Youth Action Committee was "dangerous" they began to think back a little:

When Roscoe Funderburk was shot in the back of his head and murdered by a white man, and the white murderer went free, this doctor and his organization didn't think that was dangerous enough to make statements in the paper.

When Tommy Funderburk was jailed for 20 years for supposedly beating up a white woman (even though the woman testified in court that Tommy didn't do anything but help defend her from someone else) this doctor and his organization didn't think that was dangerous enough to make a statement in the paper.

When Ben Poston was shot in the hip by a white man, and the the white went free this doctor and his organization didn't think that was dangerous enough to make a statement in the paper.

When Albert Rory was jailed for up to seven years for shooting a cop, even though another cop testified that Rory didn't have a gun, this doctor and his organization didn't think that was dangerous enough to make a statement in the paper.

When a Negro woman, sick with tuberculosis, with no income and two children to care for, tried to get Public Welfare and was refused (though a white woman with a car was given money to help with her car expenses), this doctor and his organization didn't think that was dangerous enough to make a statement about in the paper.

People are wondering why this Negro doctor took the lead in saying that ordinances outlawing segregation were "unreasonable." Maybe the doctor thinks there is something reasonable about segregation?

This doctor says he is concerned and working to the best of his ability. If he is telling the truth about being concerned, then the truth must also be that he has no ability.

NEGRO UNEMPLOYMENT:
It's Rough All Over

No sooner does a young man graduate from high school in Monroe then he is thinking of packing up for New York City to get a job. Not only do young people in Monroe look toward New York for jobs, Negroes all over the South do.

What chances does a Negro have of finding a job in New York? What is unemployment like for Negroes generally? Is it too much different in Monroe than elsewhere? Here are some of the answers:

How many in Monroe realize that the rate of unemployed Negroes in the U.S. is at least triple the rate of unemployed whites and probably more? The government is not very upset about this fact; and what's worse, the so-called Negro leaders don't seem to be either.

The job situation (or rather the no-job situation) in New York City is an important example. A recent survey showed New York to be 19th in wages among the 21 largest industrial cities in the U. S.

Statistics show that one out of every 10 workers in New York is out of a job, but there is good reason to believe that the truth is much worse than even this. When one visits the many unemployment offices in New York, it becomes quite obvious that the overwhelming majority of the unemployed are Negroes and Puerto Ricans, and the employment offices are filled to overcrowding with people who are desperate for work.

Harlem streets during the day are filled with idle men playing checkers, leaning against the buildings, and feeling dissatisfied. The State employment offices do not even bother to send the unemployed out to jobs any more-there are no jobs to send them out to. Many Negroes are willing to sign away paychecks in advance to buy jobs for outrageous prices at unemployment agencies.

In addition, we find that many high school students are forced to drop out of school because their families can't keep them there. Many of these people, and others who are high school graduates, never become unemployment statistics because they have never worked at all. Statistics are compiled about those who have lost their jobs, and never mention the people who have never had them.

There are now 77,000 unemployed men and women in New York City between the ages of 16 and 25. Of these, 60% are Negro and Puerto Rican, and it is estimated that this figure will double in the next two years. But the figures will never be able to measure the human suffering, deprivation and humiliation hanging like a cloud over the Negro community.

For most unemployed Negroes in New York, as in Monroe, there is little hope of finding a job at all-much less of finding one that pays enough to provide a decent living for a family.

It's all very well for the government to talk about how much money each working man should be making, but what has the government done about what workers are making-which is nothing at all for a large number of Negroes? It should be clear that the government is doing nothing; and that if it is interested in Negro problems at all, the only solution it offers is inviting a few to sit next to white bosses at lunch counters, or to use their rest rooms.

City	Negro Workers	Negro Unemployed	%
Chicago, Ill.	447,100	77,200	17.3
Cincinnati, Ohio	70,720	7,125	10.0
Cleveland, Ohio	80,000	16,000	20.0
Detroit, Mich.	285,000	112,850	39.0
Fort Wayne, Ind.	4,500	2,000	44.0
Gary, Ind.	20,000	8,000	40.0
Kansas City, Mo.	48,000	12,000	25.0
Louisville, Ky.	37,261	14,820	39.8
New York, N. Y.	817,780	80,000	10.0
Philadelphia Penn.	240,500	67,340	28.0
Pittsburgh, Penn.	55,000	13,600	24.0
SSt. Louis, Mo.	173,000	35,000	20.0
South Bend, Ind.	7,700	5,000	71.0
Washington, D. C.	232,000	19,000	8.0
Baltimore, Md.	225,000	23,000	10.0

This is not the answer, and leaving Monroe to look for jobs in the North (which don't exist) is not the answer, and waiting patiently in the shadow of City Hall is not the answer. Negroes must not wait for the government or the whites to do them favors, nor allow certain well-fixed Negro professional men to make deals with whites. What Negro workers must do is organize and do what must be done themselves. No one else will help Negro workers because workers' poverty makes bosses rich. This is the Negro workers' battle.

These are just some of the things Negroes must demand of the Government, and keep on damanding until they get what they need:

1. adequate unemployment payments, to be received by anyone who is out of a job-for as long as he is unable to find work.

2. surplus food with no strings attached, to be given to all who need it in Negro communities across the country

3. no taxes for workers earning less than $6,000 per year

4. rents to be cut to 5 per cent of the unemployment payments

5. installment payments should not have to be paid by unemployed workers who are buying their own homes.

To win these things Negroes must unite.

WHITE HOODS ATTACK MYAC ORGANIZERS' CAR· F B I, POLICE DO NOTHING

Two whites attacked and shot at a car carrying three organizers of the Monroe Youth Action Committee June 25. The Union County Sheriff's office and the Federal Bureau of Investigation refused to look into the incident.

Bob Apter, driver of the car said the shooting took place at night at a deserted stretch of road on highway 601, about 10 miles from Monroe.

Apter said the two whites sped past his car in a 1955 Ford and pulled off to the side of the road, near a clump of trees. As he drove by spot, Apter said one of the to whites shot at his car with a pistol. The bullet hit the back door of his car, Apter said, but did not hit anyone.

Union County Sheriff Shirley Griffin, immediately notified of the attack, said he would send and investigator out, Apter said. When two days passed without any action from the Sheriff, Apter said, he called the FBI office in Charlotte, collect.

FBI agents refused to accept his call, Apter said, referring him to the Sheriff's office.

"A staff reporter for the Associated Press who was checking on the shooting told me Sheriff Griffin had said two deputies had investigated the attack and didn't find anything," Apter said. "All I know is, I have a description of the car and I remember part of the license plate number, and they never came around to talk to me or anyone else at Freedom House," Apter said. "I don't want to call the Sheriff a liar, but I don't see how they could have made any kind of investigation without seeing us."

OUR 'PROTECTORS' — While local police and the FBI have done nothing to solve crimes committed against Monroe Negroes or the MYAC, these "law enforcers" have been busy harassing visitors to Newtown, and illegally insisting that all visitors be photographed. Here, the tables—and the cameras—were turned.

MYAC organizers were told by the Union County Clerk of Court that there had been a run on gun permits in early June, when MYAC demonstrations began. The Clerk refused to issue a gun permit to the MYAC organizers.

Domestic Workers. . .

aptitude test. But Miss Ann in the training office failed to call her in to work. She went to see her and found a government inspector was also visiting her prospective employer.

Miss Ann spoke very sweetly and told our friend that she'd be hired the next week (Allen Overall must do something to protect their government contract by pretending to hire Negro workers once in a while.) But the next week came, and the next, and Miss Ann still failed to call her. Recently an uptown paper reported that Allen Overall needed 30 employees. Women's League members are wondering why, if the company was so short of help, they failed to hire their friend?

Another company recently refused to hire a Negro high school graduate and took on an illiterate white woman instead.

We asked Mrs. Simpson: What is the UCWL going to do about the job problem for women in Monroe? "Many of us feel that the answer is to be found in the Union County Women's League," "Mrs. Simpson said "It's important that we all work together; not each woman on her own."

"Joining the Women's League means organized action; that is what is desperately needed." Women's League members agreed. "No worker, whether she is a domestic or not, can win by herself the higher wages and shorter hours that we all must have," one woman said. The main reason that this is true, the woman said, not only in Monroe but all over the country, is that the White bosses are organized.

"They have their Citizen's Councils, or the Bi-Racial Councils with which they try to fool us, and what's worse they have the government and its "Unemployment Security Commission." a League member explained.

A woman told us that she knows of deals that have been made between the Commission and white employers so any domestic worker who is given a job through the Commission will be paid $3 a day or even less! The Commission even hoodwinks some people into working for as little as $11 for a five-day week.

The point the League makes is that if the white bosses are organized, the women must organize in return. No other solution is possible because no other will work.

The woman who has been trying to get a job at Allen Overall had a few suggestions. The personnel manager at the company told her that she really shouldn't try to get a job there because people would "expect the impossible of her" since she would be the only Negro there. Her answer is that instead there should be many Negroes working there. This League member foresees two kinds of action to be taken. "I'd like to get lots of Negroes to pass their test, and then we would keep worrying them until they couldn't hold out."

This woman has written to the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunities in Washington, and she says that if the Committee gets nough complaints pressure may be brought to bear on Allen Overall.

In addition, she proposes that a committee from the League be formed to go to Governor Sanford and demand fair employment practices!

These are just some of the things League members have in mind. That is why they want more and more Negro women to join and take an active part.

Mrs. Simpson has some ideas about winning fair wages and working conditions for domestic workers. She plans large demonstrations as a futher course of action the Women's League will take. "Once we get a demonstration organized, make signs, and march from one end of town to the other, we'll make Mr. Charlie and Miss Ann know we mean what we say," Mrs. Simpson said. "Working for nothing is slavery!"

The immediate gain Mrs. Simpson expects from the work of the Women's League is wages in Monroe equal to that domestics get in other North Carolina cities. There are places where the pay is $6 or $7 a day, which the League admits is not so good, but is much better than the rate being paid in Monroe now.

One problem the League sees is that a lot of people would rather sit around and wish for higher wages and shorter hours than work for them."Many people are afraid to speak up, and afraid to stir up trouble," a member told us. "We don't want trouble-we've already got trouble. We just want our rights. The only thing is, that seems to trouble Miss Ann."

The League feels this is a time for all Negro women to realize that this trouble for Miss Ann needs to be stirred up; that they are deprived, robbed, and cheated by the white boss and his councils and commissions.

"We cannot tolerate this indignity any longer; we cannot let the white man decide how he will treat us," a member said. "We must face the fact that it is up to us to bring about the change, not to hope that he will treat us better. This power is in our hands."

Another League member summed it up: "We're not going to take what our parents took. They always said, 'The Lord will provide.' But we say, The Lord gave you good sense, now use it!"

AN OPEN LETTER ON THE JOB AHEAD

To the people of Monroe and Union county:

I am talking to two ladies now and from what I have heard it is clear that it is time for us to take part and work together so we can organize a strong group that no one can break—not even the Governor or all the big shots in the White House.

And I say: we the people who are supposed to rule the government—we should start controlling it so that we can get better jobs.

So I say to you my brothers and sisters, let's go all the way to get our Freedom and our civil rights.

I had a job at a saw mill, sometimes up to $70 a week. But I quit it because I knew that I had a better job lying before me.

I am writing this for you whom we haven't gotten in touch with yet. In the near future we hope to get in touch with you; that way our movement will grow.

It has been said that a great deal of people follow rich folks. Let me say this, my brothers and sisters: those men are out for themselves. They have nice homes and cars. But are they helping you? The answer is: "No!" Why follow someone who is out for himself? Help yourself!

Then there is the question: where do the jobs come from? But I know that if we press hard enough we will get jobs in factories, stores and other places.

But we can't get these jobs if we don't stick together. So I use an old slogan used by Abe Lincoln years ago: "together we stand, divided we fall."

I say to the sharecroppers and tenant farmers: you know your biggest problems and so do we. If we join together we can solve them. This is true also for domestic workers.

Let us all unite and fight for Freedom, Jobs and Justice.

Sincerely,
James Barrett

FREEDOM

605 Brown Street
Monroe, North Carolina

July 15, 1963

Dear friend,

Enclosed is the first issue of FREEDOM, which we are publishing in Monroe, North Carolina. To the best of our knowledge, this is the only publication of its kind in the South today.

FREEDOM was founded because of the need for an organ for the movement in Union county; a movement designed not merely to protest, but to create a better life for the Negro community through independent political action.

We are sending you this first issue for three reasons. First, we want you to know that Monroe still exists; we want you to know what is happening here. Second, we want to improve the paper, and we would like you to help us do this. If you can spare the time, we will appreciate receiving any comments and criticisms you care to make that will help improve the content and appearance of FREEDOM. Third, we need money to contimue publication, which we intend to do. If we sell a copy to every Negro family in Monroe (and we have done just about that in the last two days) we still do not make enough to pay the printing bill. Advertising makes up part of the deficit, but some still remains. Any help we can get in making up this deficit is a direct contribution to bettering the way of life for the Negro community in Monroe. We are asking you to help us in this effort.

We trust that we can count on your cooperation. We are looking for your contribution--in criticism and in cash.

Yours for freedom,

Dear Mr. Minnis:

You asked me over the telephone today for an interpretation of the registration provisions of G.S. 163-31 relating to the days that the registration books are required to be open for the registration of voters prior to an election. That section provides that the books shall be open on the fourth Saturday before a primary or election and close on the second Saturday before such election, and that the registrars shall attend the polling places for the purpose of registering voters on the fourth, third and second Saturdays, and on other days during the week during this period the registration books must be kept open by the registrars at their home or place of business. This does not include Sundays. This confirms the information I gave you over the telephone today.

Yours very truly,

Note:

This, of course, means that we will have thirteen (13) days for registration when the governor sets the date for the election on the school bond issue.

We have good reason to believe that this election will be called for some time in late November or early December.

Dear Wiley:

I appreciate your communication of December 21, and we are in North Carolina about to begin a very comprehensive voter registration campaign.

On Saturday,December 28th, I will be in conference with John M. Brooks,Director of the NAACP Voter Registration Committee and in January I will discuss the North Carolina project with John Morsell in New York.

The State Conference Voter Registration Committee will meet on December 28th to complete definite plans concerning the campaign and we will in January submit our plans in detail as requested.

I want to take this opportunity to express my sincere appreciation for the leadership you have given the civil rights struggle through the years. I am confident of the fact that the Voter Education Project will be a success under your leadership.

I would like for you to visit and speak in North Carolina when we get the campaign off of the ground.

It is my wish that you and yours had a most enjoyable holiday season and I do wish you a very Happy New Year.Regards to Mr. Blackwell.

Dear Kelly:

Your letter of December 17, comes as welcome news to us here at the Voter Education Project as we were beginning to wonder when NAACP would start some massive registration campaigns in North Carolina.

As a general rule, we do not enter into financial arrangements with local chapters or state conferences of NAACP but prefer to handle these matters through the national office. If the North Carolina program is going to be organized on a state level, with work going on in several different counties, with some general supervision under the direction of the state conference itself, then it would seem to me that we might possibly make an exception in this case and consider making a grant to the North Carolina Conference of Branches.

The Voter Education Project is not prepared to underwrite the entire cost of all voter registration programs and I am assuming that your state conference will put in some money (and possibly some from your branches) and that the national office will contribute to the cost of this project. I would suggest that you prepare your plans as quickly as possible together with a budget and then determine what assistance NAACP will provide (local, state and national) and then see what you will need from VEP. It might be well for you to discuss all of this with John Brooks before presenting any financial request to us. I am sure we would be influenced by the wishes of the NAACP national office as to the manner in which any financial support is given.

VEP does not have a Field Secretary who could be made available during your campaign but I am sure that our Field Director, Mr. Randolph T. Blackwell, will be pleased to work with you in any way that he can and could possibly arrange his schedule to spend a good bit of his time in North Carolina during the campaign.

In making your plans you should determine exactly when the registration office will be open in each of the counties where you propose to work so that campaigns can be conducted during times when you are certain that people can actually be registered. In submitting these plans to us it is important that you furnish the following information:

1) The counties where you propose to work and the dates of the campaign.

2) Information regarding the dates when registration is possible in each county.

3) Statistics pertaining to the present registration (both Negro and white) in each county and give some indication of the goal you expect to reach in each county, and

4) An overall budget in as much detail as possible including a breakdown by counties as much as possible.

Very truly yours,

Wiley A. Branton

Dear Mr. Branton:

This is to inform you that the North Carolina State Conference of Branches of the NAACP, will sponsor a vigorous state-wide Voter Registration Campaign beginning January 1, 1964.

The campaign is organized within the framework of more than ninety (90) branches throughout the state of North Carolina. We are having a Voter Registration Meeting in the city of Raleigh, North Carolina, on Saturday, December 28, 1963 to evaluate the campaign with our branch Voter Registration Committees throughout the state. Our goal is to secure 100,000 Negro voters during 1964.

I would appreciate information concerning the procedure that an NAACP State Conference is to utilize to secure financial assistance. I received a letter from Mrs. Eva M. Clayton of Warrenton, N. C., concerning working in the field of voter registration in Eastern North Carolina. I have written Mrs. Clayton concerning working with the NAACP in some capacity with the NAACP Voter Registration Campaign. I would also like to know if there is any possibility of financial assistance for such a position from the Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council.

Please inform me as to what extent a Field Secretary from your office, who is assigned to voter registration may be utilized during a campaign. I would appreciate an early reply to this communication.

I wish you and yours a very Merry Christman and a Happy New Year.

Yours truly,

Kelly

Gentlemen:

Thank you for your letter of February 24 describing your voter registration program in Chapel Hill. We wish to commend you for your interest and activity in trying to get the unregistered voters in your area qualified to vote.

I regret to inform you that we do not maintain a supply of materials relating to voter registration and education as we are, primarily, a research organization engaged in making a study of voter registration problems; but we do contribute funds to various organizations with which they may pay for materials, salaries, transportation, etc., relating to a non-partisan registration program.

The American Heritage Foundation (11 W. 42nd St., N.Y.) maintains a number of materials which are quite suitable for voter registration activity, and you might write them for a description of their materials together with a price list.

Our Field Director, Mr. Randolph T. Blackwell, has been doing a great bit of field work in North Carolina and I am asking him to get in touch with you at an early date when he is near Chapel Hill in the hope that we Southern Regional Council, Inc.

Dear Sirs:

The Chapel Hill Voter Registration Committee read with considerable interest the Council's news release dated February 12, concerning the progress of your Voter Enrollment Project. The Committee feels that because of the similarity of goals between our respective enrollment projects, you would be interested in the following report.

The Chapel Hill Voter Registration Committee was conceived in mid-December, 1963, out of a pressing need to make Chapel Hill's Negro citizens more active politically. With a small group of energetic, hard-working Negro and white volunteers, the Committee conducted a house-to-house survey and registration drive throughout the Negro communities in the township during the latest registration period. The results of both the canvass and the enrollment drive were, we feel, most gratifying. Of some 1,430 Negro adults contacted twenty-one and older, some 717 were found to be registered. The registration campaign added 122 more new names to the voting lists.

note for Voter Education

The frequency of such comments as "Idon't know what I'm voting for," or "What good is my vote anyway?" has prompted the Committee to organize itself into a permanent registration and education body. We have since divided the township into small units, each of which has a block captain. These block workers are now distributing regularly issued newsletters of objective abstracts of issues and platforms. We believe that these informative abstracts will induce previously inactive citizens to consider becoming a part of the electorate.

Since its inception, the Committee has grown to include over 80 people. Several faculty members from the University of North Carolina, some precinct registrars, ministers, and government and civic leaders have begun to contribute their talents in an effort to make the Committee as effective as possible in its work. Nevertheless, most of us involved in this type of work are rather inexperienced. Consequently, the Chapel Hill Voter Registration Committee would be most appreciative of any materials which the Southern Regional Council might have concerning voter registration and education.

The Committee itself is independent; its personnel and financial basis is local in nature. Accordingly, the Committee has, on occasion, found itself hard-pressed from the monetary standpoint. Although a recent and successful solicitation has temporarily brightened the financial outlook of the Committee, we should also like to inquire about the stipends mentioned in your February 12 newsstory.

The Chapel Hill Voter Registration Committee would be most grateful for any information from you.

Cordially yours,

W. E. Mason III

New Registrations Bolster Negro Vote

By OLIVER WILLIAMS

Civil rights organizations in the State are counting on a considerably larger bloc of Negro votes than existed in previous election years to play an important role in the outcome of top races in Saturday's Democratic Primary.

The Negro bloc has been bolstered in recent months by an intensive registration campaign. The drive has been successful both in rural eastern counties and in large cities in the rest of the State.

As a result, as many as 30,000 to 40,000 Negroes who were ineligible to vote in 1960 have become potential voters this year, according to Kelly Alexander, State president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

125,000 Votes

Negro leaders are confidently predicting that 125,000 Negroes will vote. Some believe the Negro vote could reach 150,000.

It was estimated that 90,000 voted in 1960 when Terry Sanford defeated I. Beverly Lake. Negro leaders claimed the minority vote payed a decisive role in the outcome of that election.

Alexander said the potential new voters added across the State in a campaign spearheaded by the NAACP have been thoroughly schooled in voting procedures.

"We have not stressed registering but registering to vote," he said.

Other Negro leaders were more specific in stating the objective of the registration drive. The effort is meaningless until results are shown next Saturday, one said.

In 1960, 210,450 Negroes were registered in the State. In the 1964 registration campaign, directed at urban areas and the large concentration of unregistered Negroes in the northeast, civil rights groups say an additional 40,000 may have qualified.

First Months

The Rev. Charles W. Ward of Raleigh, chairman of the statewide drive, said upwards of 20,000 Negroes registered during the first months of the campaign. These mostly were in cities and counties where registration books are open the year round, he said.

This number, they say, was matched during May when an intense effort was made in the eastern counties. Registration in most eastern counties was confined to the first three Saturdays of the month.

Throughout the east, registrars reported the heaviest registration of both whites and Negroes in many years. In a number of northeastern counties, it was the heaviest ever remembered, except during a complete purge of books requiring all voters to register again.

In Halifax County, where registrars were under a court order to speed up registration and keep books open daily during the final week of the registration period, Negroes were able to more than double the number of qualified Negro voters that had existed on books during preceding years. Halifax, where there has not been a complete new registration for years, had registered only 1,622 Negroes, or slightly less than 14 per cent of potential nonwhite voters.

During the three-week period, 2,022 Negroes were added, raising nonwhite registration to 3,644. Some 15,469 whites are registered, in spite of the fact that Negro population exceeds white in the county.

Negroes were able to actually exceed the white registration in two precincts of the county and bolster nonwhite registration to near whites in several others. The concentration of new Negro registrations in some precincts has made it appear likely that a Negro will be elected to the Halifax County board of education. Voting for board seats is on a district basis. But because of the large white registration that exists over the county, officials there say it is unlikely that a Negro will be elected to an office where voting is countywide, although 11 Negroes are seeking offices.

REV. C. W. WARD
. . . more registering

In Halifax and nearby counties where Negro registration efforts were widely publicized, registrars reported a heavy turnout of whites also. In several counties, now white registration equalled or exceeded Negro registation.

In Halifax, 1,924 whites registered for the first time to nearly offset the 2,022 Negroes.

"Some people 60 and 70 years old who had never registered before came out this time," said elections board chairman Robert Shields.

In Warren County, where Negroes staged a campaign similar to the one in Halifax, 750 qualified to vote. Some 600 white registered for the first time also.

Exceed Whites

New Negro registration exceeded white in Hertford and Bertie counties, where 937 Negroes registered. Whites registering in the two counties totaled 631. In Lenoir County, 1,227 whites registered, compared with 547 Negroes, and in Greene County only 80 of some 250 new registrats were Negro.

An exception to whites offsetting heavy Negro registration occurred in Northampton County. There 1,032 Negroes registered for the first time, while only 80 whites were added.

Negroes in Northampton actually compose a third of the county's potential voters in spite of the fact that the percentage of the white potential registered in 1960 was 108 per cent. This occurred because books have not been purged of dead persons and those that have moved from the county.

The heaviest concentration of Negro registration occurred in nine counties of the Second Congressional Districts. Negroes concentrated on this district because of the large number of non-registered Negroes there.

KELLY ALEXANDER
. . . more voting

In five counties where new registration has been compiled by county elections boards, 4,431 Negroes registered for the first time. In the same counties, (Greene, Halifax, Lenoir, Northampton and Warren), 4,099 whites registered.

New Registration

These figures exclude Vance County where there was a complete new registration. In that county, 7,419 whites registered and 2,081 nonwhites.

New registration was not available in other counties of the district.

Negro leaders at the voter registration headquartrs in Raleigh have compiled figures for other areas of the State showing heavy registration in urban areas. Among them are 6,000 Negroes who have registered in the Greensboro area since the drive began in January, 2,500 in the New Bern area and 2,500 during a new registration at Rocky Mount.

Figures released by the Wake County Board of Elections shows 2,874 Negroes added to registration books since January 1. Total Wake registration now includes 57,625 whites and 11,226 Negroes.

New registration in Durham included about 985 in predominantly Negro wards in a 4,300 new registration for the entire city.

Heavy Negro registration and voter activities are being viewed as a drive that could increase considerably the total vote cast in the Primary and General Election. Elections officials, particularly in the northeastern counties, are anticipating a heavy vote not only by Negroes but by whites as well.

Note Offset

In fact, most feel that the increase in the Negro vote will be offset by an increase in the number of whites who normally cast ballots.

Heavy voting could be stimulated more by races for local offices than those for statewide posts. Negroes have filed for offices in at least five northeast counties.

In addition to county posts, Negroes are running for seats in the State Legislature in Warren, Vance, and Halifax counties. A Negro is seeking a State Senate seat in he Eighth District which includes Warren and Halifax.

Atlanta 3, Georgia

Dear Mrs. Moore:

Your letter received this morning advising that you would like to have an official list of registered voters in North Carolina, by race and by county, and if unavailable, an estimate of the total number of voters in the state.

The estimated total registration in this state is approximately two million, ~~two~~ hundred thousand, which is the only figure we are in position to furnish at this time.

Yours very truly,

R. C. Maxwell

SECOND: (a) Plaintiffs show further that this is a proceeding for a Declaratory Judgment and injunction under Title 28, United Code, Section 2201 for the purpose of determining a question in actual controversy between the parties to wit: WHETHER THE PRACTICE OF THE DEFENDANTS IN DENYING PLAINTIFFS AND OTHER NEGROES SIMILARLY SITUATED, ON ACCOUNT OF THEIR RACE AND COLOR, THE RIGHT TO REGISTER IN WILLIAMSBURG COUNTY, CONSTITUTES A DENIAL OF THE RIGHTS OF THE PLAINTIFFS AND OTHER NEGROES SIMILARLY SITUATED THE EQUAL PROTECTION UNDER THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT AND FIFTEENTH AMENDMENT TO THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION?

(b) Plaintiffs further show that this is a proceeding for a Declaratory Judgment under Title 28, United States Code Section 2201 and Section 2202 and Rule 57 of the Rules of Civil Procedure of the District Court of the United States and for the purposes of determining a question of actual Controversy by and between the parties to wit: WHETHER THE PRACTICE OF THE DEFENDANTS IN DENYING PLAINTIFFS, AND OTHER NEGROES SIMILARLY SITUATED, ON ACCOUNT OF THEIR RACE AND COLOR, THE RIGHT TO REGISTER IN WILLIAMSBURG COUNTY, CONSTITUTES A DENIAL OF THE RIGHTS OF THE PLAINTIFFS AND OTHER NEGROES SIMILARLY SITUATED; THE EQUAL PROTECTION AND DUE PROCESS UNDER THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT OF THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION, AND THE LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES?

THIRD: The jurisdiction of this Court is also invoked under Title 28, United States Code, Section 1343, this being a suit in equity authorized to be brought for the deprivation under color of law, statute, regulation, custom usage of the States rights, privileges and immunities secured by the Constitution of the United States via Section 1981 and Section 1983 of Title 42 of the United States Code and the Fifteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for the right of suffrage for all citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside and prohibits the denial of these rights on account of race, color or previous condition or servitude.

W & C. 2

FOURTH: All parties to this action are residents and citizens domiciled of Kingstree, Williamsburg County, State of South Carolina and the United States.

FIFTH: This is a class action authorized pursuant to Rule 23 (a) of the Rule of Civil Procedure, District Court of the United States. The rights herein involved are of common and general interest to the member of the class represented by the Plaintiffs, namely Negro Citizens, who are residents of Williamsburg County, State of South Carolina and the United States, who have been denied the right to register in Williamsburg County, in the same manner as white persons of Williamsburg County. These members of the class are so numerous as to make it impractical to bring them all before the Court and for this reason, the Plaintiffs prosecutes this action in and on behalf of the class which they represent without specifically making the said members thereof, individual Plaintiffs.

SIXTH: The Plaintiffs, John H. Wilson, Alma Mae Wilson, Rosa Wilson, Mable Rich and Lila P. Nelson, all citizens of the State of South Carolina, and of the United States are residents domiciled in the City of Kingstree and County of Williamsburg and State of South Carolina. They are now over the age of twenty-one (21) and are tax payers of the City of Kingstree and County of Williamsburg, State of South Carolina, and of the United States.

SEVENTH: The Defendants, Fannie D. Sullivan, Albert Ard and Ruth McClary are the duly appointed members of the Registration Board of the County of Williamsburg, State of South Carolina, and are charged with supervising, maintaining and registering individuals who present themselves to the Board of Registrars and who meet the qualifications set out in the 1962 Code of Laws of South Carolina, under Title 23 Chapter 2, Section 23-68, of the 1962 Code of Laws of South Carolina.

W.R.C. -3

EIGHTH: That the Defendants are appointed, qualified members of the Board of Registration for Williamsburg County, and as such, the instrumentality of the State of South Carolina and Williamsburg County, with authority to maintain, supervise, control and operate the Voter Registration Board of Williamsburg County, under authority vested in them, pursuant to Title 23 Chapter 2, Section 23-51 through 23-55 of the 1962 Code of Laws of South Carolina.

NINTH: All of the Defendants are being sued in their individual, official and representative capacities as such.

TENTH: That on June 3, 1963, or on some date prior thereto, the Plaintiffs herein named presented themselves to the Registration Board to secure a Registration Certificate, but they were denied the privilege to register, solely because of their race and color, while at the same time White persons were permitted to register without any difficulties whatsoever; that on the same date, approximately 209 Negroes presented themselves to the Registration Board to register, and from the time the board opened for business at 9:00 a.m., or sometimes shortly thereafter only 12 or 14 Negroes were permitted to register from 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. that, heretofore, to wit: the Plaintiffs herein, all members of the Negro race, made applications to become qualified voters, but the said applications were denied by the Board of Registrars without giving the reason therefore and without writing a concise statement on the back of the application forms as required by Title 23 Chapter 2 Section 23-69 (4) of the 1962 Code of Laws of South Carolina in that said Section requires that a concise statement be written on the application to show the reason why the applicants applications were rejected by the Board of Registrars.

ELEVENTH: That over a period of years, several conferences with the Board of Registration were sought by the local Negroes of Williamsburg County, but the said Board refused to meet and discuss the voting problems with the local Negroes of said area. Although the Plaintiff and others have attempted to converse with the officials of Williamsburg County in regards to registration, and, more particularly, the Board of Voter Registration, such efforts have been unavailing.

W&C. 4

TWELFTH: That on July 1, 1963, again approximately 200 Negroes presented themselves to the Registration Board of said County and 96 were permitted to process application for registration and only 65 were qualified according to the Board of Registration of Williamsburg County. That this was the first time in many years that as many as 65 Negroes were permitted to register at a given time. During the month of July 1963, the Registration Board of Williamsburg County was requested under the law and by the authority vested in them under, Title 23 Chapter 2, Section 23-65.1, of the 1962 Code of Laws of South Carolina; to grant additional days to the Negroes of Williamsburg County to register. This was done, by, through and on behalf on the Williamsburg County Voters League, an organization now composed solely of Negroes, that neither the organization nor its representatives received any reply from the Board of Registration; that the Defendants have established and are maintaining a policy, custom and usage of denying qualified Negro applicants the equal protection of the laws by refusing to admit them to become qualified voters or electors of Williamsburg County, and that this being done solely because of race and color and have continued the policy of refusing to permit qualified Negro applicants to register to vote in Williamsburg County while at the same time admitting Whites with equal or less qualifications as Negro applicants, the right to register solely on account of race and color. That out of 13,000 White persons approximately 7,500 are registered voters and out of 27,000 Negro persons, approximately 500 are registered voters; it can be shown from the number of white persons registered in this County and the number of Negroes registered in this County, that the Board of Registration for this County has over a period of years systematically exclude, discriminated against and refuse to admit Negroes to register in Williamsburg County, solely on account of their race and color, which is violative of the Fourteenth And Fifteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution. That if the Board only allow 65 Negroes to register once per month on registration days, it would take approximately six (6) years including a general election year when the registration book is permitted to remain open several months; it would take six (6) years to register 7,500 Negroes, wherein 7,500 white persons have already been permitted to register in Williamsburg County by the Board of Registration in a much shorter period of time. It can be clearly shown from the acts of the Board in the pass on registering Negroes and Whites, that the procedure used by the Board is highly discriminatory, unjust, unfair, undemocratic and highly prejudicial against Negroes; All in violation of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution. Plaintiffs herein are informed and believe that the Board of Registration does not require White persons to submit themselves to any testing whatsoever, and, if they do, it is not the same test administered to Negro applicants. Plaintiffs further believes that White persons do not have to come to the Registration Board and stand in line to register in the same manner as Negro Applicants must do in order to obtain a registration certificate; that these discriminatory practices on the part of the Board of Registration is in violation of Equal Protection and Due Process of Law guaranteed by the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution.

W+C.

Plaintiffs and those similarly situated, on whose behalf this suit is brought, are suffering irreparable injuries and are threatened with irreparable injuries in the future, by reason of the acts herein complained of, and will continue to suffer if this Honorable Court does not grant the relief prayed for, they have no plain, adequate or complete remedy other than this suit for an injunction and Declaratory Judgment. Any other remedy to the Plaintiffs and those similarly situated, if could be granted, remitted would be attended by such uncertainties and delays as to deny substantial relief and would involve a multiplicity of suits, vexations and inconveniences not only to the Plaintiffs and other similarly situated but to Defendants and governmental agencies.

WHEREFORE, PLAINTIFFS PRAY:

FIRST: THAT PROPER PROCESS ISSUE AND THAT THIS CAUSE BE ADVANCED UPON THE DOCKET.

SECOND: THAT THE COURT ADJUDGE, DECREE AND DECLARE THE RIGHTS AND LEGAL RELATIONS OF THE PARTIES TO THE SUBJECT MATTER HEREIN CONTROVERSY IN ORDER THAT SUCH DECLARATION SHALL HAVE THE FORCE AND EFFECT OF A FINAL ORDER OR DECREE.

N.F.C. -F

THIRD: THAT THE COURT ENTER A JUDGMENT AND DECLARE THAT THE POLICY, CUSTOM, USAGE AND PRACTICE OF THE DEFENDANTS IN REFUSING TO PERMIT NEGROES TO REGISTER, WHILE PERMITTING WHITE PERSONS TO DO SO WITHOUT QUESTION, SOLELY ON ACCOUNT OF RACE AND COLOR, IS IN CONTRAVENTION OF THE FOURTEENTH AND FIFTEENTH AMENDEMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES.

FOURTH: THAT THIS COURT ISSUE A PERMANENT INJUNCTION FOREVER RESTRAINING THE DEFENDANTS AND EACH OF THEM OF THEIR SUCCESSORS IN OFFICE FROM DENYING TO THE PLAINTIFFS AND OTHER NEGROES SIMILARLY SITUATED IN WILLIAMSBURG COUNTY, THE RIGHT TO REGISTER, SOLELY BECAUSE OF THEIR RACE AND COLOR.

FIFTH: PLAINTIFFS PRAY THAT THIS HONORABLE COURT APPOINT A FEDERAL REGISTRAR THAT WOULD SEE TO IT THAT QUALIFIED NEGRO APPLICANTS ARE PERMITTED TO REGISTER IN THE SAME MANNER AS ANY OTHER RACIAL GROUP OR NATIONALITY IN WILLIAMSBURG COUNTY.

SIXTH: PLAINTIFFS PRAY THAT THEY MAY HAVE COSTS AND ATTORNEYS FEE FOR BRINGING THIS CAUSE OF ACTION.

SEVENTH: PLAINTIFFS PRAY THAT ALL OF THE INDIVIDUAL APPLICANTS, MEMBERS OF THE NEGRO RACE WHO WERE DENIED THE RIGHT TO REGISTER SOLELY ON THE BASIS OF THEIR RACE AND COLOR AND THAT THERE WERE NO CONCISE STATEMENT, WRITTEN ON THE APPLICATIONS TO SHOW OR TO INDICATE THE REASON WHY THEIR APPLICATIONS WERE REJECTED, AND THEREFORE, THIS HONORABLE COURT SHOULD ADJUDGE AND DECLARE THESE INDIVIDUALS TO BE LEGAL AND QUALIFIED ELECTORS AND VOTERS OF THE COUNTY OF WILLIAMSBURG, BASED ON THE FAILURE OF THE BOARD OF REGISTRARS TO COMPLY WITH TITLE 23, CHAPTER 2, SECTION 23-69 (4) OF THE 1962 CODE OF LAWS OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

Dear Mr. Minnis:

On Saturday, December 1, I talked with some of the persons that gave me information on voting identity. These persons said they were simply told that it was known how they voted. They were not threatened with loss of jobs, but to know that a public employee, particularly your superior, knew how you voted was shocking enough.

I have not talked with any persons from Lee County who have been personally involved with the invisible ink business. Those contacted made comments the same as the other persons. They did not know how individuals could tell them the candidates they voted for.

If I find out how the ink was used I will be glad to let you know. We may have to wait until the court hearing.

Yours truly,

GREENVILLE NON-PARTISAN VOTERS REGISTRATION COMMITTEE
125½ Falls Street
Greenville, South Carolina

Dear

The Greenville Non-Partisan Voters Registration Committee is working diligently to set up a system whereby non-registered Negro citizens of the City of Greenville and Greenville County are to become oriented in the ways of registration and voting. A concentrated effort is being put forth to get every Negro over 21 years of age, living in the Greenville area, registered and ready to vote in the November election.

It is the committee's aim to organize each ward and precinct; to have captains so oriented that they may teach registered persons how to vote and to the best of their ability inform the Registrant of the attributes and traits of candidates running for office.

There are two (2) things you can do to support the work of the committee:

1. Register and/or encourage others to register.
   Our next and only opportunity to register before the November election is October 1, 2, & 3, from 9:00 A.M. - 5:00 P.M. each day at the Court House.

2. GIVE $ $ $
   In order to operate any going concern money is needed, and since the GNPVRC has been organized by Negroes--this is a job that can best be done by Negroes. As one of the group your financial support is urgently needed.
   All contributions will be handled in the following manner:
   The committee will deposit all money received in the S. C. National Bank. An accounting system has been instituted and disbursements are made at the discretion of the committee by check with the signatures of the Vice-Chairman and Treasurer affixed. An accounting statement of monies received and disbursed will be issued periodically to persons making a contribution of five dollars or more.

Attached is a blank for you to fill in the name - address - and telephone number of each person from your organization making a contribution. Please make contact with your group members at once and return the names of the contributors along with their contributions no later than October 1, 1962, in order that we may not lag behind in our work.

Please have all checks made to the GREENVILLE NON-PARTISAN VOTERS REGISTRATION COMMITTEE and mail to - Attorney Willie T. Smith, Jr.

HOW TO BECOME A R'GISTERED VOTER...

It is very easy to become a registered voter. You may register any 1st Monday, Tuesday or Wednesday of any month during regular office hours in the basement of the Orangeburg County Courthouse. The registration books are closed, however, 30 days prior to any election but are open for a full week immediately prior to such closing. The phone number of the County Board of Registrars is JEfferson 4-7040 which number may be called on appropriate days for any information concerning voter registration.

Won't you take a few minutes of your time to improve your status and that of your children by taking an active part in the daily operations of your government?

Dear Fellow-Citizen:

This is your invitation to be present for a mammoth Political Action Meeting of Negroes residing in the second Congressional district. (Aiken, Bamberg, Barnwell, Calhoun, Lexington, Orangeburg, Richland and Sumter Counties.)

The Meeting time is Saturday, May 25 at 10:30 A. M. O'clock. The place is St. Paul Baptist Church in Lexington. Rev. Paul Drummond is the Pastor. The Church is located on U. S. Highways # 1 & #378.

You are one of the outstanding leaders in your County. The Negro race, therefore, will prosper and progress if you measure up to your civic responsibility in this great era of social change. While Sit-In students, Freedom Riders, and Freedom walkers are blazing new trails of freedom the least we can do is to attend to every day citizenship chores such as attending meetings, knocking on doors and paying dues for others to carry the fight into places where we cannot.

The Main purpose of the Meeting is to organize the Centennial Voter Registration drive on the Congressional District level, and on the County and Precinct level where this has not been done. We wish to do our part in putting 1000 new registered voters on the books for each year since the issuance of the Emancipation Proclamation.

You are one of the hundred leaders being invited to this meeting from your County. We need you, your people need you, your precinct, county, State and Federal government need you. When your name is called in Lexington, please answer present. If you cannot attend, please drop us a line and tell us that you will support the registration drive.

Laws, Morals and Business in South Carolina

By JAMES RESTON

COLUMBIA, S. C., Oct. 16—The tragedy of the integration struggle at the University of Mississippi is that it has distorted and vilified the South. And nothing illustrates the point better than a drive down U.S. Highway No. 1 from the Potomac River to the Savannah River on the Georgia-South Carolina border.

Highway No. 1 runs through the three state capitals of Richmond, Va., Raleigh, N. C., and Columbia, S. C., and unlike Mississippi it is a symbol not of resistance to change but of the changing South.

This highway bypasses the lovely Capitol building of Virginia in Richmond, but flies over the heart of the city, like a roller coaster, feeding commerce into industries of the new industrial South. It carries on through the pines to Raleigh, N. C., in the heart of the new "industrial triangle," based on Duke University, North Carolina State University and the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. And it proceeds southward, through the dune country of South Carolina into the heart of the aristocratic South.

Yet, even in South Carolina, where no Negro attends a single public school or state university; where the taxpayers pay academically qualified Negroes to attend universities outside the state; where it is illegal to allow Negroes to work in the same department of a factory with whites; and where there are no laws to keep anybody in school at all—even here there seems to be general agreement that the sad events of Little Rock, Ark., and Oxford, Miss., could not happen in South Carolina.

And the reasons given for this are interesting. For South Carolina is not convinced that the integration of the races is bad morals or bad law, but there is an increasing feeling here that it is bad business.

For example, the Governor of South Carolina, Ernest F. Hollings, is not here in Columbia, S. C., weeping for Governor Ross Barnett of Mississippi. He is in Milan, Italy, this week talking over the Italian radio about the possibilities of trade between the state of South Carolina and the European Common Market.

Naturally, Governor Hollings was asked in Europe about Mississippi, since the University of South Carolina, back of the state Capitol here, is not integrated, and Clemson College in South Carolina has another James Meredith case pending. His reply was that South Carolina was not going to have another Little Rock, Ark., or Oxford, Miss.

with whites; and where there are no laws to keep anybody in school at all—even here there seems to be general agreement that the sad events of Little Rock, Ark., and Oxford, Miss., could not happen in South Carolina.

And the reasons given for this are interesting. For South Carolina is not convinced that the integration of the races is bad morals or bad law, but there is an increasing feeling here that it is bad business.

For example, the Governor of South Carolina, Ernest F. Hollings, is not here in Columbia, S. C., weeping for Governor Ross Barnett of Mississippi. He is in Milan, Italy, this week talking over the Italian radio about the possibilities of trade between the state of South Carolina and the European Common Market.

His reply was that South Carolina was not going to have another Little Rock, Ark., or Oxford, Miss.

Means and Ends

The leaders of this community seem to agree. They do not differ with the objectives of Governor Faubus of Arkansas and Barnett of Mississippi, who did not submit to the power of Washington until the Federal troops came into their communities, but they still insist that "it can't happen here."

They give a number of reasons for this. First of all, South Carolina has a sense of style. It identifies itself not wtih the mob but with the aristocracy. Second, its leaders are privately critical of Governor Barnett of Mississippi for creating a situation he could not control. But perhaps most important of all, South Carolina does not want to create an atmosphere of rebellion that would discourage the economic development of the state.

Governor Hollings's trip to Europe dramatizes the point. He is aware of the economic revolution taking place in the world. He wants to bring new industry here from the North and from elsewhere in the world.

Governor Terry Sanford of North Carolina is also conscious of the fact that the economic growth of his state depends on being part of the new commercial relations of the rest of the nation and the Atlantic community. Therefore, he, too, is sending a delegation to the Common Market countries of Europe and arguing that business will not come to the South if the South is in a turmoil of racial controversy.

In short, what the battle of Oxford, Miss., has done is to make the leaders of this part of the South realize not only the futility but the economic consequences of opposition to Federal law.

The South is still united in opposition to racial integration, but it is divided about defending segregation at the cost of economic prosperity.

For a time, large industries in the North were willing to put factories here in the South in the belief that this part of the country could "control labor" and maintain industrial peace. But increasingly Northern industrial leaders have been asking whether the South could guarantee that the schools would remain open and the racial question would not lead to chaos in the factories.

Also, industry wants to know whether it will be able to count on a dependable supply of skilled labor capable of operating the new automatic machinery of modern factories—and this in turn has forced the South to consider the problem of adequate education of the Negro.

The question in the South, therefore, is no longer whether it wants segregation but whether it can have both segregation and prosperity.

Confronted with this problem, at least some leaders here are beginning to reconsider their assumptions of the past. They may agree with Mississippi in legal terms, but in economic terms they are not so sure that they want to pay the price of total opposition.

SC suit appeals for vote referee

Sept 28, 63

KINGSTREE, S.C. —Five Williamsburg County residents have filed suit in federal court asking that county registration officials be permanently enjoined from discriminating against colored applicants.

Filed Sept. 9 in the U.S. District Court at Florence, S.C., the suit charges county registrars have systematically prevented non - whites from registering by using standards not applied to white people.

The plaintiffs asked the court to appoint a federal referee to oversee registration in the county and ordered placed on the voter list nearly 100 persons recently rejected without being given the required written reason.

BRINGING THE SUIT for for themselves and all other colored persons similarly situated in the county, were John H. Wilson, Alma M. Wilson, Rosa Wilson, Mable Rich, and Lila P. Nelson, all live in Kingstree.

The defendants, Fannie D. Sullivan, Albert Ard, and Ruth McClary are duly appointed members of the Registration Board of Williamsburg County, according to the brief filed for the plaintiffs.

The brief noted that of the county's 13,000 white residents, approximately 7,500 are registered. But only 500 of the 27,000 colored people can vote. It charged nonwhites have been deliberately denied their rights.

TO REGISTER, colored residents are required to meet standards and go through procedures not applied to white people, the brief charged. It said special versions of tests are given to colored and other tests times are not given to whites at all.

The brief said colored people are required to stand in line to receive a registration certificate when whites do not have to appear before the board to get them. It said the board has refused to discuss the problem with nonwhites.

When 200 persons appeared before the board to register July 1, the brief said only 65 were approved. This was the first time so many had been permitted to register, it contends.

"IT WOULD TAKE six years to register 7,500 colored people," at the rate of 65 per registration day, the brief charged, "wherein 7,500 white persons have already been permitted to regster in Williamsburg County.

Attorneys for the plaintiffs are John H. Wrighten, whose law office is in Charleston, S.C., and Frank E. Cain, located in Bennettsville, S.C. The joint Wrighten - Cain firm is headquartered in Kingstree.

HEAVY TURNOUT OF NEGRO VOTERS

Negro voters turned out to vote in large numbers at Columbia yesterday. Large numbers also turned out at Greenville and Orangeburg. Negroes in all three areas. were running for the state House of Representatives. (UPI Telephoto.)

Gettys, Coleman Headed For Runoff; Dorn Ahead

COLUMBIA (UPI) — Tom L. Gettys and George F. Coleman apparently won berths Tuesday night in a Democratic Primary runoff for congressman from the fifth district.

Gettys, a Rock Hill lawyer, and Coleman, a solicitor from Winnsboro, built up commanding leads over the man who had been regarded as the third contender — State Rep. J. B. (Bate) Harvey of Clover.

It appeared that the two would meet in the June 23 primary runoff to determine which would oppose Republican Robert L. Doster for the seat vacated by Robert W. Hemphill, now a federal judge.

Two veteran congressmen — Robert T. Ashmore of Greenville and William Jennings Bryan Dorn of Greenwood — each easily won new terms over opponents who had claimed they were too conservative. Neither will have a Republican opponent.

In the fifth district, with 137 of 276 precincts reported, Coleman held a slim lead with 5,359 votes to Gettys' 5,301. Harvey trailed badly with 2,796. Camden farmer Harold Hough, who campaigned against socialism and integration, was out of the running with 846.

In the third district, with 183 of 328 precincts reported, Dorn defeated Calhoun Falls Mayor T. M. Tucker 12,266 to 4,409.

In the fourth district, with 99 of 261 precincts reported, Ashmore soundly defeated textile worker Gordon Weathers of Fountain Inn, 18,519 to 3,334.

The fifth District runoff apparently will pit two veteran campaigners. Each showed pockets of substantial strength in the first primary count.

Coleman ran strong in Chester and Fairfield counties while Gettys was carrying Cherokee and York. Close races were shaping up between the two in most of the four other counties in the district.

Harvey, who had been counting on strong support from mill workers, was running a good second in his home county of York but faring poorly elsewhere.

In the fifth district race, Gettys had the advantage of having built up support in an earlier run. He lost to Hemphill in a 1956 race.

Gettys argued his experience as an aide to former Rep. James Richards in Washington would be valuable to the district.

Coleman also had politicked before in much of the district. He was elected solicitor in 1956 of a judicial circuit comprised of half the district's counties. Coleman voiced opposition to centralized government.

Harry, a veteran legislator, hoped to pick up strong support among the district's numerous mill workers. He identified himself with Sen. Olin D. Johnston, whom he once served as an aide. Harvey pledged to "fight for the working man."

Hough told voters he mortgaged his cattle to run for Congress and voiced opposition to socialism and integration. He often praised Alabama Gov. George Wallace and claimed South Carolina Gov. Donald Russell promoted integration.

In the third district, Tucker charged that Dorn was more of a Republican than a Democrat. Tucker pledged support for numerous proposed programs of the Johnson administration. Dorn campaigned against the civil rights bill and for public school prayers.

Ashmore did little campaigning for his Fourth District seat. Weathers accused him of being a do - nothing congressman who had accomplished little for working people.

Integration Has Been Slow But With Respect for Law

Atl. Const. 5-17-64

By S. L. LATIMER JR.
Special to Atlanta Journal-Constitution
The Columbia State

SOUTH CAROLINA

COLUMBIA, S.C., May 16—Ten years ago Sunday, May 17, 1954, the United States Supreme Court handed down its far-reaching decision that upset the long-established separate, but equal, facilities rule, and declared segregation in the public schools illegal.

One of the basic cases before the Court arose from District No. 1, Clarendon County, S.C. which has a predominately Negro population.

Today, a decade later, there are several suits pending, but only two public school systems in the state are integrated or scheduled to be. Last August Charleston was ordered on short notice to inaugurate token mixing at the start of the 1963-64 term starting a few weeks later, and to integrate the entire system by the beginning of the 1964-65 term. The board appealed but complied without incident to the decree. There have been no untoward incidents. Recently a plan submitted by the trustees to Federal Judge Robert Martin was approved, and this process will be used. Last month the Greenville school board submitted a plan to Judge Martin, which he accepted, thus avoiding a court hearing. Token integration will be effective starting Sept. 1.

On the college level, two of the state's institutions of higher learning have registered Negro students. The first admittance was at Clemson. The color line has also been broken at the University of South Carolina, where there are three at the seat in Columbia and one at the branch at Beaufort. At both Clemson and Carolina, law and order prevailed as the barrier was broken. Clemson had never before had a Negro enrollee; the university not since Reconstruction days.

South Carolina has fought integration of the schools with every legal weapon at its command but in no instance has there been defiance of the law.

That there will be more public school integration next fall, in addition to extending mixing at Charleston and Greenville, seems inevitable after the suits now on file are reviewed, since in the main the arguments used in these cases were recognized in the Charleston suit. But whatever be the order, no defiance is anticipated.

Appeal for Negroes Breaks Up Convention

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — The South Carolina Democratic Party convention adjourned abruptly Wednesday amid an appeal that Negroes get a more active vote in Party affairs.

John Bolt Culbertson of Greenville brought a hugh over the more than 600 delegates when he noted the state has 92,000 Negro voters and suggested they have a bigger voice in the Party.

The dozen or so Negro delegates applauded the former state legislator. There were catcalls from some of the white delegates.

When Mrs. Albert H. Holt a Pickens County delegate, took the floor to read a prepared statement with a similar view, the convention adjourned.

UNBORN? OR DEAD?

Is You Is Or, Is You Ain't?

By JOHN H. McCRAY
(World Associate City Editor)

"Is you is or, is you ain't a citizen? The way you're acting sure has me in doubt. Is you is or . . .".

The words are obviously a parody from an old tune made popular by Louis Jordan and his Tymphany Five years ago but, this story has nothing at all to do with dancing.

It's a good story. It's a story which, if understood, should cause a great many of our people to stop, check out themselves within their own conscious, and answer the question.

The story has to do with a civic meeting some years back in a lower-state South Carolina county. Some 300 persons in the small town sat in the church and heard the speaker say:

"Every colored person who can, and who isn't registered, is like the unborn or the dead. The unborn and the dead don't count. They just can't help themselves."

When he finished, six pretty young women came to the pulpit. Four collected into a quartet; one sat at the piano, the other lifted her muted trumpet.

"Is you is or is you ain't my baby? The way . . .", they began.

The audience chuckled. The tune was real popular just then.

The first chorus over, the group began their parody. It covered several verses. When they finally sat down, thunderous applause rocked the edifice. Then, for a full minute or so, there was absolute silence. Nobody so much as breathed hard. The message had sunk in.

"It don't matter to whom you give your ballot, but please go register because it means a lot . . . And when you do ole Bilbo'll get to love you, and grin for you with all the teeth he's bought. Is you is or is you ain't . . ." Bilbo, of course, was then U. S. Senator from Mississippi. The beat was good and the people were "sent."

The sextet, a contribution of a civics class in the local high school, sang on to say in song:

A registration certificate in a citizen's wallet or purse is like a loaded .44 pistol as protection against a selfish, inconsiderate politician. It's like re-writing, in person, all laws the citizen thinks unjust and wrong or objects. Present plans are for sharing some of the legislative delegations seats in the state General Assembly with colored.

Incidentally, South Carolina's last member of the House Representatives was out of Georgetown, back around the turn of the century.

BUT NOW YOU IS

There is a sister, similar story, around which is also an "I is" answer. That is, "I is a citizen." It locale was Columbia, capitol of South Carolina.

The U. S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals had just upheld U. S District Judge J. Waties Waring's outlawing of the White Primary in South Carolina.

The phone rang at an editor's desk. On the other end was a member of city council. He asked:

"Can you get a small committee three to five people—to come to Council tomorrow and ask that colored policemen be employed here?"

The editor: "What's the joke? We had 25 people on the first committee and seven on the second. You fellows turned us down flat both times."

Then, the Councilman: "That was before you people could vote. It's different now, and we want to start off right from the start."

Next day: Mayor and councilmen vie to see which should be listed as "first" for the record to vote for colored lawmen. Since, there've come firemen, memberships on most city commissions and presently, a desegregation campaign during which the Mayor himself has vowed to head the line of pickets and demonstrators should there be any store or business, in the end, still segregating.

This isn't the end of the total story. It has chapters a great many other places. But they say the same thing—"yes" when somebody asks: "Are you a registered voter?"

Are you among the unborn or among the dead—unregistered?

Is you is or is you ain't?

fair and wrong. It's like building a needed school house yourself, hiring and firing policeman, the garbage man; like putting tape over the mouths of the race and color flame spewers.

What happened later?

By request this sextet covered the county n a short while. After a bit folk were all humming the tune and unconsciously singing the words, "Is I is or is I ain't? . . .".

Today, Georgetown county, where the story took place, has the highest percentage of colored adults registered or any South Carolina county—about 55 percent.

Shortly after Gov. Donald S. Russell took office in January of 1963, Georgetown County Sheriff Carris Cribbs died unexpectedly. In such cases, the Governor, on recommendation of the county's legislative delegation, names an interim sheriff—who serves until an election fills the vacancy.

The legislative delegation favored one of two candidates colored voters didn"t want. Their leaders simply picked up the phone and talked long distance with the Governor, 126 miles away in Columbia. They got what they wanted just that quickly, plus this reported remark:

"I want you to know that I really appreciate the confidence you folk expressed in me down there. Let me know any time you think I can help you."

Georgetown county had answered "I is", of course. For the first time it got several colored Deputy Sheriffs, colored policemen and policewomen. Public officials began consulting with colored leaders before undertaking of rejects. Present

Assembly Faces 2 Problems: Integration and Republicans

Atl. Const. 5-3-64

SOUTH CAROLINA

By S. L. LATIMER JR.
The Columbia State
Special to Atlanta Journal-Constitution

COLUMBIA, May 2 — Though the 1964 General Assembly goes down in history as the first to put on the statute books, though mild be the break, a law recognizing integration in public facilities in South Carolina. It also was the first since Reconstruction to take obvious recognition of the Republican party as a factor in state politics.

When it was ruled last year that South Carolina could not operate its state parks on a segregated basis, they were closed, for by state law they could not be mixed. The question was whether to leave them closed or reopen them on a full or restricted basis, and the solution was one of the main issues of the session. Finally both houses passed versions which permitted reopening, but with certain phases of the former full operation, such as swimming and use of cabins, to be eliminated. It took a conference committee to work out the details. A local option plan was defeated but certain parks have special provisions as to use.

THE COURT ORDER did not say the state had to operate a system of integrated parks, but that if a park is operated its facilities must be open to both races. Or at least that is the interpretation put on the ruling.

Whether the new law will be tested in the courts remains to be seen. The court order was based on a complaint by the NAACP. An action several years ago was directed at one park, and it has been closed ever since. Even under the new plan it is not anticipated that it will be revived. The general order as to 26 parks was based on a later court case.

ON THE political front, the Republicans, who protested loudly certain restrictions as to an earlier deadline for nominations, even trying to get the governor to veto the act, could not explain why they waited almost a year to take issue, the bill having been introduced in 1963. Under the law as passed, any party (meaning the GOP) that does not nominate by primary must now name its candidates by the time entries close for a primary and this is the procedure followed this year. The GOP said this gave the Democrats an advantage: the latter retorted that for all too long the shoe has been on the other foot, with the Republicans able to wait until after the Democrats had had their primary to pick candidates.

However, the so-called loyalty oath requiring one taking part in a primary to support the nominee of that primary in the general election was repealed. For it, there was substituted a rule that no one who has participated in the affairs of another party can cross the line to vote in a primary. A voter must take an oath as to his status. There is no limitation to voting in the General election, even split tickets being permissible.

State Democrats Caught Off-Guard By Rights Issue

Session Ends In Disorder

By HUGH E. GIBSON
Roving Reporter

COLUMBIA — The monkey wrench of civil rights wrecked the smoothly functioning machinery of the State Democratic convention here yesterday and threw it into disorderly adjournment.

Tossing the racial issue into the well-oiled cogs was a small, blonde housewife, Mrs. Albert H. Holt, whose husband is an English instructor at Clemson.

She did it with an unscheduled motion to table a just-adopted resolution praising South Carolina's congressional delegation for its efforts to block passage of President Lyndon B. Johnson's civil rights bill.

White delegates surged to their feet on the crowded floor of Township Auditorium, shouting that the resolution already had been adopted and that Mrs. Holt's motion was out of order.

State Treasurer Jeff B. Bates, presiding as convention president, hurriedly ruled Mrs. Holt outo of order and went along with clamoring demands that the convention adjourn.

The 1964 Democratic Party convention ended with the slender Mrs. Holt still at the mid-aisle microphone and a Negro delegate, Charles Coles of Cheraw, towering behind her with one arm raised in a vain bid for recognition from the chair.

The collapse came shortly before 2:30 p.m., in the final moments of the convention. It followed almost on the heels of another civil rights protest raised by an upper state delegate.

Moments earlier, Greenville Attorney John B. Culbertson had stood at the same microphone to praise the loyalty of Negro democrats and to urge that they be given a greater voice in party leadership.

He, too, was gaveled down on a point of order raised in an uproar of shouts and cat-calls.

The two incidents wrecked the harmony that had prevailed from the time the convention opened at 11 a.m.

Previously, with not a whisper of dissent, the nearly 700 delegates had:

—Cheered a fighting keynote address by Gov. Donald S. Russell.

—Re-elected their national executive committeeman and committee woman.

—Elected a new state chairman and vice chairman.

—Picked delegates and alternates to attend this summer's National Democratic convention.

—Adopted a platform along with several other resolutions and rules changes.

Then Mrs. Holt, appeared suddenly at the middle-aisle microphone and began to read a typed statement attacking the civil rights resolution just adopted by a thundering voice vote.

She prefaced her statement by acknowledging that it was "a little unfair" for the Pickens delegation to supply all the notoriety—an allusion to the investigation into the affairs of Pickens native Bobby Baker. But, said Mrs. Holt, she was "morally committed" to express the "minority view" on the civil rights resolution.

"I believe that the complexion —literally—of this convention is indicative of a situation that we cannot condone and continue," she said in a thin, clear voice. (This was in obvious reference to the small number of Negro delegates present. It was estimated that no more than 50 Negroes were on hand, including spectators.)

"Where are the Negro delegates?" she demanded, charging South Carolina Democrats were "dragging their feet" and missing a chance to encourage "first class citizenship" for Negroes.

"Is it not time we recognize the Negro leadership in our state and party and encourage it to participate in party affairs?" she asked.

Only such a step could "patch up communication lines between ourselves and our Negro citizens," Mrs. Holt declared. She said it should have occurred 10 years ago.

As Mr. Bates gaveled the convention into a hasty adjournment, Negro delegates swarmed around Mrs. Holt to thank and congratulate her for her stand.

But to newsmen, who converged on her quickly, firing questions, Mrs. Holt insisted, "I'm not anybody important. I'm just one little delegate."

She identified herself as a "good, Kennedy Democrat" and a member of the S. C. Council on Human Relations. Mrs. Holt said she was a South Carolina native but was educated at the University of North Carolina.

Mr. Culbertson, who also labeled himself a "good, Kennedy Democrat," said he made his plea for a greater Negro share in Democratic affairs "because I just wanted to get it off my chest."

The Democratic Party cannot hope to win without the support of this state's 93,000 Negro voters and union labor, the Greenville lawyer argued. But he charged that Democratic leaders were reserving all the "plums" for white party members.

Mr. Culbertson had no kind words for the Republican Party on racial matters. He said South Carolina's Republican Party was the "lily-white party" and noted that no Negro delegates attended its state convention here last week.

Up to the point where Mr. Culbertson came to the microphone, the convention had been a model of party harmony. By acclamation, delegates had elected Columbia Attorney Yancey A. McLeod to succeed retiring State Chairman E. P. (Ted) Riley of Greenville.

Also elected by acclamation was Mrs. Taylor H. Stukes of Manning, who stepped into the vice chairman post vacated by the retirement of Mrs. Caroline McKissick Belser of Columbia.

State Sen. Edgar A. Brown of Barnwell had no opposition for another term as national executive committeeman nor did the incumbent national committee woman, Mrs. Anne Agnew of Columbia.

The convention unanimously adopted an updated version of its 1962 party platform and agreed that the legislature should look further into the question of requiring voter registration.

Adopted without question were several rule changes made necessary by recently-enacted laws bearing on elections.

South Carolina Democrats Adjourn After Racial Plea

Press Black Comm.

3/26/64, p. 6.

COLUMBIA, South Carolina —The South Carolina Democratic Party convention adjourned abruptly yesterday amid an appeal that Negroes be given a more active voice in party affairs.

John Bolt Culbertson of Greenville brought a hush over the more than 600 delegates when he noted the state had 92,000 Negro voters, and suggested that they have a bigger voice in the party.

The dozen or so Negro delegates applauded the former state legislator. There were catcalls from some of the white delegates.

When Mrs. Albert H. Holt, a Pickens County delegate, took the floor to read a prepared statement with a similar view, the convention adjourned. Culbertson and Mrs. Holt are white.

Earlier, in the keynote address, Governor Donald Russell told the convention he thought no Republican presidential nominee could match President Johnson "in experience, personal qualification and understanding of national and international problems."

Yancey McLeod, a Columbia lawyer, was unopposed in succeeding E. P. (Ted) Riley of Greenville as state chairman. Mrs. Taylor H. Stukes of Manning was unopposed in succeeding Mrs. Irvine Belser of Columbia as vice chairman. All other officers, headed by National Committeeman Edgar A. Brown of Barnwell and Mrs. Anne Agnew of Columbia, both unopposed, were re-elected.

Delegates — the state has 38 votes in the national convention— were chosen for the August convention in Atlantic City.

Eight of the 42 delegates have a half-vote, and the other 24 have full votes. No effort was made to instruct the delegates.

From: Jack Minnis

I talked to Senator ~~Legree~~ LEGARE in Charleston this morning. I explained to him that we were a research project, and that it was vital to our program that we obtain an accurate enumeration of persons registered by the projects we support. I told him that I had talked to Mrs. Townsend some time ago (she's the chief registrar), and she had spoken very highly of him and that, therefore, I wanted to ask him if he wouldn't try to persuade Mrs. Townsend to permit project personnel to get in out of the cold while they were enumerating registrants. He was friendly, congenial, concerned, and committed irrevocably to the propositon that all persons should be registered without fear or favor, he said. However, with deep regret, he informed me that it was county policy that no one but registrars and their employees could be permitted inside the registration office. He said a number of groups such as the League of Women Voters, the NAACP, and various political factions had wanted to place observers inside the office and, since there was not that much room in the registration office, the county had established the policy that no one could do so.

He said he was sure Mrs. Townsend would be happy to provide me with up-to-date figures on both Negro and white registration. I suggested to him that we would like to avoid placing upon Mrs. Townsend the burden of making frequent enumerations from her records. He assured me that was part of Mrs. Townsend's job, and that she would give me any reasonable information we wanted. I'm writing her today to get whatever she'll give me.

Primary to Draw Many New Voters

6-3-62 SC Suffrage

The Columbia State
Special to Atlanta Journal-Constitution

COLUMBIA, S.C., June 2 — When South Carolina's primary is held a week from Tuesday some 50,000 new voters will be entitled to participate.

Several factors enter into the strikingly large increase. First, of course, are the younger men and women who have become 21. Another is the registration of people coming to South Carolina from other states because of new industry. They have completed the two-year residency requirement.

BUT THE most potent reason for the upsurge is the number of Negroes who, though eligible, had not registered before. There has been a drive by leaders of their race to get them to qualify.

When all the deaths that have occurred are considered, and many removals to other states, especially the migration of Negroes, the increase of 50,000 is all the more revealing.

SOUTH CAROLINA

How many of the more than 800,000 persons who are on the rolls will vote is unpredictable. Generally there is a tremendous absenteeism.

If 425,000 go to the polls in the forthcoming election ten days hence the percentage, as interpreted by past performances, would be excellent. But if ever there was a year to induce citizens to exercise their right of suffrage, this is it, with races for all top offices as well as for hundreds of lesser ones.

THE REPUBLICANS at a well-attended reassembled state convention in Columbia voted to sanction participation by members of the party in the Democratic primary provided they voted only in the races where there will be no GOP contenders in November.

Under the state-law oath, which the Democrats had decreed must be administered, a voter swears to support the nominees of the primary. The Republicans point out that this relates to the races in which one votes.

On this view there is a difference of opinion. At the same sitting the GOP, after a tense floor fight, refused to say Democrats, if they chose to do so, couldn't run on the Republican ticket in the general election next fall.

Only two counties show fewer voters now than in 1960—Henry and Beaufort. The decrease in the former is not immediately explainable; in the latter the cause apparently is Negro departures. The largest enrollment is in Greenville County with 58,106, an increase of 4,072.

SOUTH CAROLINA'S all-purpose registration certificate is good for 10 years (or the remaining portion of the 10-year period).

It is good in all elections, primary or general, but must be issued at least 30 days prior to any given election to be used in that voting.

Negro Interest Runs High In Registering For Vote

Negro interest in voter registration reached such a peak here this week that a county policeman was assigned to keep down the congestion in the County Center office.

In the past four days, more than 200 Negroes have registered to vote in comparison to 151 white persons.

Mrs. John C. Townsend, chairman of the registration board, also noted, however, that "there has been a greater percentage of persons to apply this week who couldn't pass the registration test or did not have a tax receipt."

She said the Negro applicants are being brought to the office in large numbers. "We had 31 at one time from McClellanville," she said, "and approximately 10 of them could not read or write."

In order to become a qualified voter, a person must be able to read a selection from the state Constitution or produce a tax receipt from the previous year showing property evaluated at $300 or more. Other requirements are 21 years of age, residence in the state for two years, the county for one year, and the voting precinct for six months.

Two Negro youths, who said they were employes of the Registration Information Center at 41 Cannon St., were posted outside the county office to keep a tally of the Negroes who register.

Esau Jenkins, chairman of the Citizen's Committee and also head of the registration center, said the recent effort is definitely not backed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

He said he was merely interested in seeing that those who are not registered do so. He also said the drive is not necessarily aimed at the November general election.

"As long as we find people not registered we plan to keep it up," he added.

The county registration office will open today from 9 a. m. until 5 p. m. and Saturday from 9 a. m. until noon. It will also be open Monday through Wednesday from 9 a. m. until 5 p. m.

The Voter Statistics

South Carolina voter registration statistics supply clues to the political complexion of the state.

The most interesting piece of information is that voter registration has increased by 70,705 since the 1960 election. Registration today stands at 666,694, compared with 595,989 two years ago.

This increase in the number of registered voters signifies rising political interest in South Carolina. Only two counties — Horry and Chester — failed to gain new voters. In Charleston, the increase was from 43,419 to 48,786. Greenville moved from 54,084 to 60,000, making it the county with the largest number of voters. Spartanburg rose to 52,057 from 47,519. Richland County was another county with a large increase—from 43,802 to 50,734.

What lies behind the statistics? Who are the new voters? What are their views?

Part of the increase in the Lowcountry can be attributed to voter registration drives conducted by the NAACP. As soon as the Kennedy administration took office, Atty. Gen. Robert E. Kennedy determined that the best way to crack the South was to build up a bloc of herded voters. In Charleston County, busloads of Negroes have been brought into the city to be registered. Before the election, these voters will go to their churches to be told how to vote.

Increase in voter registration also reflects concern felt by conservative citizens. For two years, we have seen South Carolina automobiles with bumper stickers bearing the words: "Don't blame me; I voted GOP." Today, "Win With Workman" stickers can be seen in all parts of the state.

Election of Republicans Charles Boineau in Columbia and Fred Worsham in Charleston provided samplings of conservative voting strength in two major urban areas.

These and other urban areas in South Carolina are the home of strong local conservative movements. Suburbanites, generally conservative in their politics, are ready to join in organized political activity.

Charleston County, for example, is being organized almost on a block-to-block basis. Conservatives have organized committees to handle various phases of the Workman campaign. Many of these conservative groups around the state have taken a page from the Kennedy campaign handbook of 1960. They are prepared to work a political revolution in this state.

Towns and cities of South Carolina have received many new citizens in recent years — citizens who don't worry about party labels. To them the Workman candidacy spells good government and quality citizenship.

The News and Courier believes that much of the increase in voter registration can be attributed to new, active conservatives who mean to win with Workman this November.

Voter Registration Office Busy Right Up To Deadline

1A

Charleston County got an addition of 1,393 new voters during the last three days of registration this week.

Registration officials were busy steadily as 322 white persons registered Oct. 1 and 42 Negroes; 426 white persons and 57 Negroes registered Oct. 2; and 450 white persons and 96 Negroes qualified Oct. 3.

The officials also handled 649 changes of address, and an untotaled number of duplicate certificates were issued. It is estimated the county will have more than 50,000 voters when the figures are tallied.

Mrs. John C. Townsend, board chairman, expressed her gratitude to members of the League of Women Voters who helped out during the last three hectic days.

Books will be closed until after the Nov. 6 general election. The office will remain open, however, to those persons who need a duplicate certificate.

How They Fight Elections in South Carolina

By JAMES RESTON

COLUMBIA, S. C., Oct. 18—President Kennedy may not know it, but he's running for the Senate again—this time not in Massachusetts, but in South Carolina.

Since he sent the Federal troops into Mississippi, the President has become the villain of the "Never-never" land of the old Confederacy.

Here in this state, Senator Olin D. Johnston, the Democratic incumbent, is running for re-election against William Workman, a journalistic Goldwater Republican, and while Mr. Johnston has more shortcomings than most Senators, he is being attacked here not because he is a modern equivalent of Senator Claghorn but because he has supported President Kennedy.

"The need of the hour," said The News and Courier in Charleston, S. C., this week, "is to defeat Johnston, not simply because of his 'liberal' record, but because he is the man that the Kennedys want in the Senate."

The editor of The News and Courier is Thomas R. Waring, probably the most talented newspaperman in South Carolina, but his theme is that a vote for Johnston is "a vote of confidence in the Kennedys, including the policy in Mississippi," while a vote against Johnston is a vote against "the Kennedy Master State."

The Anti-Kennedy Mothers

Not since the days of violent personal opposition among conservatives to Franklin D. Roosevelt in the thirties has there been such feeling against a President and his family as exists here among many leaders of the Democratic party.

Most of the press is not as outspoken as Waring in Charleston, but what he said publicly one hears privately from others in the Democratic establishment.

When Senator Johnston arrived in Charleston this week, he was greeted by an advertisement paid for by the "Workman for Senate Committee." It said:

"We South Carolina homemakers and mothers are scared. The left turn our country is taking and the huge debt we're piling up for our children alarm us. . . .

"We're really scared when we think of Communist troops being only 90 miles from our country.

"Bill Workman's approach to government gives us hope. He talks about simple, old-fashioned things like thrift, honesty, courage, work, and morality. . . . Vote right—Vote Workman."

A visitor hears this theme wherever he goes and it has a lot of support. In fact, the political leaders of this state are obviously closer in spirit to the conservatives of the Republican party than to the national leadership of the Democratic party, and there is much to be said for Republican control of a state like this.

The political paradox of South Carolina, however, is that it wants to enjoy the power of the Democratic party without supporting it; it wants to support the objectives of Gov. Ross Barnett in Mississippi without suffering the consequences, and it would like to benefit from Federal contracts while opposing the cost of Federal programs or meeting Federal standards of equal employment for the Negroes.

The Primary Oath

Maybe this campaign against Kennedy through Senator Johnston will succeed, but even in this election there is an interesting paradox.

For in the Democratic primary election which took place before the Mississippi riots, the party leaders put in a political oath which obliged those who voted Democrat in the primary to support the party's nominee in the November election.

This oath was given in many precincts of the state but ignored in many others—and now the pro-Workman faction is wondering just how many voters will feel bound by the oath to vote for Johnston.

Probably quite a few will. Many of the leaders of the Democratic party here obviously feel no loyalty either to Johnston or Kennedy, but an oath probably means more to your average South Carolina voter than it means to voters elsewhere in the Union.

He is a traditionalist. He has voted Democratic for so long that voting for Workman on the Republican ticket will not be easy. Besides, the state is doing fairly well economically and while the Negro vote is not large, it is rising and it is almost all Democratic.

Thus, Johnston may still win, but either way it will not say much for the politics of South Carolina.

AMISH MARKET DAY

At sunrise
Triptolemos walks with them into vineyard; he gently nips vermilion, sour-honeyed, blistered fruits into baskets woven on November nights.
Then to the fields to harvest corn—
sun-chromed corn,
kernels lacquered with Maryland rain.

Under the parhelion and white-simmering sun,
Triptolemos rides with the men in the front of the buggy; behind them, bonneted women, shy and pink-faced,
cradle bread-wheels against black wool.

Dear John:

I like very much your idea of using cartoons to stimulate interest in voter registration and participation. I would strongly suggest that the cartoons be primarily humorous rather than moralistic. Some of the Mauldin and Herblock cartoons which referred to the Oxford, Mississippi affair are perfect cases in point. If you want to stimulate teachers, for example, I would suggest that you avoid any attempt to make them feel guilty. The record of success accumulated by history's moralistic movements is not, in my view, any recommendation for basing grass roots politics on a similar morality. I think a message is much more likely to be effective if it carries with it the balm of humor rather than the pain of guilt. I would very much like to see the cartoons you come up with.

I'm glad to know that your proposed registration drive is shaping up. I want to stay pretty close to it and for this purpose I wonder if you could send me a precinct map of Columbia and, if available, of Richland county. My very best regards and thanks so much for keeping me informed.

Very truly yours,

Dear Jack:

I've come up with an idea, the potential of which is self-explanatory, I thought to ask you to evaluate and advise me if it is both sound and possible.

It is this:

Prepare a booklet of cartoons aimed at Negroes in those states where programs of registration are underway. The cartoons would, respectively and individually, be aimed at sections of the ethnic group. For example, one might show a child saying to his teacher, "You are teaching me to live in our society. I understand that a vital step towards being prepared is to be registered and able to vote. Miss Teacher, are you registered?"

Similar questions would include ministers, shopkeepers, farmers - especially sharecroppers and tenant farmers, taxi drivers, etc.

These drawings, done in the simplest language, could be put in a booklet, printed on newsprint for economy reasons - if necessary - and distributed through church, fraternal, political action, social clubs and other organizations. Near the end the qualifications required in each state, the dates (general) and places of registration could be printed, in capsule form.

I venture that publication costs would be wormed out of the two major parties - from the national level. Too, other groups concerned with this subject might be able to defray some costs of the publication.

The idea sprung up on the weekend. We're laying groundwork for a massive initial registration drive in this (Richland) county first of the year. There are about 33,000 persons old enough to, but only 9,000 who vote. Our temporary slogan is "33 (Thousand) in '63". In other counties we are urging the number three's use to rhyme with '63. For example, in a small county it might 23 (hundred) in '63.

Our promised support - along lines we talked - is most heartening in Richland county.

Study Says No Negro Bloc Vote

By The Associated Press

A University of South Carolina professor says a study of Negro voting habits in the state shows they don't vote in blocs.

Prof. John B. McConaughy drew this conclusion from interviews with 530 Negroes in a study of voting in three presidential and two gubernatorial elections, 1948 through 1958.

He defines bloc voting as voting in which at least two-thirds of a group vote the same way.

The survey covered the urban areas of Darlington, Columbia, Spartanburg, Charleston and Greenville, and he concludes urban Negroes vote almost twice as heavily in the Palmetto State as in the rest of the nation.

The national average is 32 per cent of the registered Negroes voting. The South Carolina sampling showed 62 per cent voting.

Issues of importance to the Negroes interviewed, in order, were better jobs, better city services, lower taxes, integrated schools, and better housing.

The educated, better-income Negroes in the groups interviewed mostly said they feel inferior to whites, but some two thirds of all Negroes interviewed said only they feel equal to whites. Seven per cent—all in the poorly educated, low income group — said they feel superior to whites.

Bloc voting showed up in the 1948 election, in which the state Democratic party, and the state, went heavily for Strom Thurmond, then governor, as the States Rights Democratic candidate for president. In no other elections was any bloc voting shown, using the two-thirds rule.

[illegible] IN SOUTH CAROLINA [illegible]

[illegible] Frazier
Forum College
February, 196[illegible]

When Harvey Gantt registered at Clemson College in late January, South Carolina, the first state to secede, became the last to integrate. Escorted by a hundred highway patrolmen, Gantt, son of a Negro shipyard worker in Charleston, walked across soil once tilled by Calhoun's slaves to carry out a court order that he be admitted without delay. With the Governor determined to handle the situation "peaceably, according to our standards of justice and decency," as he promised a few days earlier at his Inauguration, there were no incidents.

Editorialists throughout the United States have lauded Governor Donald Russell's firm moderation, in contrast to Governor Barnett's bungling of the Meredith case in Mississippi last fall. The contrast is to some extent justified. Russell, a former Assistant Secretary of State under James F. Byrnes and university president, is infinitely more intelligent than doltish Ross Barnett. Unlike Barnett, moreover, Mr. Russell is not a racist demagogue. A self-made millionaire in automobile finance, Governor Russell's membership in South Carolina's ruling Bourbon clique is symbolized by his white-columned mansion in Spartanburg,---though the thousands of books that line his study do set him somewhat apart. As a Bourbon, feeling himself bound by the code of benevolent paternalism toward both buckrah and black, Governor Russell and his colleagues feared mob violence like that at Oxford last October. One Negro at Clemson would make little difference to the members of the Establishment. But if the Bourbons stood aside while the buckrah shed blood in the streets, their own position of leadership would crumble, as Federal troops returned to impose a new Reconstruction.

In spite of this tradition of responsible, moderate Bourbon rule, however, South Carolina has had more than her share of racist demagogues: "Pitchfork Ben" Tillman, "Coley" Blease, "Cotton Ed" Smith, and "Stand-On-Head" Thurmond. The radical racist politicians have never done very much for the white farmers and workers; except for the paranoid Mr. Blease, they have all eventually joined the Establishment. But the racism in South Carolina politics is nevertheless very real. No politician can afford to ignore it.

While Governor Russell's handling of the Gantt case does demonstrate his Bourbon paternalism, Russell is, after all, a politician, with the ambition and drive of a self-made man and a keen sense of changing political realities. In the past a Governor of South Carolina could have built a political career around the noble gesture of going to jail in fighting the Federal courts. Senator "Cotton Ed" Smith marched up the aisle and out of the 1936 Democratic Convention when a Negro minister rose to deliver the invocation. As Governor-elect Russell told me last December in an interview, in subsequent campaigns when "Cotton Ed" neglected to tell a crowd about "that man, as black as melted midnight," the crowds insisted and he willingly complied.

4- So. Car. - Reg. Data

In 1962, however, the three major state-wide elections made it clear that a new era was beginning in South Carolina politics. Bridging the chasm of the race issue, a neo-Populist alliance of white workingmen and Negroes swept all three elections, and emerged as the most powerful single force in South Carolina politics. In the June primary they renominated Senator Olin Johnston over aspiring young Governor Ernest Hollings. Then, in the face of the first serious opposition from a Republican since Reconstruction, the liberals returned Johnston to the Senate by a reduced but still potent 57% of the votes over Goldwaterite Bill Workman. Finally, the liberals elected Donald Russell over then Lieutenant-Governor Burnet Maybank, Jr., son of the late Senator.

All three losers in 1962 made the mistake of thinking they could win without liberal support. Because of Johnston's solidly pro-labor record in the Senate since 1944, Governor Hollings had no chance of assistance from labor. Although when he defeated Russell in the 1958 gubernatorial primary, Hollings sought and got Negro backing in his native Charleston, this time he did not. It proved a fatal mistake. Johnston contacted the state's Negro leaders and got their endorsement. The Negroes were angry over Johnston's action in delaying confirmation of Thurgood Marshall's federal judgeship, but the Senator's largely pro-Kennedy voting record---combined with Hollings' aloofness---led the Negroes to support him with vigor.

In an attempt to counter Johnston's strength on the left, Hollings, who is actually a middle-of-the-roader, tried to present himself as a staunch conservative. In nearly every campaign speech Hollings attacked the "labor goons" who backed Johnston. When his campaign slogan made him sound anti-Kennedy, ("Our senator should represent South Carolina in Washington, not Washington in South Carolina"), Hollings frantically stressed his "close cooperation" with the President on textile problems, and his personal friendship with the Attorney-General, but it was too late.

Hollings succeeded only in stirring labor leaders from South Carolina and neighboring states to campaign feverishly for Olin Johnston. Unwittingly, Hollings helped them by having mill-owners (many of whom he had persuaded to come to South Carolina) at his side when he visited plants.

(Johnston wisely waited at the gates.) Though South Carolina's workers are still largely non-union, when the labor leaders spoke of Johnston's support for a higher minimum wage and for medicare, the mill-workers listened.

Hollings' strategy proved to be founded on two false assumptions: first, that the Negroes and white workers were irredeemably lost; and, second, that Hollings could win by appealing to the right-wing middle-class without invoking the race issue. The primary returns tell the story. In industrial Anderson County, Johnston, himself a former mill-worker, won by a margin of 3 to 1. In a typical Negro precinct in Charleston, Johnston got 141 votes to 23 for Hollings. The statewide totals were: Johnston 210,918; Hollings 110,023. As one Hollings' supporter concluded, "There simply aren't enough right-wing voters in South Carolina to win a Democratic primary with their support alone."

After the June primary Johnston returned to Washington as Republican Bill Workman launched a heated attack on the Administration,---something Hollings had been unable (and perhaps unwilling) to do. There were three main issues in the Johnston-Workman fight. Cuban relations figured most prominently until the President's quarantine abruptly plucked it from the political arena, much to the chagrin of Workman's backers. Workman's second issue was a vague appeal to preserve "states' rights" against the Kennedys' "cold blooded, premeditated attempt to concentrate all power in Washington." "States' rights" is not a new issue in South Carolina; Strom Thurmond, in particular, has used it successfully. Thurmond, however, has never campaigned purely on the basis of "states' rights" doctrine, but has always incorporated it in a more emotional, racist appeal. Workman, author and political novice, did not raise the race issue except to denounce the "invasion of Oxford." Although the members of the Citizens' Councils were solidly behind Workman, the race issue was muffled in a discussion of ancient cliches of political theory made starkly irrelevant by the President's decisive action in the Oxford crisis. As his third major issue, Workman spoke out for a "two-party system" in South Carolina. This issue won him many middle-class amateurs, but lost the seasoned local politicians who fear Republican opposition for themselves,---a fear Johnston used to some advantage.

In the November general elections the white workingmen combined with the Negroes once again to return Olin Johnston to the Senate. For reasons of economic self-interest the white workers and Negroes should in any election vote for a supporter of the Welfare State. Among the whites, Johnston also used his position on the three most important patronage committees to some advantage, though gratitude for past patronage is never as significant as outsiders think; volunteers' enthusiasm and to a lesser degree the promise of future patronage is far more important. (Johnston is chairman of Post Office and Civil Service, and on Judiciary and Agriculture). The Negroes, on the other hand, who get extremely little patronage in any event, voted for Johnston in November because South Carolina Negroes----especially after Oxford---are extremely pro-Kennedy. Negro leader John H. McCray admitted after the election that at present he simply could not swing his state-wide organization behind any Republican, and continued: "We Negroes love the Kennedys and before it's over, history will show the Kennedys were greater friends to the Negroes of the nation than was our beloved President Roosevelt."

The extent of the Negroes' devotion to all Democrats, including Johnston, was revealed on November 6. In Columbia's bellwether Negro Ward 9, Workman got only 74 votes to Johnston's 1,093. Republican candidates for the legislature from Richland County (Columbia) did no better; in Ward 9 they received from 62 to 80 votes each, compared with from 985 to 1,015 for each Democrat, and the Democratic slate won easily. Even in the Congressional race in the Second District, where Nixon-backer and arch-conservative Albert D. Watson opposed the equally conservative, anti-Communist crusader Floyd D. Spence, the Negroes gave Democrat Watson a thousand-vote margin over Republican Spence, thereby sending Watson to Washington.

Of greatest significance in the desegregation process, however, was the gubernatorial contest in the June primary between Donald Russell and young Burnet Maybank. Like Johnston, Russell had extensive backing from labor and Negroes. Early in the primary campaign the state's labor leaders invited both Maybank and Russell to meet with them. Maybank replied indignantly that his father never needed labor support to win, and neither did he. Russell, who had done poorly in the mill-towns in his 1958 defeat, went to the meeting. His margin of victory in June was about the same as Johnston's: 2 to 1. Russell had no Republican opposition in November.

Out of a total vote of about 325,000 in South Carolina in 1962, it has been estimated that labor can control about 80,000 and the Negroes from 40,000 to 60,000. Since Negroes in South Carolina are allowed to register freely in most areas, Negro leader McCray hopes to triple the current registration total of 96,000 Negroes by the end of 1963. Even at 1962 levels, however, it is clear that the alliance has enormous force at its disposal: from 120,000 to 140,000 out of a total of about 325,000. Other elements, such as localism or personality differences, could readily provide the additional 25,000 to 42,500 votes needed for victory in a two-man contest.

The consequences of a strong Democratic alliance of white workers and Negroes were clearly revealed in 1962, and undoubtedly were in the back of Governor Russell's mind in recent months. Bourbon paternalism, considerations of economic progress, and other motives were also present. But Governor Russell is far too intelligent and shrewd to ignore the revolutionary implications of the 1962 elections.

Three conclusions can be drawn concerning the nature of this revolution. In the first place, the Democratic Party in South Carolina will become gradually but increasingly more liberal. With younger conservatives zealously deserting the Democrats for the G.O.P., leaving moderates and liberals in control, the Dixiecrat veterans of '48 will soon be consigned to limbo. Men like Senator Strom Thurmond and Congressman Watson will be the first casualties, for they will be highly vulnerable in the Democratic primaries. Following the example of Georgia's Senator Herman Talmadge, South Carolina Democrats like Johnston and Russell are swinging more solidly behind the Kennedy Administration on domestic issues.

Secondly, the two-party system is a reality in South Carolina. The Republicans can be expected to strengthen their position among professionals, white-collar workers, and the middle-class generally. Regardless of the wishes of Northern Republicans, the South Carolina party seems destined to be a haven for the older Dixiecrat racists, as well as a beacon to young Goldwaterite idealists. Assuming the liberal Eastern wing of the Republican Party nationally retains its dominant position, the national party will tend to become more divided on the race issue----as the Democrats have been for decades.

Finally, it seems clear that the race issue in its traditional form is dead. As Negro leader McCray has said, "Race is no longer the campaign issue it once was. All sensible politicians know they need our support to win statewide or national elections. The Negro has arrived in South Carolina politics. We will be heard from." It is important to note, however, that McCray really means that no sensible Democratic politician can win either a primary or a general election without Negro support; no Republican could carry South Carolina's Negroes now or in the near future. A "sensible" Democrat in South Carolina will therefore try to avoid the race issue, to avoid splitting the worker-Negro alliance either by driving workers to the Republicans or by causing Negroes to stay home. A Republican, on the other hand, might use the race issue to attract enough white workingmen for victory, but he must first offer the voters more than stale cliches; instead, he must offer a realistic way of resisting Washington. As the integration process passes the initial stages and complex questions of "how much integration" arise in a multitude of areas, the Republicans may score heavily by offering practical, concervative answers to such questions. The probable heavy concentration of Negroes in the Democratic Party will force the Democrats to take more liberal stands. The race issue will never regain its position of dominance in South Carolina politics; it will arise from time to time in connection with the integration process.

With intelligent and persuasible leaders and hard-working organizers Democratic dominance in South Carolina seems assured in the immediate future. There are simply too many white workers and Negroes---and Democratic incumbents at all levels---for the Republicans to overcome. This prospect is no cause for Republican gloom, however, for their strength is also steadily growing, and they can already take a large share of the credit for the recent developments which are re-making South Carolina politics in the typical national pattern of citizen-participation, orientation toward issues and not simply personalities, and division of the electorate along economic and social lines.

Harvey Gantt's admission to Clemson is far more than an isolated incident. It is symbolic of the infinitely more far-reaching rise of Negro political strength in South Carolina. In this sense Governor Russell's handling of the crisis is more than a matter of morality. It is sound politics. McCray's dramatic words were not unjustified. In South Carolina---if not in Mississippi---the Negro has arrived. And, more important, the politicians know it.

How Strong Does The Negro Stand

By MONT MORTON
Governmental Affairs Staff

An appeal to recognize Negro voting strength in South Carolina was cut short this past week at the State Democratic Convention.

"Is it not time we recognize the Negro leadership in our state and party and encourage it to participate in party affairs?" demanded Mrs. Albert Holt, delegate from Pickens County. Losing the floor on a parliamentary point, Mrs. Holt saw the convention adjourn before she could place any motion before it.

A state convention is one thing. Negro voting strength is another.

Convention happenings are exposed to the public. But the story behind Negro balloting power today in South Carolina is known to few.

Among those who may know how strongly the Negro stands at South Carolina ballot boxes today is Dr. Charles H. Thomas Jr., of Orangeburg.

Dr. Thomas is chairman of the S. C. Voter Registration Committee, and as such he cites statistics that may surprise more persons than Mrs. Holt's appeal.

South Carolina is among 11 southern states in which the Southern Regional Council has been conducting its Voter Education Project (VEP). Within a 21 - month period, a total of 20,727 non-white voters has been newly registered in South Carolina.

That is about 1,000 a month.

According to Dr. Thomas, VEP "seeks to encourage voter registration in the South and to study thereby patterns of Negro voting and arrive at most effective methods for overcoming traditional barriers of discrimination and voter indifferences.

"The program is non-partisan and has the endorsements of both the Republican and Democratic national committees," said Dr. Thomas.

How successful has the voter registration drive been in South Carolina? Here are Dr. Thomas' figures for the period from April, 1962 through December 1963.

—Total number of newly reigstered non - white voters — 20,727.
— Total S. C. voter registration — 814,628.
—Total number of white voters — 703,000.
— Total non - white voters —111, 628.
— Per cent non - white voters are of total — 13.7 per cent.

However, during the 21-month period, Dr. Thomas noted that of the newly registered voters, 30 per cent are non - white.

Since the first of this year, Dr. Thomas disclosed an additional 700 new Negro voters have registered in Aiken County, about 700 have also been registered in Orangeburg County.

And since Jan. 1, approximately 1,100 Negroes have been newly registered in Richland County, he said.

"As chairman of the voter education program, I know that we are completely organized at precinct and ward level."

Dr. Thomas claims VEP in South Carolina has a chairman in each county, that the campaign organization carries down through area supervisors, precinct and ward chairmen, and even to street and block chairmen.

"We have ciphered from registration books every registered individual. We have these filed by streets on file cards.

"These cards may be pulled and given to any of our workers at a moment's notice for going into any area."

VEP in South Carolina has "very few" paid workers, Dr. Tho[illegible] said. In the Second Congressional District, he said there are only two paid workers, with offices established in Columbia and Orangeburg. "We have similar organization in all other Congressional Districts."

What is the potential of such a program in certain areas?

In Orangeburg County, there is a Negro candidate in the Democratic primary for the State House of Representatives. "We have a 62 per cent Negro population in Orangeburg County," Dr. Thomas points out. "We definitely feel he has a good chance."

There are about 5,000 registered Neg[illegible] voters in Orangeburg C[illegible]ty, Dr. Thomas said, compared with about 11,000 registered white voters. There are seven candidates in the primary for Orangeburg's four House seats.

"If we can concentrate on four candidates, we think this is going to do the trick. We definitely hold a certain balance of power. Of those running, it is to our advantage to concentrate on four.

"We don't believe any other candidate can get that many votes."

A U.S. Court of Appeals judge said the Civil Aero- Board has failed to hand down clear and distinct rulings ing Northeast an application for continuance of its Florida run. . . . Voters of Duval County (Jacksonville) will cast a straw ballot on May 26 as to whether restaurants, hotels and motels should be integrated. . . . A Miami federal judge has delayed until August, 1965, or later any court action on a suit demanding immediate legislative reapportionment. The tension of the space race atmosphere at Cape Kennedy has helped create an unusually high percentage of mentally disturbed children in Brevard County, school psychologists report. South Carolina

Personal income in South Carolina is up 5.9 per cent over this time last year, a full point better than the national increase of 4.9. . . . The State of Indiana has returned to the State of South Carolina a flag captured by Indiana troops when Columbia was taken by Northern forces in 1865. . . . According to Dr. Charles H. Thomas Jr., chairman of the Voter Registration Committee, interested in increasing Negro registration, there are 111,628 non-white persons on the rolls, or 13.7 per cent of the total enrollment. As to new registration within the last two years, 30 per cent was non-white. . . . Interstate 95, which enters South Carolina from Georgia near Savannah, and which will fork near Florence, S. Re: Tennessee and South Carolina Registration

All registration books in Tennessee closed on July 6 and will remain closed until after the August 6 primary. We should now request complete reports from W. C. Patton and from our separate Nashville project regarding their activities during the month of June and for the first week of July.

I learned on my trip to South Carolina last week that the books were closed in nearly every county throughout the state during the month of June on account of the primary, and therefore, you may find that there was no registration for several counties, but this should be verified by each chairman. It appears that the Sixth Congressional District permitted registration in some counties even though the books should have been closed.

101,000 Registered In South Carolina

COLUMBIA, S. C.—(ANP) — A spokesman for the South Carolina Progressive Democrats, the Negro political organization, estimated last week that about 101,000 Negroes are registered to voter in this state.

John H. McCray of Columbia said this represents a jump of 8,000 since September, 1962, and in increase of nearly 11,000 since May, 1962 when the figure was 90,659.

McCray said the biggest increase —a jump of 2,000—was registered in Charleston County over the past year. He added that gains of 600 were reported in Georgetown County and gains of 200 or more were reported in Dorchester, Richland, Greenville, Sumter and Beaufort counties. McCray estimated that about one of every four South Carolina Negro is now registered.

William Taylor, General Counsel
U.S. Commission on Civil Rights
1701 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C.

Dear Mr. Taylor:

The Congressional Quarterly of the week ending April 9, 1965, carried a notation of the fact that the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights had requested the Census Bureau to gather statistics on voter registration for Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana.

As long ago as last October, I personally asked you to include South Carolina in any such request, and I was under the impression that this request would be granted.

I would like to repeat this request at this time. You know that the State of South Carolina does not collect such statistics on racial basis, and, of course, you appreciate the need for the possession of such figures.

Sincerely yours,

Richard Miles

South Carolina--10-22, 10-23, 10-24-62

10-22--Discussion with Robinson and Brown, Core field workers, about their work in the rural counties. Discussion took place in the Core office in Sumter, S.C. Robinson appears to be the leader of the two and he did most of thetalking. He said they had recently finished a two-week stint in Darlington County in which they had registered some 200 voters. He said the way they work is to go into acounty, contact local leaders, and arrange for cooperation of ministers, businessmen, etc. He said that a car pool is usually formed, frequently with a funeral home as headquarters. He seemed to think the principal factor inhibiting success in their program is the fear of the Negroes that economic reprisals will be used against them by the whites if they attempt to register and vote. He gave a long account of his difficulties with the Sumter whites which seemed to have revolved around his continuing civil rights activities. He said that he had been in the business of building houses and that he had been warned several times that if he didn't get out of this movement his sources of credit and materials would be shut off. He ignored the warnings and is now devoting full time to registration activities as a result. His wife is a teacher in the Sumter public schools. She does not appear to have suffered reprisal as a result of Robinson's activities.

Brown gave much the same story of his own difficulties, though he does not appear to have been as big an operator in real estate and building as was Robinson. The latter says he owns 100 acres or so outside Sumter which he used part of as a subdivision. He saysthe state highway department ran a road through his premises and then refused to give him anything like what the property was worth. He took the matter to court but unsuccessfully. He was not at all pleased with the manner in which Finney represented him (In a previous conversation Finney had warned me not to take too seriously what Robinson said).

There is somequestion in my mind about the effectivenss of Robinson and Brown. I did not have the time to go into the county where they saidthey had just been working and talk to some of the folks there, nor do I feel that I could have accomplished much in doing so because of my pale skin. However I think it would be agood idea to get an opinion from some ofthelocal folks in Darlington County. They said they wouldbeworking in Florence County the following week. It might also be a good idea to follow up thiswork with some enquiries.

Altogether this was not a very satisfactory interview. I asked them what they had done in theway of getting affidavits of discrimination, statements of fear, descriptions of resistance tactics, etc. They showed me some old stuff dated back in June and July. They did have a current work sheet showing performance figures in Darlington County dated in October. However they did not show me anything but summary sheets. They said they maintain daily worksheets when canvassing and that they maintain records of each door-to-door contact. If they had such sheets on Darlington County they did not produce them. I hesitate to firmly question their veracity on this point; however, I do think these two are much more interested in getting voters registered than they are in keeping records and that, therefore, what they report should be taken with some reservations. If they do not maintain accurate day-to-day record sheets, their summary reports at theend of the month could hardly be more than informed guesses as to their progress during the previous months. I suggested to them the necessity for keeping accurate records and also gave them an outline of the things they should keep alookout for an report in connection with resistance andwith Negor attitudes.

Columbia--10-23: Mrs. Alice Spearman was not in her office but I talked at some length with her on the 'phone. She said that, in Orangeburg County, Dr. C.H. Thomas at Carolina State College and Dr. H.V. Manning, Pres. of Claflin, were very much interested in registeration and were looking for some support. She said Dr. Manning had met with the county registrars and was pleased with their attitudes. He thinks much can be done by Negroes whohave not been branded as militants in the civil rights movement. She said also that a retired mail-carrier--McPherson--had been very active for years in Organgeburg and that he was a good man and"absolutely fearless". She suggested that I get in touch with Benjamin Mack of Columbia wh0 had been very active in the citizenship shhools, but who had had some difficulty with SCLC ofer the payment of his expenses. She said that in Kingstree, Williamsburg County, Virgil Dimery, partner in the Dimery and Rogers funeral home, was very active in voter registration and was looking for some support. She said that the minister who had been leading things in Clarendon County had died, leaving a severe leadership vacuum which was not presently being filled. One Billy Fleming seems to be attempting to carve himself a primary leadership role but Spearman says he isthought of as a hustler from the north. She says he is a fiery and very effective speaker. She saidthat Freddy Williams, at Sumter and a student at the college there, is a very good man. She said he had worked closely and effectively with the Council's youth program in Sumter. Freddy seems to be a big leader on the campus and to have quite a student following, according to Spearman.

Columbia, 10-23, Mathew Perry: Knows of only two incidents in which courts have been used flagrantly to deprive the Negro in S.C. An NAA state president charged with defrauding an insurance company was acquitted on trial in a state court. Perry questioned the justification for thecharges andsuspected they were merely harassment. He thinks the jury system in S.C. is generally bad for the Negro particularly in civil matters,but better in some counties than in others. He corroborates Robinson's story of discrimination in connection with taking of R's land for the state highwy in Sumter. Says Finney tried to get R. to settle for the amount offered even though R though it inadequate. R refused and on trial was unable to offer evidence to refute the testimony of white appraisers introduced as expert by the defendent.

Perry thinks the discrimination in the case tookplace at the appraisal rather than at the trial level.

He feels that white opposition in S.C. is generally more sophisticated than in Miss., etc. This corroborates R's belief that fear is manintined primarily by economic rather than direct physical intimidation. He says NAA chapter in Columbia has not been notably effected in registration work. Thinks ineffectiveness stems from lack of organized and cooperative leadership. Thinks whites, partially thru well-organized WCC use technique of keeping the leadership divided. Thinksthere is plenty of leadership available. Thinks spresence of several Negro lawyers willing to undertake "race" matters accounts for the relative integrity ofthe judicial process in the state.

He says McCray's sorganization has in the past been the most effective in v-r work. Says that in recent years M's organization has declined until he no longer occupies the influential positon he once did. Therehave been numerous and persistent reportsthat M has used his position for his own enrichment. Perry is unable to say how muchsubstance there is to these charges. He does affirm thattheyhave accounted for much of the declinejof M's influence. Again when asked about the most effective v-r workhe mentions M.

M went to cover a rape trial of a young Negro accused of raping the daughter of a prominent white citizen. He was accompanied by an AP man. The story both wrote gave so many details about the girl's identity it was claer who she was Mwas tried under a S.C. law prohibiting identification of rape victims. the AP man wasnot tried. M. found guilty and given suspended sentenceand probation. He violated probation by leaving thestate without notifying probation officer to attend demo convention in Chicago where he led a move to oppose seating of the S.C. delegaton. He was jailed on his return for violating probation. Perry doubts this would have happened to a white man. M's organization was responsible for the original voting case in S.C. back in the40'sand for a time he was very active and influential in Negro politicsin the state. Influence has now waned and he is a reporter for the Pittsburg Courier.

10-23-Columbia: McCray sayshe doubts that any extisting organization can effectively conduct a voter registration drive in Columbia. He says NAA chapter is weak and ineffective having only about a hundred members some of whomare white. He says there is a great organziation and personal jealousy among the various groups here. He says his groups is goingto conduct a drive in the 9th and 18th wards after the Nov. elections. He says the Board of Registrars have agreed to bring their operation into the area to facilitate registration. He says they did this in Lower RichlandCounty and registered 900 in a week. He thinks his drive will run about a week andhopes to get some 20,000 new voters.

He says the Palmetto Voters League is dominatedby republicanswho are strictly partisan--willing to supportWorkman against Johnston bout is doubtful they can swing a substantial number of votes. Leevy is one of the big leaders of the republicans here. M supports Johnston but he bitterly opposes Thurmond. Says it is certainThurmond has a Negro daughter who attended State College and who now lives in Savannah--Essie Williams. Says Thurmondhas numerous Negro relatives sired by either his grandfather or his Uncle. M is very satisfied with the progress of the Negroes in thecity. Says he was dealing with city councilmanBates before Negroes could vote and Bates would do nothing. But after the Elmo v.Rice decision, Bates called him about getting someNegroes on the police force. He asked Bates what had chnaged the latter's attitude and Bates said"You can votenow" There are now 4 Negroes on the police whose authority is plenary. There are 8 Negro fireman and the thing h9lding up further employment is Difficulty finding Negro applicants. Negroes sit on varous city committees and Commissions and M saysthe mayor ismaking plans for desegregating thecity parks and hotels. City lunch counters were desegregated wi hout incidnet thru cooperation of city

M says mayor and chairman of board of registrars treat withhim on a basis of personal equality. He says he knows of no cases of policebrutality to Negroes in recent years. He thinks state repsublicans are primarily the nuts who left the demo party when the Negroes got thevote. He says hiskman in Berkely county takes applications and sends them to registrars who issue certificates and pass them On to Negores. He says this also accurs in Gerogetown and the counties ofBeaufort, Greenville and Spartanburg, are very easy on Negro registration.

The charge that he is working with whites to thedetrimentof the Negroes is not contradicted by anything he says, nor is it confirmed. His attitude of enthusiasm about the local white officials might be interpreted as a sign of such an affiliation. On the other hand, the fact that this proven effective organizer and leader has now been politically castrated by such rumors may be evidence that the divisie efforts of the whites are being very effective.

Charleston Registrars interviewed 10-24-62.

Three women, 2 rather nasty creatures and one who obviously dominates things. The latter is fastidiously dress and coiffed, sports a large diamond solitaire & wedding band on left hand and a beautiful & exquisitely tasteful camio on the right. She is in her middle forties, speaks in the tones of aristocracy and very clearly runs things. The clerk, a sycophant type was also present during the interview.

The leader is very critical of Negroes who have participated in the drives of August and October. She felt that WPA is "herding them" in and this much against their will. She says many Negroes are very tense and keyed up when they come to register during these pogroms. She attributes this to the Manifestations of WPA and the local Citizens Committee. When asked to she did not suggest that Negroes might be tense because of apprehension of what might happen to them for being so arrogant as to want to register.

She complained of much rudeness on the part of Negroes particularly youngsters. Says the Mississippi thinks to NAA president and he shrugged off with "Well that's human nature".

She said she wished I had been there during the 9 days of the August drive, that I would have seen a mass of ignorance which was indescribable. Some 800 Negroes were registered in the 9 days and 130 were rejected. She said that a surprising number of Negroes could read the required section of the Constitution with great facility but "You know that they don't understand a thing that they are reading." She said that now and then they turn to fail a white for being unable to read, but that most of the illiterate whites readily admit their illiteracy and simply present their tax receipt for taxes paid on $300 or more assessment.

She told of one negro woman whose reading ability the Clerk had questioned who was being re-examined by her. The Board turn. Wrote down and Creed. She turned to one of her women colleagues and said "it's good it didn't happen to you - you'd probably have broken down too." She seemed to feel no compassion — no sympathy — no [redacted] Lesmon sympathy — for the distraught woman who had appeared before her. The [redacted] complication was that she was imputing to her colleague a kind of silly weakness.

When asked if there had been any organized white effort, she said that the various "Citizens" organizations had worked since 1957 to get whites re-registered for the new ten-year registration period.

its "Comic section" when the whites do it and "herding" when the Negroes do it.

Registration works this way - The applicant fills out a simple form and then is required to read a section of the State or federal Constitution. This is done before the clerk. If the clerk has any question about reading ability, she sends the applicant to one of the Registrars and the latter readministers the test. They try to use section - which exclude such terms as legislature, constitution, Senate, Supreme Court, etc. Curiously they seem to have no objection to illiterate white voters though their vaunted objection to negroes voting is based upon their contention that the negroes are too dumb to really understand what they're doing.

I asked if any of the negroes appeared to ~~know~~ be aware of the significance of what they were doing she said "Oh yes, some of them are very sharp".

O Rongelung.
Dr. C. H. Thomas at State College and Dr. H. V. Manning at Claflin very much interested in Voted reg. and looking for support. Dear Mr. Strickland:

Thank you for your letter of February 6, 1964.

The only materials we have which would outline for you the scope of the Voter Education Project are certain internal reports, an election year calendar we have made up and a chart showing the results of VEP activity to December 31, 1963. The latter two items we are enclosing with this letter, and the former reports are being sent you under separate cover.

If we can be of any further assistance just let us know.

Dear Mr. Branton:

I would like to express our appreciation to you for coming to the aid of N.S.M. last year when we were much concerned about our application for tax exemption. The help we received from people like yourself has proved to be of invaluable benefit: we have just gained a favorable ruling.

This will necessarily change the shape of our operations in a number of areas among which is the nature of our voter registration efforts in the North. It would be a great service if you would send on to us whatever materials you may have outlining the scope of the Voter Education Project so that we may have some reliable guidelines to pass on to our people in the cities.

Thanking you in advance, and hoping that all is well with you, I remain

Yours sincerely,

Vote Drive Set For Negroes In Williamson

By ROBERT CHURCHWELL
Banner Staff Writer

Franklin—The failure to use the ballot was given emphasis here Sunday at a rally preparatory to launching a voter registration drive among Negroes in Williamson County.

Henderson

The drive, as outlined by Dr. V. W. Henderson, Fisk University department of economics chairman, will aim ultimately at registering 3,316 Negroes out of a total of 14,000 eligible voters in the county.

The rally, at Provident Baptist Church here, was one of a series to be held in Davidson, Williamson, Maury and Giles Counties under plans of a Middle Tennessee Voter Registration Project sponsored jointly by the Nashville NAACP branch and the Davidson County Independent Political Council. Money for the four-week project is being provided by the Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council, Atlanta.

Henderson, secretary of the Nashville NAACP, said this and other recent activities represent the first time in the history of Tennessee that Negroes have come together to use their political influence in behalf of better race relations.

His reference was to an endorsement given former Governor Frank Clement by the Tennessee Voters Council, an organization of cooperative Negro political groups across the state. The endorsement followed the appearance of Clement and the other two major candidates, P. R. Olgiati, and William Farris, at the recent TVC rally at Fisk University.

The rally was sponsored by the Franklin NAACP branch, David Hoosey, president. Mrs. C. M. Hayes, Nashville branch president introduced Henderson.

All candidates for public office, as well as the public in general, are invited to attend.

NEWS RELEASE

Sept. 11, 1962

LEON COX TO HEAD N.A.A.C.P., DAVIDSON COUNTY INDEPENDENT POLITICAL COUNCIL THREE WEEK VOTER REGISTRATION DRIVE

The Board of Managers of the local Middle Tennessee Voter Registration Project -- joint voter registration campaign of the Nashville Branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the Davidson County Independent Political Council -- met last night to further plans for a three week concentrated effort at registering thousands of unregistered voters.

The Board appointed Leon Cox as co-ordinator of the drive. Cox recently returned to Nashville from St. Petersburg, Florida, where he taught history at Gibbs Junior College. Cox was also president of the St. Petersburg Branch NAACP. Last March he headed the Pirellas County (Florida) voter registration drive, sponsored by the Florida State Conference of Branches of the NAACP.

The Committee in its business session last night outlined techniques that might prove valuable in inducing non-registered voters to shoulder their responsibilities.

Cox said that immediate plans call for placing two full time workers in the County Court House to encourage persons to register while there attending to other business. Other plans call for the continued practice of block by block, house by house canvassing.

RE: "TARGET SEVEN"

We are far from our goal of 20,000 new registered voters!

The Voter-Registration Department at the County Court House will be closed until August 7; therefore, we have twenty days to "wait."

Make this "waiting" period a concentrated WORKING period. Push hard to get at least ten people to commit themselves to register on August 7.

Campaign literature is available in our office to help you. If you need it, call between 10:00 a.m. and 5:00 p.m. Your identification badge is enclosed.

Your report should be sent in as soon as you complete your area. If transportation is needed for people to register, phone our office immediately, giving name, address, phone number, and time to be picked up.

We can't afford to waste time. TARGET SEVEN.

RE : Progress in Voter-Registration Campaign

FROM: G. W. Chrite, Director

Please Note: Meeting of Block Workers, Friday, August 3, 1962, at 7:45 p.m. in the Voter-Registration Office.

We are now in the second month of our four-month project. We are concerned that our progress has been rather slow up to this time. Elections have hindered us, but we still have a tremendous job to do.

We need reports on "TARGET SEVEN." It is vitally important that we meet to determine our plans for subsequent campaigning.

Voter-registration is the responsibility of every citizen. You realized that by committing yourself to work with us;therefore, we urge you to attend this meeting.

ORGANIZATION PRESIDENT
Nashville
Tennessee

Dear President:

Because of your interest -- moral and civic -- the Middle Tennessee Voter Registration Research Project solicits your cooperation in its Number One project: VOTER REGISTRATION.

Of the citizens in Nashville of voting age, only about forty (40 %) per cent are actually registered to vote. The lack of interest of eligible voters is also an appalling problem.

People should be encouraged to register and vote, because the power of the vote is unquestionable. Job opportunities and educational advancement can be realized from political strength.

As leaders in the Community, you have a responsibility to make your members one hundred per cent registered voters.

Materials and assistance may be secured from our office or by calling.

Very truly yours,

TO: NASHVILLE CITIZENS --- Doctors, Dentists, and Businesses

We don't need to tell YOU how important it is that we increase the number of registered Negro voters. The results of our last election emphasize that. We will remind you that we are in a crisis situation. The figures speak for themselves: in Nashville and Davidson County only 29 out of every 100 Negro citizens of voting age are actually registered; more tragic is the fact that less than half of those registered actually vote.

Our aim is to contact people EVERYWHERE, to encourage them to register and to vote; therefore, we call upon you for help. We realize that you have little time to give in a campaign, but there is something you CAN do.

Enclosed is material that we want you to display in your office or establishment. Please display it where your patrons will be certain to see it. You might even suggest that they notice it.

In addition, we ask you to be responsible for keeping a record of NON-REGISTERED voters. Registered voters should sign the Honor Roll. Included in the material are cards for non-registered people to fill out. We will contact you regularly for a report.

Your cooperation with this Project will be appreciated . . . and rewarding to our community.

Tenn. Delegation Racially Mixed

NASHVILLE (AP)—The delegation representing Tennessee at the Democratic National Convention will be racially integrated, bound by the unit rule, firmly pledged to President Johmson and free to pick a vice presidential candiate of its liking.

These matters were ironed out with hardly a riple Thursday as state Democratic leaders met.

The seven Negroes—three delegates and four alternates—are believed to be the first of their race ever sent to a national convention by Tennessee Democrats.

The Negro delegates are A.W. Willis, Memphis attorney; Robert Lillard, Nashville attorney and city councilman, and Aaron E. Sloss, Nashville labor union leader. The Negro alternates: Bennie Harris, Chattanooga; Harold Love, Nashville, and Russell Sugarmon and Jesse Turner of Memphis.

The delegation to the meeting in Atlantic City Aug. 24-27 will be made up of 66 delegates and 36 alternates. They will cast Tennessee's 40 votes in the unit. However, the state convention provided that the delegation by a majority vote of its members, could free itself from the rule and each vote individually.

Leading the group will be Gov. Frank Clement and all but one Democratic member of Tennessee's congressional delegation. Rep. Tom Murray of Jackson was not elected.

Sen. Herbert Walters and Mrs. Ruth Russell of Gallatin will return as members of the Democratic National Committee.

Negro Claims Title of Austin Mayor As Council Quits During 'Speak-in'

AUSTIN, Tex. (AP) — Rev. Wesley Sims, a Negro took over the Austin mayor's chair Wednesday, claiming he is mayor pro tem because the City Council adjourned during a civil rights filibuster.

The City Council adjourned after sitting for a week as demonstrators' speakers droned on in what they termed a "speak-in" seeking an anti-discrimination ordinace.

Sims is minister of the Bethany Christian Church.

A spokesman for the National Association for Advancement of Colored People, said the Council members had deserted their posts and Sims would act as mayor pro tem so the "city would not be void of a city government."

There was no violence during the confusion and noise that followed the unexpected adjournment of the Council session.

About 15 uniformed policemen gathered back of the City Hall building. Police Chief Bob Miles said there would be no interference with the demonstration unless "there is an attempt to destroy property or if there are assaults. We can't let that happen."

The adjournment came after Sims, the current speaker in the long demonstration, warned that racial unrest threatens "to turn a tiger loose in our city."

There was confusion in the Council chamber and in the corridors. An estimated 100 spectators, white and Negro, crowded into the chamber and hallways. When the Council adjourned, most of them stood. Some cheered, some jeered. There was some shouting.

The four Council members present went into an adjoining room.

Volma Overton, chairman of the local NAACP chapter, told newsmen the "speak-in" would continue without the presence of the Council members.

Sims resumed the filibuster after the Council recessed for day.

Texas Statewide

Clement Facing Racial Problem

Atlanta C+J, 5-3-64

By JOE HATCHER
Staff Writer, The Nashville Tennessean
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

TENNESSEE

NASHVILLE, Tenn. May 2. Gov. Frank Clement, on the eve of a campaign for the U.S. Senate while he retains the office of governor, faces what may be the most crucial racial problem as yet raised statewide.

The governor has had tremendous support from the Negro voters of the state as the result of major progress made in race relations, school integration, and local voluntary desegregation of public facilities, restaurants, hotels and other public places.

But the governor now faces the signing or refusal to sign a "Fair Practices Code", extending by gubernatorial decree, for whatever that means, the general accommodations rights to the Negroes.

The Tennessee Voters Council, probably the strongest Negro organization of its kind, is pressing for the governor's signature on the code drawn and adopted by the governor's own Commission on Human Rights.

The proposed code would require state officials to recruit, promote and discharge personnel on the basis of ability and fitness, without regard to race, color, religious creed, ancestry or national origin."

The code is actually quite mild, and far short of the pending civil rights bill before the Congress.

Some of the Negro leaders urging the signing of the code were recently recognized by Gov. Clement's administration and named delegates to the Democratic National Convention, to which seven Negroes will go for the first time in the state's history.

In support of the code demands, race demonstrations have started again in Nashville despite the pleas of most of the Negro organizations against such demonstrations at this time.

One big restaurant, Morrison's cafeteria, is a prime target of the recurring demonstrations. It is the only sizeable restaurant in Nashville not desegregated. Three small uptown "hamburger joints" are the excuse for the uptown demonstrations.

The aim of the Voters Council is to increase the Negro vote in the state from the estimated 175,000 to 225,000 in the 1964 elections.

That plum makes the issue a prime one in the August primaries in congressional and the two U.S. Senate campaigns.

U.S. Sen. Herbert S. Walters, the interim appointee to the late Sen. Estes Kefauver's seat, cleared the field for Gov. Clement by announcing this week that he would not seek the seat, but would remain in Washington for the civil rights fight. He has announced that he will vote against the bill.

Sen. Albert Gore, who has twice supported civil rights measures, has also announced against the present bill — in its present form — but indicates he will support the measure if clarifying amendments are adopted.

Rep. Ross Bass, who is seeking the Senate seat and who is a probable opponent of Gov. Clement, voted for the civil rights bill in the House.

No Negroes In Tenn. Delegation To National GOP Convention

Atl. Daily, 5-10-64

MEMPHIS, Tenn.—(SNS)—No Negroes will be among Tennessee's delegation to the Republican Convention at San Francisco in July.

This will be the first time in more than 40 years that Negroes have not been numbered among the State's GOP voting group.

Down through the years it was almost understood that the Republican representation from this end of the State would be interracial. This policy existed under the late GOP leader, Robert R. Church, and continued under the leadership of Lt. George W. Lee.

Lee's power was wrested from him about two years ago by a predominantly white group.

Mr. Lee was on hand in Nashville last Saturday for the State Convention which elected delegates and alternates and voted to support Arizona Senator Goldwater for the presidential nomination. (The at-large national convention delegates are not bound by Saturday's Goldwater endorsement.)

Mr. Lee is reportedly campaigning for New York Governor Rockefeller.

At the convention Saturday, Old Guard Republican leader George Lee appeared before a special committee and warned that any abandonment of Negroes would be "a bonanza for the Democrats." He was seeking to have himself and David Marks of Memphis declared delegates to the national convention from the Ninth Congressional District. The executive committee instead accepted Robert James and Lewis Donelson.

James and Donelson were named in March when the James faction of the Shelby County GOP organization dominated the county convention and Mr. Lee and his followers walked off the convention floor.

Mr. Lee and his followers, Negro and white, insist the James faction is lily-white and is denying representation to Negro Republicans.

Followers of the pace-setting James faction contend Negroes "participated fully" in district caucuses and attended the county convention.

Meanwhile, another fierce showdown between Lee and James is shaping up. Mr. James several weeks ago said he will run for the Republican nomination for the United States House of Representatives from the Ninth District. Last Saturday, Atty. Raymond M. Briggs of the Old Guard announced he will oppose Mr. James in the GOP primary. Atty. Briggs most certainly will have the backing of Mr. Lee and his group.

This will be a rematch for the two candidates as they opposed each other in 1962 for the same seat polled 7,894 votes and Briggs got 3,214.

Later Mr. James lost to Democrat incumbent Cliff Davis by a mere 1,200 votes. Political observers claim Lee kept his followers from the polls, helping to defeat James. This could happen again.

Re: TENNESSEE REGISTRATION

I talked with W. C. Patton today. He was reluctant at first to estimate the number of Negroes registered. I recalled to him that we had a 1958 estimation of 185,000, and I reminded him that our record showed that VEP projects had registered more than 22,000 people. I then asked him whether he thought the round figure of 200,000 would be reasonable. He said he thought it was probably between 200 and 250,000.

I talked with Mr. Henry McCall, Coordinator of Elections in Nashville, whose telephone number is 741-2286. I had asked him for an estimate of the Negro-white breakdown. He said that the only place that the information could be obtained was from each of the county election commissions. He said that he was going to start January 1 asking the county election commissioners for this information, and that he would be pleased to send us a copy of the results of this solicitation. He said he was going to place a deadline of January 31 on the solicitations from the county commissioners, so that he expected to have some reasonably reliable information by the 1st of March. He said he would send it to us as soon as it is available. I think we had better bring this matter up in the file sometime around the 1st of March, so that we can check on it.

McCall also said that if he came across any information which he thought would be of use to us on the Negro-white breakdown of the registered voters in Tennessee, he would forward it on to us. Since he seemed reluctant to establish a figure himself, I asked him what he thought of the Patton figure of 200,000. He said that in the last gubernatorial primary, around 700,000 people had voted, and that as he recalled, the total registration at that time had been about a million and a quarter. Using this for a base, he did some quick mental calculation, and said that 200,000 was a reasonable neighborhood to place the total Negro registration in, but cautioned that it could be off considerably. On the basis of this, I think we can use the figure 200,000, until we can find something better.

Re: TENNESSEE REGISTRATION

I talked with Vivan Henderson today about the estimate of 200,000 for the Negro registration in Tennessee. It was his opinion that 200,000 is probably a conservative figure, though he sounded creditable. He said that C. Alexander Luby, according to a study he made, received at least 90,000 Negro votes last year, and he estimated that around 50% of the Negroes who were registered voted for Luby.

I talked today with Mr. Willis, Russell Sugarman's partner, in Memphis. He said, as he recalled, that he had projected a figure of about 175,000 Negroes registered for Tennessee last year. He says that he imagines the statewide increase has been something over 20,000 since then. Consequently, he says that Patton's figure of 200,000 is probably pretty close to right.

Dear Sir:

In connection with the proposed election plans for Shelby County, Memphis, Tennessee, we wish to make the following additional statement. One of the people who has, in the past, been very helpful and has acquired a great deal of experience in registration and organization in our city is George Holloway, in fact, Mr. Holloway is the co-chairman of our registration campaign. He is a member of Local 988 UAW-CIO at Inter-National Harvester, Memphis Works.

We have been fortunate enough, in the past, to have secured Mr. Holloway's services on a full-time basis in connection with our registration efforts here. Anticipating some degree of favorable response to our initial request, we are also requesting that you use your good office to secure from the UAW-CIO, a leave of absence for Mr. Holloway so he can be active in our registration campaign on a full-time basis starting as soon as possible, through August 2, 1962.

We are requesting this time period because as in the past, we wish to do certain follow-up jobs and focus on a "get out and vote" campaign to get the maximum benefit out of our registration efforts.

Mr. Holloway's Memphis address is 760 Alaska Street.

Sincerely yours,

R B Sugarmon

Dear Mr. Branton:

In accordance with our telephone conversation, I am enclosing, for your consideration, a copy of Organizational Plans for Citizens Non-Partisan Voters Registration Campaign.

You will notice that the report is in two parts, (1) a brief background of registration results in Shelby County, and (2) proposed plans for a registration drive for the Year 1962, including a budget of anticipated income and expected expenditures.

We are fully aware of the problem of having a larger number of requests for funds for voters registration than funds presently available. We fully realize that the budget submitted by us is probably more than you can handle, however, it is our hope that you will consider giving us as much financial assistance as possible.

The primary factor is that we are anxious to proceed with our voters registration drive, therefore, we would appreciate hearing from you as soon as possible so that we may alter our plans accordingly.

If there is any additional information you desire, please contact us.

Very truly yours,

A. W. Willis, Jr.

Citizens Non-Partisan Voters Registration Campaign for

1962 in Memphis and Shelby County

I. BACKGROUND

Tennessee requires no poll tax or literacy test and the only requirements for voting in Tennessee are residence in Tennessee for twelve (12) months and three (3) months in the county, and that persons be 21 years of age or above.

In order to vote in any election, the person must be registered at least thirty (30) days prior to the date of the election in which he intends to vote.

Memphis and Shelby County is comprised of a total population of approximately 627,000 persons. Of this number, approximately 399,000 are white and approximately 228,000 or 36% are non-white.

Voting age population of Shelby County approximates 359,000. Of this number, 240,000 are white and 119,000 are non-white. Of the 240,000 whites eligible to register to vote, 172,786 or 71.8% are registered and, therefore, qualified to vote. Of the 119,000 non-whites eligible to register to vote, only 76,582 or 64.3% are registered and, therefore, qualified to vote.

The non-white registrants comprise approximately 30% of the county-wide registration.

The percentage of qualified non-whites is considerably lower than the percentage of whites who are fully eligible to participate in the voting process.

In 1948, Negro Democratic and Republican leaders in Shelby County grouped themselves together in an organization which adopted the name, "Citizens Non-Partisan Voter Registration Committee". It embraced Negro Democrats and Republicans along with representatives of the Bluff City and Shelby County Council of Civic Clubs, and leaders from the NAACP. Registration drives in this city from that date to the present have been conducted through this committee.

From 1952 through 1961, registration of Negro voters in this community increased from 7,000 then to the present figure of 72,000 plus, with a high point having being reached just before the November, 1960, presidential election when the records of the registrar's office revealed that 76,582 Negroes were qualified to vote.

Since the beginning of the Citizens Non-Partisan Voters Registration Campaign back in 1948, the character of the organization has been changed from year to year. Each year some improvements being made over the preceding year. Officers are elected annually, thereby taking advantage of new talent that comes available as time goes on. For example, organized labor has been very helpful in that it has sent highly talented field workers to Memphis to give us the benefit of their wide range of experiences in conducted voter registration drives. They have also assisted, down through the years, financially. The NAACP has also been an indispensable part of registration programs, down through the years. They, too, have sent in each year, trained field workers to aid us in organization of our voter registration campaigns. Likewise, they have made available funds and literature needed to make the drive successful. The local branch, more and more, has made voter registration a bigger part of its program. They have, down through the years, provided this organization with the only office space available, also with secretarial help and traveling expense. The NAACP has repeatedly made available its list of membership workers to serve as block convassers and provide transportation to and from the court house.

Today, the organization working through the Citizens Non-Partisan Voter Registration Committee can draw upon the following resources: approximately thirty (30) Republican ward clubs containing approximately 1,000 members; 63 Democratic ward clubs containing approximately 3,000 members; the NAACP representing over 7,000 members; the Bluff City and Shelby County Council of Civic Clubs representing approximately 45 neighborhood clubs; and the Inter-Denominational Ministerial Alliance representing some 200 ministers from all denominations.

The Shelby County registrar's office maintains its records in an up-to-date condition. The local registrar purges the rolls according to law to eliminate persons who have not voted within the preceding four (4) years in a state-wide election. In the fall of 1961, 25,000 names were dropped from the local rolls.

Approximately 17,000 of these were white with the remaining being Negro. Local efforts since that time have increased the Negro registration figures back to the present level of some 72,000.

II. OUTLINE OF PLANS FOR "62"

General

A voter registration campaign conducted in a county such as Shelby can be divided into two major phases, namely; (1) a gigantic publicity program designed to acquaint all of our citizens with the importance and necessity of registration so that they may be able to vote, and (2) a door-to-door canvassing program designed to approach the unregistered voter on an individual basis in hopes to persuade him and assist him in registering to vote. By combining these two programs, we feel a maximum amount of registration can be achieved.

In this county, July 2nd is the final date for registering in order to vote in the August 2nd elections involving the election of the Governor, U. S. Congressman, State Senators and Representatives in the Democratic Primary, and also approximately 40 officers on a county level in a general election. Therefore, the publicity program should begin on April 29, through June 3, giving us approximately six (6) Sundays. A ward organization should begin immediately.

We have listed below an outline of publicity and organization of a door-to-door program. The extent to which the media listed under publicity will depend on the availability of finance. Likewise, the perfection of the ward and precinct canvassing organization will depend to some degree to the availability of funds particularly in the employment of three (3) field secretaries who will have the task of coordinating the ward and precinct organization which is a full time job.

III. PLANS FOR DOOR-TO-DOOR CAMPAIGN

As has been stated, the potential number of registered voters in Memphis and Shelby County, according to the United States' Census of 1960 is 119,000, the number of voters actually registered being 72,000 at present. This leaves 47,000 Negroes who have not registered. Our goal for '62 has been set at 100,000, an increase of 28,000. While we feel that this goal represents a tremendous challenge, since we are rapidly approaching a saturation point, it appears to be possible in the light of past successful registration campaigns. In order to achieve this goal, a highlyborganized program of systematic door-to-door canvassing is required. To do this, we feel it necessary to secure the list of registered voters and conduct a house-to-house, street-to-street, block-to-block survey in each ward and precinct to determine who in each house on each street and in each block within every ward and precinct containing 100 or more Negro residents is unregistered. Eighty-six (86) out of Shelby County's more than 180 precincts should be thus canvassed. Past experience indicates that the block worker needs to know who in each house is registered so that he does not waste time talking to persons already registered. This requires relating the total number of registered voters to each eard and precinct street by street. This involves a great deal of clerical work.

The campaign must be conducted similarly to the taking of the Census, except that is purpose will be to penpoint the number of unregistered persons over 21, so that the block worker's time and effort may be concentrated on them.

We hope in another year to be able to reduce our findings to maps of each precinct indicating the number of persons living in each house and whether they are registered or unregistered. Such a map would make it easier to use untrained persons and volunteer workers for future canvassing. Once this information is placed in map form, we would only have to revise the information discovered in future voters registration campaigns.

Though this program may appear at first glance as a fairly ambitious one, we have discovered from past experience that we are now approaching the hard core of resistance to voter registration, therefore, ordinary means such as talks to inspire Negroes to vote, without more, will not do this job, but the unregistered voter must be singled out and intensive persuasion must be used on an individual basis.

IV. ESTIMATION OF FINANCIAL NEEDS

A. Expenses

1.	Executive Director (2 months @ $350 each month)	$ 700
2.	Clerical-Stenographic (4 clerks @ $50 a week for 9 weeks)	1,800
3.	Field Secretaries (3 @ $75 a week for 8 weeks)	1,800
4.	Supplies (for Compiling Voter Registration list for conducting survey)	1,000
5.	Transportation to Registration Office	500
6.	Hand bills, posters and other literature for voters	2,000
7.	Radio and Newspaper Advertisements	2,500
8.	Posters and Supplies	1,000
9.	Special Project (such as banquets, luncheons, meetings, workers at the Court House, etc.)	1,000
10.	Rent for three (3) months	150
11.	Telephone (three months)	150
12.	Office Equipment (file cabinet & typewriter rental)	500
13.	Miscellaneous	250
	TOTAL----------	$13,350

B. Income

1.	Anticipated funds to be raised from local donations	$ 3,000
2.	Anticipated funds to be donated by organizations interested in voter registration	10,350
	TOTAL----------	$13,350

In closing, we would like to point out that while such a door-to-door canvassing program as we are anticipating may seem over ambitious, in reality, this is not the case since we already have door-to-door canvassing available. We are relying heavily on the NAACP's member workers who are currently engaged in soliciting NAACP memberships and should be available by May 17. We also have the ward and precinct organizations of the Shelby County Democratic Club and the Lincoln League intact and ready to begin work on voter registration. Our' finance and organization committees are already at work. We have finished the voter registration program at the court house conducted during the sale of auto license and we are happy to report that this program produced an increase in in voter registration of 4,000. We are, however, in vital need of funds so that we may get to work on other plans as indicated above. We would hope to finish the majority portion of our 1962 registration plans by July 2nd, the final date to register in the coming August 2nd election.

Respectfully submitted,

Dear Mr. Walker:

Enclosed please find a circular designating all maps which are available from the Highway Planning Survey Division of the State of Tennessee Highway Department.

The work of the Highway Department is not such that it would entail use of such maps as requested in your letter of July 9, 1962, that is maps showing the boundaries of political subdivisions down to and including the ward and precinct. We have a map of the Congressional Districts of the State of Tennessee which may be ordered from this department for a fee of twenty-five cents ($.25).

We regret that we cannot be of more service.

Drive Registers 8,000 New Tennessee Voters

Tenn V-R

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Nearly, 8,000 new names were added to voter registration rolls in four Tennessee cities and two counties as the result of a five-week crash drive, W. C. Patton, NAACP field secretary for registration and voting, reported this week

In addition, 4,518 voters who had moved since the last election were retained on the rolls by reporting their changes of address.

A total of 800 volunteers worked in the various campaigns, distributing literature, holding meetings, ringing doorbells, giving instructions on how to register, and making nearly 25,000 personal contacts.

In Memphis, where, as a result of previous NAACP campaigns, more than 70 per cent of the potential Negro voters were already registered, 4,036 new names were added to the rolls for a total 73,588. The drive, under the direction of Mrs. Maxine Smith, executive secretary of the NAACP branch, was concentrated in the city low-rent housing projects.

In Knoxville there were 1,123 new registrations and 1,783 changes of address, which together with the number previously registered brought the total to 11,000.

Consent Writs Filed In Negro Voting Case

MEMPHIS (UPI) — The threat of a legal battle in a case involving alleged economic pressure brought against Negroes who wanted to vote ended Thursday when the Justice Department filed consent judgments in the case.

The action brought to a close all pending lawsuits brought by the department against white landowners in Fayette County who were accused of pressuring Negores who tried to register to vote.

The judgments permanently enjoin the landowners from "threats, coercion or intimidation" against any person for the purpose of interfering with their right to vote.

J. Harold Flannery of Washington, attorney for the civil rights division of the Department of Justice, filed the consent judgments after a brief meeting with Lucious Burch, attorney for the defendants. The action closed a case which began in the fall of 1960 when the Justice Department filed its first suits.

The government came into the case after Negroes claimed they were evicted from their homes after they attempted to register. Nearly 100 Negroes moved into a "tent city" which sprang up in a cotton patch south of Somerville in Fayette County in December 1960.

The government launched a surplus food distribution program shortly after which brought sharp protests from local and state leaders.

Both Fayette and Haywood counties had been civil rights hot spots since 1959 when the Justice Department enjoined white primaries in Fayette County.

Action That Counts

It is excellent news that 8,000 new names were added to voter registration in four Tennessee cities and two counties as a result of a five-week crash drive engineered by the NAACP, with 800 volunteers working in various campaigns.

In Memphis, where more than 70 per cent of the potential Negro voters were already registered, 4,036 new names were added to the rolls for a total of 73,588.

In Chattanooga, 1,400 new voters were added to the rolls, while in Knoxville and Clarksville, 1,123 new voters were registered in the first and 1,162 in the latter.

In the two counties, Haywood and Fayette, with resistance and slow-down tactics on the part of registration officials, 72 new voters were added in the former and 43 in the latter.

This is the kind of action that counts because it gets almost immediate results, whereas so-called "quicker" means usually worsen the Negro's position in the community.

The Negro's problem is basically economic, and politics is the reflection of any group's status where a republican form of government obtains.

The law and its enforcement is in the hands of those who are elected at the polls, and where any group is not able to assert itself at the polls, it suffers a great disadvantage which cannot be overcome by physical demonstrations since the apparatus of government is in other hands and uninfluenced by those who need it most.

This is a lesson that is slowly but surely being learned, so the voting registration drive among Negroes is by far the most revolutionary tactic now being carried out.

If we can register generally at least 70 per cent of the potential Negro voters, the solution to many of our problems will be at hand.

RE: Voter Registration in Tennessee

There is apparently no way to determine the number of registered voters in Tennessee, except by going to each registration office and after gaining permission of the county registrar, counting the registrations. Race is one of the items noted on each voter's registration, but not on the registration card the voter carries away with him.

Davidson County (Nashville) has approximately 165,000 registered voters; 150,000 are white and 15,000 are Negro. I talked with the Registrar today. These are approximate numbers as they do not have an exact count. The breakdown in Negro-white registrations was obtained from V. W. Henderson and also is an approximation.

The only other registrations I might question, as given in the Civil Rights report are:

Fayette County - Change Negro registration from 1500 to 2800
Haywood County - Change Negro registration from 300 to 2000

The sizable areas of population wherein voting registration is omitted from Civil Rights report include:

Anderson County with voting age population of	32,520	white
	1,034	Negro
Bradley County " " " "	20,834	white
	1,520	Negro
Lawrence County " " " "	15,837	white
	300	Negro
Madison County " " " "	25,617	white
	10,416	Negro
Robertson County " " " "	21,079	white
	878	Negro
Rutherford County " " "	13,748	white
	2,656	Negro

(more)

Sumner County with voting age population of	65,683	White
	1,438	Negro
Williamson " " " "	13,050	White
	2,231	Negro

If you think it worthwhile, we will either go to these counties, after the November election, or ask some member to count these registrations. As you can see, this is quite a task if you must go over registration books page by page through 15,000 to 165,000 names. There evidently is no simple way to do this, and no state-wide registration totals from which to draw. Please let us know.

Sincerely yours,

Katherine Jones

Tents will be used at eight polling places in the city in the election Tuesday.

Lester Brenner, Election Commission secretary, said this is the greatest number of tents used in 25 years he has been connected with the Election Commission.

"We just couldn't find vacant stores or other suitable buildings in some of the precincts," Brenner said. "Take my own ward, 65, precincts 1 and 2. We are having to use tents in both precincts."

Other voting places where tents will be used include wards 26-3, 31-4, 36-2, 38-3, 52-3 and 54-1.

All voting outside the city will be in buildings. Brenner said about 60 schools are being used, even tho city schools will be in session.

Rental for a voting place is $5. Many city and county buildings are used, and some citizens let their buildings be used as a civic gesture.

Voters will obtain only one voting application Tuesday, Brenner said. However, it will be perforated, and the voter will tear it in two, using one part to vote in the general election on one machine and the other to vote in the consolidation charter election on another machine.

"Voters can go first to whichever machine has less of a line," Brenner said.

What to Expect At Stewartville Tuesday: Instructed Negro 'No' Voters In Line

Tenn V-R 11-3-62 p.13

By JAMES H. WHITE
Press-Scimitar Staff Writer

Any Memphis reporter who has covered an election day at Stewartville — and I've been there twice — can tell you what's likely to happen there Tuesday.

White

Because like Ole Man River, Stewartville just keeps rolling along with the same old shenanigans and extra-legal practices.

Squire Paul Barret, banker and political master of much of north Shelby County, is against consolidation.

And "Mr. Paul" calls the shots at Stewartville.

So if Tuesday is like last elections this is the way it will be:

Most of Stewartville's 1573 voters (700 white, 873 negro) will vote Tuesday—a majority will vote against consolidation.

May Get Confused

And the few votes by negroes that might be cast for consolidation probably will be errors committed by farm hands who get their "instructions" confused.

Barret has his vote-mill tuned to a fine pitch — and for years he goose-egged opponents and ever since 1948 has delivered whopping majorities to his candidates.

How does he do it?

Stewartville is 30 miles northeast of Memphis, out Austin Peay Highway, near the Fayette and Tipton County lines.

Voting is conducted in a dilapidated, century-old lodge. White voters enter from the front door. Negroes use the back door.

But before the negroes get to the back door, they are sent thru a canvas tent some 50 feet behind the polls. The rear yard is roped off so the negroes won't skip the tent.

Inside the tent, Prof. Guy Hoffman, negro principal of Barret's Chapel School, makes sure everybody knows how to vote and for whom.

The negro principal and his wife know all the 873 negro farmhands — and the farmhands know the Hoffmans work for Barret.

For years, Barret used county school buses to haul the negroes to the polls. However, buses were not used Aug. 2, following a public statement against this by a county school board member several days before election.

"We hadn't planned to use buses this year, anyway," the rotund, cigar-smoking Barret told this reporter on election day. "Get better results with cars."

Buses or not, Barret did deliver solid majorities at Stewartville for Dave Harsh and Rudolph Jones, former county commissioners who were defeated that day.

Operation of the "instruction tent" is a sight to behold.

I have often asked negroes approaching the tent how they intended to vote? I have never found one who knew.

"Gotta wait until I get my ticket," one negro said Aug. 2.

The "ticket" is a slip of paper which Hoffman gives each negro, setting forth the Barret candidates and their number on the voting machine.

Sometimes Hoffman puts special emphasis on specific candidates on Barret's list. Last August, the negroes were told to be sure and vote for Harsh and Jones.

Up until this year, Hoffman has refused to allow reporters to come inside the tent, saying it was "private property." He let me enter the tent last August, but did so reluctantly.

". . .These colored folks sometimes get bumfuzzled if white people are standing around," he said.

Hoffman has a small practice

Hoffman has a small practice voting machine he uses to show the negroes how to vote. "When you push the red lever down, the little curtain will close, but don't let that confuse you," he told one negro.

The negro principal makes no bones about who is boss of Stewartville. "We have a leader out here — Mr. Barret. We reserve the right to vote for whom we want to, but we generally follow the leader."

Inside the lodge, reporters are even less welcome. Most of the negro voters vote on machines in a rear room which has no outside windows.

Each time I was escorted thru the lodge and then promptly escorted out.

Out front, Mr. Paul is master of the show. He spends much of the day under the giant shade trees on the grounds, exchanging pleasantries with the white voters, chewing on his cigar, wearing the familiar horn-rimmed glasses.

There are always plenty of iced-down soft drinks and sandwiches for everybody under a lean-to on one side of the lodge.

A Seat in the Shade

He likes to sit in a chair propped against a big shade tree about 20 feet from the lodge. From that point, he can be seen by the negroes lined up out back and the whites going in the front.

Last August, Barret jumped up and tried to wrest a camera from Bill Leaptrott, Press-Scimitar photographer, who was itar photographer, who was about to take his picture. He has interfered with news photography on the grounds in many elections.

E. C. Fowler, veteran election official at Stewartville, is a Barret man. Fowler has had his share of scrapes with curious reporters and photographers.

Old clippings in The Press-Scimitar morgue contain stories 25 and 30 years old, pointing out the same old shenanigans.

But Stewartville just keeps rolling along.

Will Tuesday be different?

Poll Watcher Tells What He Saw at Stewartville

Retired Army general W. A. Danielson, 78, of 4559 Stage Road, came to The Press-Scimitar and asked he be allowed to make a statement about the Stewartville voting precinct in northeast Shelby County. He was a Republican watcher at Stewartville during the Aug. 2 primary.

He said the vote there is controlled by Paul Barret, banker, landowner, County Court member and leader of the rural faction which controls the County Court.

The Stewartville box is a dilapidated old frame lodge building, unused for many years except on election day. Most Memphian and Shelby Countians have probably never seen it — except in photographs in the newspapers.

Hard to Find

It is hard to find and in a remote section of the county near Rosemark.

Gen. Danielson's statement:

"There is a tent about 50 feet behind the election house. In the tent are two or three desks. There is a negro school principal and two teachers in the tent.

"The colored people would come up to the tent. One would say, for example, 'I'm Sadie Jones and this is my husband.'

"The teacher takes a book, looks at it and says, 'Yes, I've got your name.' The teacher crosses out the name and the colored person passes on to the next one and is given a card.

Numbers on Card

"On the card are printed numbers to correspond with numbers on the voting machine the colored person is to vote for.

"Then the negroes would go to the side door and take the card in with them to vote.

"I called for the officer of election. He came out. I said, 'I can't say whether there is a law against this, but it is certainly unethical. You've got these ropes which run between the tent and the election building. The colored people can't get out.'

Quite a Squabble

"We had quite a squabble. He said, 'These colored voters are not going to come in the front door.'

"I watched awhile. Soon they took down one of the ropes. I said, 'That's not enough. How about the other one?' They took it down.

"I want to know how they use that book with the colored peoples' names in it. Do they use it as a means of extending credit or economic benefit to the voters who go thru the tent?"

CD Chief Urges More Shelters

Workers Are Told: Step Up Programs

By United Press International

WASHINGTON. — State officials should move as quickly as possible to provide more public shelters in the event of an attack, according to Civil Defense Chief Stuart L. Pittman.

At the first of eight regional meetings aimed at pushing the federal shelter program, Pittman said the most-asked question during the Cuban crisis was: "What is the address of the nearest shelter."

He urged officials from seven states and the District of Columbia to take advantage of public receptiveness by stepping up their shelter programs, particularly during the next three months.

In reply to your July 23, 1963 inquiry our records show a total of 1,569,118 registered voters in the State of Tennessee as of January 1, 1960. This figure will be substantially correct as of the current date.

There is no break-down of white and negro registered voters in this office. The county election commissions of each county may have such figures available should you care to contact them. GOP Report On Fayette Voters Hit Somerville (AP)—A Republican Party report which showed more registered white voters than white people of voting age in Fayette County was challenged Wednesday by county election officials.

A party study committee reported Fayette had 4,437 white persons of voting age and 6,391 whites registered to vote.

Files of the Fayette Falcon Newspaper show 6,391 registrants as reported, but Editor Ray Coleson said an estimated 2,700 of these are Negroes.

The committee apparently failed to account for Negro voters in Haywood County also. Their figures show 6,500 white registered voters and 5,497 white of voting age.

The 1963 estimates in Haywood show the county now has a voters' registration of about 7,300, but 2,200 of these are Negroes.

An editorial in last week's issue of the Falcon said Republican presidential candidate Richard Nixon carried Fayette County in 1960, the first time a Republican has done so, and questioned the object of the committee in publishing the figures.

J. R. Morton, chairman of the Fayette County Election Commission, said "no Republican party committee has checked our registration lists."

LeMoyne College will conduct a five week humanities seminar for talented high school students, beginning June 15. With the coordination of LeMoyne history professor, Dr. Clifton H. Johnson, the instruction in English composition, speech and drama, literature and historical thought and philosophy, will be taught by graduate students from Yale University who are now doctoral candidates. Advanced students from Grinnell College will assist the Yale professors in teaching the classes. The seminar is designed primarily to attract high school juniors, but it is open to all high school students desiring to apply, as well as high school graduates preparing to enter college this fall. Fee for the entire course is $30 with some scholarships available.

Dr. Hollis Price, president of LeMoyne College (and board member of T.C.H.R.) received the Memphis Newspaper Guild's 1963 Citizenship Award on May 2, 1964. The Newspaper Guild, made up of working newspaper men and women initiated the award in 1946, and have made the presentation annually since. The citation noted his contribution as president of LeMoyne in encouraging leadership and acting as a community influence in education, drama, art, music, and literature. "As an educator, and humanitarian he has raised the eyes and hearts of countless young people toward the hope as well as the challenge of our time...he has worked with courage, devotion, and wisdom with diginity and good humor, for the human rights of all people... and because all people are his people..."

A "Freedom Sunday" mass meeting, sponsored by the Memphis NAACP on May 17, was addressed by Vernon Jordan, assistant to the director of the Southern Regional Council. He urged the audience of 300 to (1) register and vote, (2) to educate and communicate to white America that "this is our land and the Negro is here to stay," and (3) to tell white America that freedom is everybody's business. He called for more meaningful negotiations, and urged Negroes to offer themselves for public office. Mr. Jordan, a graduate of DePauw University and Howard University Law School, stated that it is as important for the Negro to oppose the School prayer amendments before the U. S. Congress as it is to fight for the passage of Civil Rights Legislation.

Federal District Court has given its approval to the Shelby County Board of Education plan to desegregate all its 58 schools by fall. The school board announced its plans to set up laymen's committees to work toward obtaining community acceptance for the desegregation plan. Opponents of the plan noted that it "represents only a willingness to accept an application for a transfer", and does not adequately plan for desegregation of the schools.

MURFREESBORO

In April, the Murfreesboro City Council elected four Councilmen from the nine city precincts. Mr. Robert Scales led the field in number of votes and thus became the first Negro to be elected to the City Council. An analysis of the results shows that Mr. Scales received support across racial lines.

CHATTANOOGA

Under the direction of the Chattanooga Council for Cooperative Action, a regional conference on "Jobs, Freedom, and Citizenship Responsibility" was held on April 14 and 15. Over the two day period, several hundred persons heard a notable array of speakers. Statements and quotations from their addresses are as follows: The Rev. Sam Dodson, chairman of the Governor's Commission on Human Relations: The Commission will make a survey this summer and publish a list of hotels, motels, and community organizations which do not discriminate. The Commission is attempting to support and encourage communities to be ready to conform to Federal Civil Rights legislation when it passes.... Dr. J. E. Lowery: "It is half past the hour of too-late O'clock. Rights are denied, opportunities limited, and our humanity is still in question." Two out of three Negro families live on less than $4,000 while only 27 percent of whites are in this category. "There is no guarantee that as we move toward the greater issues that religious movements can contain the despair and frustration of the American Negroes."....

The Rev. Fred Shuttlesworth: "We don't want to put people out of business: we want to put justice in business." Matt Lynch: In 1935 only 6 per cent of the labor force was skilled; currently it is 40 percent, and by 1975 it will be 60 to 70 percent. This is the reason trade training is so important. The Rev. C. T. Vivian: SCLC has information on Negro buying power of many national products, and it may be necessary to propose a national economic withdrawal against certain firms which have been unwilling to break the cast system. "If you don't respect my person you may not have my dollar." Example: There is no Negro franchized automobile dealer in the USA.... Randolph T. Blackwell on voter registration in the South - we need to gear projects to a community's peculiar problems, such as poverty, despair, and literacy. Need to bring whites into the movement for equality and guard against persons who would pit Negroes against whites.

Howard Sompayrac, Chattanooga Area Literacy Movement: Census report shows 15,000 illiterates in area, but number probably twice this. Financed by contributions program has 52 teachers for 400 students. Students ask training because of job requirements, "I want to read the Bible", newspapers, "write to my grandchild," to shop better, etc... Mrs. Dorothy Cotton; SCLC Education Projects, seek to reach the persons on the very bottom of the ladder. Citizenship training helps adult to understand his community and how it may work for him. Learn to write by writing checks, deposit slips, application forms, voter registration forms, etc. Paul Anthony: "We have repeatedly underestimated opposition in civil rights, and this includes

An Unpublished Letter: 1797

Abigail Adams' Stand On School Integration

From Quincy, Massachusetts, on February 13, 1797, Abigail Adams wrote her husband, John Adams, then Vice President and about to begin his term as President of the United States, a long letter on domestic and farming affairs. She asked to be excused from going to Philadelphia, then the national capital, until fall, because of matters requiring her attention at home, and she related the following incident.

Her original letter remains among the Adams family papers in the Massachusettts Historical Society and has never been published. It is printed here with the permission of the Society and of Harvard University Press, publishers of the comprehensive edition of The Adams Papers now in progress.

"I have been much diverted," Mrs. Adams wrote, "with a little occurrence which took place a few days since and which serves to show how little founded in nature the so much boasted principle of liberty and equality is. Master Heath has opened an evening school to instruct a number of apprentice lads [in] ciphering, at a shilling a week, finding their own wood and candles.

"James desired that he might go. I told him to go with my compliments to Master Heath and ask him if he would take him. He did and Master Heath returned for answer that he would. Accordingly James went. After about a week, Neighbor Faxon came in one evening and requested to speak to me. His errand was to inform me that if James went to school it would break up the school, for the other lads refused to go. 'Pray, Mr. Faxon, has the boy misbehaved? If he has, let the master turn him out of school.' 'Oh, no. There was no complaint of that kind, but they did not choose to go to school with a black boy.' 'And why not object to going to meeting because he does, Mr. Faxon? Is there not room enough in the school for him to take his separate form [bench]?' 'Yes.' 'Did these lads ever object to James' playing for them when at a dance? How can they bear to have a black in the room with them there?' 'Oh, it is not that I object, or my boys. It is some others.' 'Pray, who are they? Why did not they come themselves? This, Mr. Faxon, is attacking the principle of liberty and equality upon the only ground upon which it ought to be supported, an equality of rights. The boy is a freeman as much as any of the young men, and merely because his face is black, is he to be denied instruction? How is he to be qualified to procure a livelihood? Is this the Christian principle of doing to others as we would have others do to us?' 'Oh, ma'am, you are quite right. I hope you won't take any offense.' 'None at all, Mr. Faxon. Only be so good as to send the young men to me. I think I can convince them that they are wrong. I have not thought it any disgrace to myself to take him into my parlor and teach him both to read and write. Tell them, Mr. Faxon, that I hope we shall all go to Heaven together.' Upon which Faxon laughed, and thus ended the conversation. I have not heard any more upon the subject."

current legislation. Dr. Arthur Graham: "In Oak Ridge we underestimated opposition to the public accommodations ordinance, and lost." Percy Williams of the Presidents Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity: Churches are the second largest builder in the nation, coming only after the Federal Government.

There were other notable quotes, but space forbids. The meeting ended with Dick Gregory's comments on the civil rights scene, including, "If the churches had been saying what they ought to in this struggle, we would be saying 'Thank God' today instead of 'Thank the Supreme Court'.

CLEVELAND

Progress and problems in human relations are not confined to the urban centers. A few determined Negro citizens in Cleveland have spearheaded a drive for equal access to places of public accommodation. There has been some success in lunch counter openings in drug and variety stores, but not all. Bradely Memorial Hospital accepts and trains Licensed Practical Nurses in integrated classes, and offers its hospital services without discrimination. The city continues to support a segregated school system for Negroes, including a high school in which there were only 8 graduates in 1964, and 12 in the junior class. According to the mayor there are no plans for change. The Negro school also accepts students from other parts of the county, and from an adjoining county. A textile firm with over two million dollars in Federal contracts during the past 12 months now accepts applications from Negroes, but the personnel director "doesn't know" how many Negroes are employed, or the types of jobs they hold.

NASHVILLE

Since late April, Nashville has been the scene of: large street demonstrations protesting continued segregation in eating facilities; an impressive procession of 150 clergymen through the city to call on the Mayor requesting his leadership for bringing about desegregation; large numbers of pickets of all ages, and frequently bi-racial in make-up, followed by mass arrests; the issuance of an injunction which barred the public sidewalk to pickets in front of Morrison's Cafeteria; name-calling by persons in positions of public trust; considerable rumor and misinformation; the reactivation of the Metropolitan Committee on Human Relations, and the diligent work of the new chairman in his successful quest for the de-segregation of additional eating facilities; the "hard core" hold-outs of several restaurant chains.

Pending in city council is a proposed public accommodations ordinance. A special committee of the council has been named, with the vice-mayor as its chairman, to consider the bill. Meantime, eyes are on the national capitol and the Senatorial "stall-in".

What Nashville seems unwilling to recognize is Negro dissatisfaction with a system of gratuities, (grudingly conceded by the business community) which frustrates and restrains Negroes from participating in the mainstream of the community's life. The Nashville Chamber of Commerce has still to extend membership to Negro business men, and the Nashville Bar Association continues to refuse qualified Negro lawyers.

MEMORANDUM

To: Barbara I. Whitaker

From: Wiley A. Branton

Re: Tennessee and South Carolina Registration

All registration books in Tennessee closed on July 6 and will remain closed until after the August 6 primary. We should now request complete reports from W. C. Patton and from our separate Nashville project regarding their activities during the month of June and for the first week of July.

I learned on my trip to South Carolina last week that the books were closed in nearly every county throughout the state during the month of June on account of the primary, and therefore, you may find that there was no registration for several counties, but this should be verified by each chairman. It appears that the Sixth Congressional District permitted registration in some counties even though the books should have been closed.

QUARTERLY REPORT

TENNESSEE COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

TO: Southern Regional Council

FROM: Katherine Jones

Quarterly Report: June, July, August, 1964

As indicated in the previous quarterly report, all Tennessee has been solely involved in the recent political contests. The primary on August 6 settled some of the state contests, but not all of them. The Republican Party is presenting a slate of able candidates to oppose Democratic candidates for the State Legislature seats in Memphis and Nashville, as well as East Tennessee, and in some of the other districts which had formerly been considered wholly Democratic. From my personal white contacts in rural west Tennessee, it is anticipated that the usual solidly Democratic vote will be almost solidly Republican. This is really not related to a change in convictions, but retribution against the Kennedy-Johnson administration which they feel has betrayed them. This was the vote which Governor Clement courted in the August primary. It will be stronger in the general election because many Republicans felt it would be easier to beat Ross Bass in a general election than Governor Clement. What all this means to the Council is that our leadership has priorities other than Council activity. This will continue until after the November 3 election.

Some important conclusions have developed from the August primary. The Negro vote is enough to sway elections in the state - not enough to win on its own. In cities such as Memphis, Nashville, and Knoxville it is better organized and not to be gained by appeals of the old political henchmen. This level of sophistication has not been achieved in smaller population areas such as Jackson, Tennessee and Fayette county, where there were inroads of politicians who worked successfully to divide the Negro vote. Considerable money was spent by the Clement forces in the Knoxville area without success. According to Negro leadership in Knoxville Negro citizens took the money but voted against Clement. Negroes contributed to partisan campaigns, sometimes rejecting funds from the candidates headquarters. The Republican Party in Middle and West Tennessee has obviously written off the Negro vote, and is attempting to exploit the resentment against Negro gains. (See political clippings of early September enclosed).

CIVIL RIGHTS ACT

Following the Atlanta meeting of June 24 and 25, Mrs. Irving Hand gathered together representatives from the same women's groups who participated in Atlanta. It was not a good time of the year since many of the elected leaders of the organizations were out of the city. In addition, Mrs. Hand had to overcome some resistance from the membership of her own organization

COMPILATION OF 1964 COUNTY ELECTION COMMISSION QUESTIONNAIRES

The attached Compilation sets forth current statistics on voter registration, polling places, and use of voting machines as well as 1960 population census and 1962 general election for governor figures. Questionnaires were completed by each county election commission at the request of this office. The county election commission is the custodian of voter registration records in each county of the state.

Daily changes occur in voter registrations on account of new registrations, deaths, marriages, moves of place of residence, etc. However, the Compilation is believed to be as accurate and as current as is possible.

It is our intent to compile and publish this information at two year intervals. Comments and suggestions will be appreciated.

STATE, COUNTY & CITY MAP DISTRIBUTION

The Tennessee State Highway Department in cooperation with the U.S. Bureau of Public Roads through the Highway Planning Survey Division has prepared and made available to interested agencies and individuals the following series of maps.

(1) County General Highway & Transportation Maps (Scale: 1"=1 mile). These maps show all passable roads by surface types existing at the time of the inventory, all cultural items adjacent to or visible from the road, major drainage, railroads, and incorporated towns. Each county is drafted on one map sheet except the following: Knox (3 sheets); Blount, Davidson, Hamilton, Shelby and Sullivan (2 sheets each). The additional sheets consist of areas congested in culture which are mapped to a larger scale than the map sheet proper. Blue-line prints are available at $1.00 per sheet.

(2) County General Highway & Transportation Maps (Scale: 1/2"=1 mile). These maps are identical to the full-scale maps described above. Black on white lithographic prints are available at the following prices: 1 to 9 prints (inclusive) $0.25 each; 10 to 24 prints (inclusive) $0.20 each; 25 to 99 prints (inclusive) $0.15 each; 100 or more prints $0.10 each. Complete set of the 95 counties (102 sheets) $10.00. No additional charge for inset sheets on this type map.

(3) State General Highway Map (Scale: 1"=8 miles). This map shows all State and Federal numbered highways with surface types, all railroads, incorporated towns, rivers, and State and Federal parks. Blue-line prints are available at $1.00 each.

(4) State Traffic Map. This map shows the latest 24-hour annual average traffic by figures and bands on all State and Federal numbered highways. Black on white lithographic prints are available at $0.50 per map.

(5) City Maps (Scales for individual cities vary from a maximum of 1"=264' to a minimum of 1"=1056'). This series of maps are of incorporated places only and show all city limits and streets with names and surface types, State and Federal numbered highways and streams within each place. Job Opportunity, Voting Rights Aired At Meeting

DALLAS, Texas — (ANP) — Organized labor and Texas liberals got a kick in the pants by several Negro speakers at the Annual Convention of the United Political Convention here at the Statler Hilton hotel last weekend, when job opportunities and voting education reigned as the top topics for panel discussions. San Antonio school administrator Joe Scott raped labor's knuckles, emphasizing the rivalry between the Negro leadership in the UPO and those who are part of the coalition of Latin Americans, labor and liberals.

New criticisms were also heard of the Texas Department of Public Safety for not hiring Negro highway patrolmen.

A series of speakers called for better vocational training and public education for Negroes, speedier integration and greater job opportunities, as well as voter education that would spur qualified Negroes to seek public office.

The convention opened Friday night with a mammoth banquet at which Georgia Senator Leroy Johnson was keynote speaker. Approximately five hundred heard Senator Johnson plead for a continuing "effort on the part of Negroes everywhere to break through the barriers of racial bias and injustice." He gave a historic backlog of Negro accomplishments in all fields of endeavor, and closed his brilliant address with dramatic proof that "we are somebody, and must be treated like somebody."

On Saturday during a panel discussion, Joe Scott charged:

" There has been progress in many areas in Texas, but one area in which there have been no moves toward employment opportunities is within the apprenticeship courses in the labor movement."

"Coalitions are good when all sides have mutal interests," he said, "There are no Negroes in the craft unions—No Negro carpenters, or electricians on the job."

Scott said, "we don't think much [redacted] liberal who won't give us any [redacted] when he has the opportunity. [redacted] discrimination [redacted]

K. R. M. Crooks, an official of the National Urban League told the group:

Negro leaders must motivate and stimulate the youth to better themselves educationally. He said that while the average income in Dallas is $100 a year over the national average, the income of non-whites is $70 under the average for the rest of the country."

"The average person in Dallas gets 11.8 years of school compared with a national average of 10.2. Yet the average Negro gets only 8.8 years of school in Dallas." he said.

A. Maceo Smith, Group Relations Officer for the FHA called integration of neighborhoods the "unfished business of the American Negro." He told the group that they must break down the fallacy that when a Negro moves into a white neighborhood values drop.

Texas Attorney General Waggoner Carr opened his key address with a glowing tribute to J. Philip Crawford, Texas' first State Assistant Attorney General. He said that Crawford had won the respect of the entire state because of his ability.

He opened the panel discussions with an address on "Responsible Citizens Working Together to Meet The Challenge of Change."

"Our form of government," he said, "demands more of the individual than any other system yet devised by man. Possibly, because of this, in the history of the world, the failures of Democracy far outnumber the successes. A nation cannot continue as a Democracy unless its citizens are willing to devote their time and energies to its well being. For freedom and responsibility are opposite sides of the same coin."

"Because we live in a free society, the individual is at liberty to decide the extent he or she will participate in the affairs of society. We, therefore, find, in a significant number of our people, and indifferent attitude towards government and a lack of understanding of citizens working together for the advancement of the country, and unless the individual is willing to accept the responsibilities of citizenship, this great system cannot be perpetuated."

Warning to Demonstrators

Metaphorically speaking, it was a very small straw in a very large wind, but a brief order of the Supreme Court this past Monday may point toward a domestic scene less troubled by flagrant racial disorders.

On Thursday, February 20, the court heard argument in the case of Dion Tyrone Diamond, petitioner, v. the State of Louisiana. On Monday the 24th, the court handed down a brusque nine-word opinion: "The writ of certiorari is dismissed as improvidently granted."

In less lawyerly language, the court here ruled unanimously that the petitioner hadn't a legal leg to stand on. The dismissal of a writ as "improvidently granted" amounts to an apology by the court for ever having agreed to hear a frivolous appeal in the first place.

The significance of this abrupt dismissal lies in the fact that Diamond is an agitator for the Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee, otherwise known as SNICK. He went to Baton Rouge some 13 months ago, and there led a riotous demonstration by students at Southern University. He finally was arrested on old-fashioned breach-of-the-peace charges for encouraging students to run through the halls of the university buildings. The trial court gave him 60 days in jail and a $100 fine.

On appeal, the usual Negro battalions trundled out their familiar legal guns: James M. Nabrit III, Jack Greenberg, Wiley A. Branton, and Johnnie A. Jones. Nabrit himself argued the case. His contention was that the SNICK leader was only exercising his constitutional rights of free speech.

Counsel for the State of Louisiana met the issue head-on: Is flagrant disorderly conduct to be equated with free speech? Have the States and localities been stripped of their police powers? Do "demonstrators" have all the rights, and other citizens none?

It is a mistake to read too much into the Supreme Court's refusals to act, but in this instance, one feels justified by the nature of the argument in suggesting that the high court was giving a clear warning to these racial demonstrators that a level of tolerance has been reached. So long as they keep their demonstrations within the constitutionally protected areas of free speech and peaceful assembly, of course their rights will be made secure. But willful violence, interference with the rights of others, and plain disorderly conduct are not to be excused in the name of the First Amendment.

One can imagine that the Monday order created some consternation in the offices of SNICK, SLICK, CORE, and the NAACP. These organizations have been winning just about everything before the high court for the past ten years. Their lawyers must have been supremely confident that in the Diamond case, the court would agree once more that SNICK can do no wrong and Louisiana can do no right. For the court to have ruled unanimously in Louisiana's favor is bound to have been a terrible shock.

If the court's action serves to temper the violence of the Non-violent Committee, it will have served a splendid purpose. If the decision also encourages law enforcement agencies to limit their arrests of demonstrators to truly meritorious cases of trespass and disorder, still more will be gained. It's said that one swallow doesn't make a summer; this one may.

Texas Negroes to Play Active Role in Campaign

By RICHARD M. MOREHEAD
Austin Bureau of The News

AUSTIN, Texas — Negro political activity this year will be the highest in Texas since Reconstruction days.

The largest number of Negroes in history likely will go to the polls in Texas, possibly in greater proportion than whites.

Texas Negroes are candidates for numerous offices, ranging from school boards to governor. One or two Negro candidates for the State Legislature are considered to have good chances of election.

NO NEGRO has served in the Legislature in 79 years. During the aftermath of the War Between the States, several Negroes held legislative office.

The poll tax — which is widely regarded as a device to keep southern Negroes from voting — has not served such purpose in Texas in recent years. If anything, studies indicate that Texas Negroes have been voting in slightly higher ratio than white citizens.

A Southern Regional Council study in 1958, one of the most extensive made of Negro voting habits, reported that 226,818 Texas Negroes qualified to participate in the off-year election. Perhaps half this many actually voted. The Texas vote for governor that year totaled 1,317,492.

IN 1960, the U.S. census showed Texas had a Negro population of 1,187,125, about 12 per cent of the April 1, 1960, total of 9,579,677. Total population now has gone above 10,000,000, and by 1970 is projected to be 1,450,000 non-whites and 10,260,000 whites, according to Prof. R. L. Skrabanek of Texas A&M.

Unofficial estimates indicate that while Negroes comprise only 12 per cent of Texas' total population, they cast more than 14 per cent of the total vote in the 1960 and 1962 elections. Negroes have been voting heavily in the cities, and also in many East Texas counties.

Two years ago, Texans cast 2,311,670 votes for presidential candidates, an all-time high. A considerably larger number is eligible to vote this year. Poll tax payments in most places set records, and additional hundreds of thousands qualified to vote with age exemptions of free. The latter group, still being counted, can vote only for president, vice-president, U.S. senator and congressmen. In some cities, racial group leaders made strong bids to qualify their followers for the free votes, if they failed to pay poll taxes.

THE NEGRO population in Texas doubtless exceeds 1,200,000 today. Participation in the recent past indicates about 170,000 will go to the polls this year. However, some estimate as many as 300,000 Negroes will vote in Texas in 1964. If whites vote in the same proportion, the state's turnout would exceed 2,500,000, an unprecedented figure.

At a rally here last year, a Negro civil rights speaker claimed the race could get out a vote of 825,000 in Texas if everyone qualified. Fewer than half the eligibles of any race pay poll taxes or claim exemptions to vote.

WITHOUT question, the Negro is increasingly important in Texas as a voter and candidate. The Rev. M. T. Banks, a Negro from Beaumont, is running for governor. But on past performances, most Negroes probably will support Don Yarborough for Governor. U.S. Sen. Ralph Yarborough is a favorite among Negroes also.

Gov. John Connally, who has appointed several Negroes to state offices, has a following among that race but has been criticized by some Negro leaders for objecting to portions of the civil rights bill pending in Congress.

Houston has a Negro school board member, and she has often been at odds with white members.

Connally, Negroes Huddle on Politics

1-3

AUSTIN, Texas (UPI) — Gov. John Connally and some 75 Negro leaders from across the state huddled secretly Friday, outlining tactics to attract a large Negro vote for Connally in his primary race against Don Yarborough.

Connally told leaders of the United Political Organization (UPO), a pro-Connally Negro group organized in the 1962 campaign, that he is "physically unable" to conduct a major campaign this year personally because of wounds he received in the assassination of President Kennedy.

"It's up to you," the governor was quoted as telling the Negro leaders.

The Rev. Moses P. Timms of Tyler, a Baptist minister and member of the UPO board of directors, told United Press International that a large number of Negroes who supported Connally in 1962 had defected.

Timms called Yarborough "a good promiser—he'll get a lot of votes," but said UPO hoped to deliver the Negro bloc to Connally.

Connally spoke for about 40 minutes to the group, then his brother, Merrill Connally of Floresville, instructed the group on precinct work, Timms said.

Merrill Connally will be a campaign manager for the governor, Timms said.

He said the governor, his arm still in a cast, told UPO he has not recovered from his wounds enough to campaign as extensively as he did in 1962, when he edged Yarborough by 26,000 votes.

Connally received a sizeable number of Negro votes in the 1962 general election against Republican Jack Cox, but later made television and press statements opposing the public accommodations section of the federal civil rights bill.

Many Negro leaders bolted the UPO organization at that time and moved behind Yarborough.

Timms said that UPO, defunct in recent months, is being fully reorganized to help the governor. He said the Rev. Rhett James of Dallas, a strong Connally supporter, will be a leader in the campaign effort.

A record number of poll taxes were sold to Negro Texans this year, making the minority vote especially important.

Yarborough is said to be counting on heavy Negro support in his effort to defeat Connally.

'Renegade Whites' Draw Dowdy's Fire

15

By JOHN MASHEK
Washington Bureau of The News

WASHINGTON — Rep. John Dowdy of Athens charged Monday in his weekly newsletter that secret meetings were being promoted in his Seventh Congressional District by "renegade whites" to incite Negroes into "law violations and violence."

Dowdy did not disclose any names in his letter. His office declined to name anyone, referring questions on the charge to the congressman. Dowdy is in his district campaigning against challenger Benton Musselwhite of Lufkin for nomination in the Democratic primary. Two years ago, Dowdy was nominated over Musselwhite by only 41 votes.

While not mentioning Musselwhite or any backers by name, Dowdy also charged that racial groups in Washington had sent money into his district to "purge me as congressman because I have resisted their diabolical aims."

Dowdy also referred to law violations in Box 18 at Lufkin in the 1962 primary in which he said 151 poll taxes were accounted for giving residence as a small shack.

Dowdy's office said Musselwhite got 86 per cent of the vote in that box in the 1962 election.

"More and more people are realizing that Duval County is not alone in efforts to steal elections, and closer looks are being taken in many counties," Dowdy said.

Dowdy solicited help from his newsletter recipients "of any violations you learn about." He said this would help assure honest elections, adding that he would turn the information over to proper authorities.

Dowdy also had comments on the racial situation nationally. He said renegades were following the Communist policy by stirring up violence and discord. He accused the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the Congress on Racial Equality of the recent demonstrations in Florida and Alabama.

The East Texas Democrat said demonstrations would continue to spread because federal authorities would not permit local enforcement officers to protect the peace.

"At the federal level, it seems there is no courage at all in the face of violence," he said.

2 Incumbents Win in Texas Primary Vote

DALLAS, (UPI) — Senator Ralph Yarborough, a liberal backed by President Johnson, forged ahead of a conservative political novice Saturday night in a bitterly contested primary election for the Democratic Senate nomination. Republican conservative Barry Goldwater ran away with the field in a Republican presidential straw vote.

Governor John Connally, who was wounded by the assassin who shot President Kennedy, left Don Yarborough (no relation to the senator) far behind. Connally piled up an almost 4-to-1 lead.

With 149 of 254 counties reporting, Senator Yarborough had 215,742 votes to 164,307 for Dallas broadcast executive Gordon McLendon.

Connally has 275,676 votes to 110,221 for Don Yarborough, a Houston lawyer.

Goldwater, in a preferential vote that was not binding on delegates to the Republican national convention, ran up 43,663 votes, or about a 3-1 margin, over the combined votes of his opponents. Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge got 5,113 write-in votes.

Re: TEXAS REGISTRATION

I talked with Larry Goodwyn today in Austin, and he estimates Texas registration at white - 1,840,000, (this includes Latins), and Negro - 165,000.

We can arrive at an estimate of present total Negro registration in Texas another way. We have dependable figures for certain East Texas counties for 1958-1961 and currently. The current figures coming from the Rev. Thomas, Democratic Coalition man in Lufkin. We take the percentage of decrease in those counties between 1958 and the present, and apply that percentage to the 1958 total for all counties. The percentage is 16.6. This procedure gives an estimate of 189,166. Thus, we can estimate reliably that current Negro registration in Texas is between 165,000 and 189,166.

Re: TEXAS REGISTRATION

At Wiley's suggestion that we try to call Bill Durham in Dallas to get his opinion of our estimation of Negroes registered in Texas as between 165,000 and 190,000. We were unable to get in touch with Durham, undoubtedly because Durham was attending the functions on the occasion of the President's visit to Dallas, and then, later, because of the assassination. We will try to get in touch with Durham on Monday.

time to try to settle a problem—which, after all, involves a consideration of economic facts—by resort to economic force. As a friend of management and of labor, I raise my voice in plea at this time to the carriers and to the brotherhoods to accept the President's industrial statesmanship proposal. The President's recommendation to the parties that Mr. Justice Goldberg be accepted by both sides to settle this dispute by voluntary arbitration is one which is in the best interest of all concerned including the country.

In closing, Mr. President, I also wish to pay my very highest compliments and respects to two men who have done yeoman service for the American people and the parties to this dispute from the very beginning. I have followed it quite closely, and have been involved in some of the conversations and discussions in respect to it.

Secretary of Labor Wirtz and Assistant Secretary of Labor Jim Reynolds have rendered a distinguished service of industrial statesmanship, also, in trying to lead the parties to an amicable and commonsense adjustment of this dispute. The country is indebted to them.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I join the distinguished senior Senator from Oregon in what he has had to say about the project which has been given to Mr. Justice Goldberg. I wish to express my wholehearted approval of the procedure being followed by the President of the United States, and I express the hope that in his endeavors Mr. Justice Goldberg will be as successful as was the senior Senator from Oregon with the committee which he headed in bringing about a satisfactory settlement of the longshoremen's strike.

Mr. MORSE. I thank the Senator very much.

DESEGREGATION IN TEXAS

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I have consistently maintained that very great progress has been made in voluntary desegregation in various public accommodations in the South, and indeed, throughout the rest of the country. There recently appeared in the Temple Daily Telegram an article by Ronnie Thompson entitled "Racial Curtain in Texas Gradually, Calmly Lifted."

I believe this is an excellent account of what has been done in my State in voluntary desegregation. The article reads in part:

> Demonstrations have been few. Violence has been almost nil.
>
> In many cases, desegregation in Texas has been voluntary.
>
> * * * * *
> Some businessmen have integrated silently without fanfare. Biracial committees are working in several cities, seeking a course of action.
> Many city councils, chambers of commerce, and business associations have disclosed plans to work with mixed committees of Negroes and whites.

This article cites many instances of progress that has been made in my State. I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RACIAL CURTAIN IN TEXAS GRADUALLY, CALMLY LIFTED

(By Ronnie Thompson)

The racial curtain that has existed for decades between Negroes and whites in Texas hotels, restaurants, theaters, and other public facilities is gradually and calmly being raised.

In many areas where strict segregation was once enforced, a Negro now can get service.

Demonstrations have been few. Violence has been almost nil.

In many cases, desegregation in Texas has been voluntary. A marked increase has been noted since recent uprisings in southern cities such as Birmingham and Jackson.

Some businessmen have integrated silently, without fanfare. Biracial committees are working in several cities, seeking a course of action.

Many city councils, chambers of commerce, and business associations have disclosed plans to work with mixed committees of Negroes and whites.

Figures on desegregation moves in Texas don't exist. Businessmen appear to think that the less said, the better.

Ten of Texas largest cities have taken long steps to end racial discrimination. These include:

Houston: Mostly privately owned public facilities are integrated, including hotels and restaurants. Except for a few sit ins several years ago and an Emancipation Proclamation Day mass meeting this year, no incidents have been reported.

Dallas: A community relations committee of white and Negro leaders recently reported that every phase of the business community had responded exclusively by voluntary action. Some hotels and restaurants are integrated. The State fair music hall admits Negroes.

San Antonio: The city council committee for voluntary desegregation set July 4 as a target date for voluntary desegregation of all private businesses to integrate on a voluntary basis. Integration pledges came from 42 restaurants, 38 motels, the San Antonio Motel and Hotel Association, and all public bowling alleys. All downtown lunch counters serve Negroes. All theaters are integrated, although one still maintains a Negro box office.

Fort Worth: A race relations committee recently said all public facilities would begin serving all customers regardless of race. This included all hotels, restaurants, theaters, department stores, and athletic contests. Complete desegregation was timed to coincide with the desegregation of the city's schools.

El Paso: Total integration exists in this city where only about 4,650 of the 310,000 area residents are Negroes. The city council approved an ordinance a year ago prohibiting any hotel, motel, restaurant, or theater from refusing to serve any persons because of race, creed, or color.

Austin: The capital has been in the forefront of integration moves several years. Some 62 eating places which make 70 percent of cafe sales are desegrating. All downtown hotels are integrated. The chamber of commerce recently passed a resolution urging all local business voluntarily to integrate their facilities.

Corpus Christi: Most downtown coffee shops, theaters, and many restaurants are integrated. Negro leaders say bowling alleys, hotels, and motels are the major holdouts to total integration. A Negro spokesman predicted hotels, motels, and restaurants will fully integrate soon.

Amarillo: The Panhandle city is generally desegregated, although some businessmen from this British company at $45,886.80 each, or a total cost of $2,156,679.60. Then they sold the same equipment back to the same company from whom it had been purchased for $114,500. Then the Government of Portugal, which was receiving aid from our country, bought these same predictors for $493,500 and paid for them with our money. The equipment, without even being uncrated, was shipped directly to the Portuguese Government with the crates bearing the marking, "Free Issue."

The Comptroller General found evidence to show that 9 months before the equipment was sold as surplus to the Cossor Radar & Electronics, Ltd., both the headquarters of the U.S. European Command and the Department of the Army had been notified that the British firm was negotiating with Portugal to sell them this material should they be able to obtain it as surplus.

At this point I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the two letters dated March 26 and June 7, 1963, signed by the Comptroller General in which he confirms this strange transaction.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, March 26, 1963.

Hon. JOHN J. WILLIAMS,
U.S. Senate.

DEAR SENATOR WILLIAMS: Reference is made to your request of January 21, 1963, that we conduct an investigation and report on our findings regarding an allegation that certain American military equipment stored in a British facility in England was declared surplus by the British and was not offered to the various North Atlantic Treaty Organization countries, as is customary, but instead was sold as scrap. It was further alleged that the equipment was subsequently sold by the purchaser, a British concern, to Portugal for $250,000; that the equipment still bore the stamp of being a free gift from the United States; and that an officer with the military assistance advisory group in the United Kingdom falsified that required procedures had been followed.

We have reviewed the available official records concerning this transaction maintained by Headquarters, U.S. European Command in Paris, France, and determined the following regarding the above allegations:

1. The equipment referred to consisted of radar predictors furnished as grant aid to the United Kingdom under the military assistance program and subsequently declared surplus to its needs.

2. In September 1955 the British Government informed the military assistance advisory group, United Kingdom, that it had large numbers of the predictors on hand in excess of its requirements. The predictors were stored in British military depots in England.

3. The surplus predictors were properly reported to Headquarters, U.S. European Command, which in turn directed the military assistance advisory groups in North Atlantic Treaty Organization countries to determine whether there were any military assistance program requirements for the equipment. All the military assistance advisory groups, except those in Turkey and Portugal, reported that there were no requirements.

4. Surplus predictors were subsequently furnished to Turkey from the excess British stocks. The military assistance advisory group in Portgual had tentatively proposed that 48 predictors be provided to Portugal as grant aid under the military assistance program but withdrew the requirement in June 1956 on the basis of programing criteria which prohibited military assistance program support to the Portuguese units earmarked to receive the equipment.

5. On December 30, 1958, 49 operable and 8 inoperable surplus predictors were sold to Cossor Radar & Electronics, Ltd., on a negotiated basis for £41,000 ($114,500). The military assistance advisory group, United Kingdom, had estimated the scrap value of this equipment to be $250 each, or $11,750. Available records indicate that the predictors had been manufactured in part and assembled by Cossor Radar & Electronics, Ltd., which was the sole source for this equipment for the British Ministry of Supply.

6. Information supplied by the Portuguese Ministry of the Army to the military assistance advisory group, Portugal, indicates that the Portuguese Government purchased the predictors from Cossor Radar & Electronics, Ltd., in December 1958 for £3,750 each, or £176,250 ($493,500) for 47 predictors, to be delivered in like-new condition.

7. Vouchers accompanying the predictors sold to Portugal by Cossor Radar & Electronics, Ltd., bore the notation "Free issue." We have been informed that this is an internal term used by and peculiar to supply procedures within United Kingdom military organizations and was not a notation placed on the equipment by the United States at the time the material was provided to the United Kingdom as grant military aid.

8. We found no evidence that an officer with the military assistance advisory group in the United Kingdom falsely advised his superiors that required disposal procedures had been followed. The records show that the sale of surplus predictors to Cossor Radar & Electronics, Ltd., was preceded by proper notifications to higher headquarters and the sale was authorized by the Department of the Army and Headquarters, U.S. European Command. The military assistance advisory group in the United Kingdom had formally advised appropriate headquarters of the excess declaration, and required screening was conducted to determine whether the equipment was needed for military assistance program requirements in other countries.

On the basis of the documents and data reviewed, we found that personnel assigned to the military assistance advisory group in the United Kingdom followed prescribed procedures concerning the disposal and sale of the surplus predictors. Nine months before the equipment was sold to Cossor Radar & Electronics, Ltd., the military assistance advisory group, United Kingdom, also notified Headquarters, U.S. European Command, and the Department of the Army that the British firm was negotiating for its resale to free world nations, including Portugal. Nevertheless, we could find no evidence that the European Command or the Department of the Army made any attempt to sell the equipment directly to the Portuguese Government under military assistance sales procedures, and we could obtain no explanation as to why this was not done.

We would be pleased to discuss this matter with you or your staff if you so desire.

Sincerely yours,

JOSEPH CAMPBELL,
Comptroller General of the United States.

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, June 7, 1963.

Hon. JOHN J. WILLIAMS,
U.S. Senator.

DEAR SENATOR WILLIAMS: Reference is made to your letter dated April 12, 1963, re-maintain a segregated operation. A major problem does not exist because less than 5 percent of the population is Negro. About 30 Negroes lined up in front of a theater last week to buy tickets and were refused while they were en masse. Later two Negroes were admitted.

Lubbock: Some 72 cafe owners said this month they had integrated. The action was taken, a spokesman said, "to continue racial harmony."

Beaumont: C. O. Herbert, president of the Beaumont Chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said last week all race barriers had been broken and residents were complying in all areas with NAACP demands for equal rights. Major hotels are integrated, he said. A spokesman for local theaters, now segregated, said a significant announcement concerning the policy toward seating Negroes with whites will be made Monday.

Many other cities in the State have taken action about segregation.

Marshall, in deep east Texas where the Negro population is extremely large, has held at least one public meeting recently to discuss race relations.

A few years ago, hundreds of college students in Marshall staged demonstrations against segregation. Many landed in jail. The city remains generally segregated.

Waco's Chamber of Commerce is working with restaurant owners on plans for desegregation. Lunch counters integrated without incident some time ago, although hotels and theaters still bar Negroes.

Laredo generally is segregated. Hotels accommodate Negroes attending conventions and Negroes in the annual Border Olympics stop at some local hotels.

Gov. John Connally recently said Texas is "extremely fortunate at this point that we have been able to make very substantial progress without the difficulties which other parts of the Nation have had.

"We have much to be done, but I think the most successful way to do it is on a voluntary basis."

He said he had been working behind the scenes in meetings with hotel and restaurant owners in an attempt to drop the racial barrier.

Even if a city announces total desegregation, it does not necessarily follow that the city is completely open to the Negro.

There often are holdouts—businessmen who absolutely refuse to serve a Negro, under any circumstances. Many others maintain a wait-and-see attitude.

TEACHING TRUTH ABOUT REDS

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, on June 29 there appeared on the editorial page of the Chicago American an article by John Chamberlain, well-known columnist and widely regarded for his incisive discourses on governmental matters, on the subject of "Teaching Truth About Reds." I believe Mr. Chamberlain's views merit wide circulation and, therefore, request unanimous consent that they be made a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TEACHING TRUTH ABOUT REDS

(By John Chamberlain)

When John Foster Dulles was Secretary of State, it was Washington that seemed bent on making it certain that coexistence with Russia would not be sought on terms that might ultimately prove to be disadvantageous to the West. But while Dulles pursued the balance will be paid into the special fund.

Therefore, I do not believe there is any difference. There is no question that the United States will renege under the compromise as compared with last year's bill.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I believe the Senator stated that there is a ceiling of $25,000 on each claim. Is that correct?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That is correct.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Will the surplus in the special fund be under the control of the Treasury of the United States or the treasury of the Republic of the Philippines?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. As I understand, it is in the Treasury, in funds already appropriated. Upon agreement by the President of the United States and the President of the Philippines, it will immediately be transferred to the Bank of the Philippines or to the treasury of the Philippines, in accordance with that agreement.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a last question?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. What would be the prospect of reinstituting the so-called Fulbright formula, according to which the surplus would be placed in a special fund under the control of the Philippine Government, as originally proposed by the Senator who is presenting the conference report, the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, such fund to be used for economic and social development, including educational projects, farm reforms, and so forth?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. There have been three conferences with the House, and the House conferees were adamant in their attitude. There was no agreement in the last conference. I saw no prospect of agreement on that point. I did not know which way to turn. That is what sometimes happens. I consider that under the compromise a substantial amount will go to projects agreed upon by the President of the Philippines and the President of the United States, which projects are in the areas I mentioned, of educational improvements, and vocational education, and training of teachers.

This compromise fully measures up to the original objective of the rehabilitation of the Philippine economy, because this is an integral part of any such rehabilitation program. This part of the bill is entirely consistent with the original purpose of the Rehabilitation Act of 1946. I do not see how there can be any legitimate complaint that this is a departure from the original objective.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Even though the formula known as the Fulbright formula has been displaced by other language?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I would have preferred the formula that the Senate had adopted, but we were confronted with the views of the Members of the other body, and they would not accept our view. This is the best compromise that could be arrived at.

Leslie:

Some Texas figures you would want (don't say where you got 'em):

1,973,000 holders of poll tax receipts

381,000 holders of exeption certificates

296,000 holders of voting affidavits making a total of 2,650,000 people in Texas who are qualified in one way or another to vote.

Subtract the 230,000 estimated Negro voters leaves 2,420,000 qualified white voters.

Incidentally, a Houston paper recently estimated that there are 250,000 Negro voters in Tex.

* The Tax Assessor-Collector gave us the information over the telephone, because his January Report has not been received.

 In a few cases the reports have not been received and for that reason the Tax Assessor-Collectors gave us an estimate of the number of Poll Tax Receipts and Exemption Certificates issued. In other cases we found errors as to the total number of receipts and certificates that were reported, and we have not received a reply from those Assessor-Collectors advising what change should be made.

In several counties the number of exemption certificates issued will include a few 1959 certificates, that were used in voting at the general election in 1960, and those certificates cannot be used in voting in elections held since January 31, 1961. Due to these facts a slight change will be made in some of the counties, when we receive and make a final audit of the reports.

1963 VOTING POLL TAX RECEIPTS AND EXEMPTION CERTIFICATES

ISSUED DURING THE PERIOD OCTOBER 1, 1963 THROUGH JANUARY 31, 1964
(AND IN SOME INSTANCES THE EXEMPTION CERTIFICATES RUN THROUGH MARCH 31, 1964)

TO BE USED IN VOTING DURING THE PERIOD FEBRUARY 1, 1964 THROUGH JANUARY 31, 1965

-ALSO-

POLL TAX NOT PAID RECEIPTS ISSUED DURING THE PERIOD FEBRUARY 5, 1964 THROUGH MARCH 6, 1964
TO BE USED IN VOTING FOR FEDERAL OFFICES ONLY
FOLLOWING MARCH 6, 1964 THROUGH JANUARY 31, 1965

This exhibit shows the voting poll tax receipts and exemption certificates and the poll tax not paid receipts issued in each county, as compiled from the reports filed with this Department by the County Tax Assessor-Collectors.

MEMORANDUM

Re: Telephone Conversations with Larry Goodwyn

On 3/10/64, Larry Goodwyn called regarding the statistical report prepared on 1/28/64. He was particularly concerned about the estimate of 380,000 non-white registrants in Texas. He indicated that he felt this was a 1964 estimate, and the 1963 figure should be 180,000, the number of poll tax actually paid for participation in last year's elections. He added that there were about 200,000 poll tax payers, and 60,000 holders of certificates for the Federal elections only.

In four major Texas cities, Houston, Dallas, San Antonio, and Fort Worth, there was a total increase of about 332,000 new registrants over 1960 figures as compared with an increase of 180,000 in 1963.

Following is a breakdown of total registration in selected Texas cities:

City	1960	1964	Estimated Negro Increase - 1964
Houston	324,000	452,000	11,000
Dallas	226,000	333,000	30,000
San Antonio	123,000	177,500	20,000
Fort Worth	125,000	170,000
Jefferson County	72,000	90,000
Corpus Christi	47,000	51,000
El Paso	46,000	62,000
Galveston	41,000	49,000
Austin	47,000	75,000

In San Jacinto, there are now more Negroes registered than whites. In Polk County, 41% of the qualified voters are Negro.

It was also stated that $29,176.36 was spent by Labor and Liberals in a "Get Out the Vote" campaign during the free election period.

On 5/19/64, we had telephone contact again with L. Goodwyn. He was (and still is) in El Paso, assisting a Coalition-supported candidate, Malcolm McGregor, who will be in a run-off for a seat in the State Legislature on June 2.

RP 3-22

In this conversation, Larry gave some estimates on Negro registration in selectdch areas:

County	1963	1964
Jefferson (Beaumont & Pt. Arthur	8,967	17,000
Dallas (Dallas)	20,705	52,000
McLennan (Waco)	3,931	5,840
Travis (Austin)	4,827	7,080
Tarrant (Ft. Worth)	8,737	12,000
Bexar (San Antonio)	10,000	12,800
65 E. Texas Cities	60,000	90,000
Harris (Houston)	70,135*	90,425*

*In 43 entirely Negro precincts, the registration was 59,635 in 1963 and 67,425 (poll tax payers) in 1964 plus 9,000 free certificate holders. In 22 other precincts with heavy Negro population, there were 10,000 Negro voters in 1963 and 14,000 in 1964. The poll tax lists are not divided by race and this count was done by workers in Houston from the official lists.

The number of qualified Negro voters has increased from 162,000 in 1962 to 186,802 in 1963 to about 285,000 in 1964. This 285,000 figure includes the free electors. There has been an increase of about 100,000 (40%) since 1963.

Regarding free electors, Larry estimated about 80,000 total for the state, and 60,000 are estimated to be Negro. These are concentrated primarily in the metropolitan areas. He indicated that in many areas, no one qualified as a free elector. (This is substantiated by report recently received from the office of the Secretary of State). There were campaigns in many areas deliberately calculated to discourage persons from seeking certificates to participate in Federal elections.

On 5/26/64, in another phone conversation, Larry indicated that the registration in Texas is probably 150,000 to 200,000 more than the official reports show. Persons over 60 years of age do not have to pay the annual poll tax of $1.75. In cities over 10,000 in population, this is not a requirement. On election day, these persons can present acceptable proof of age and will be permitted to cast their vote.

JUL 20 1963

July 18, 1963

Honorable Lewis E. Martin
Vice-President
National Democratic Executive Committee
1730 K Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Martin:

We are now working on our program for our poll tax and/or registration drive to begin in October. We are working in a campaign to get out the vote in November when the issue of abolishing the payment of the poll tax as a prerequisite for voting will be voted upon.

The Texas Council of Voters has joined with the Latin-Americans, Labor and independent democrats in the campaign to get out the vote for the November election on the poll tax issue.

We are now working on a joint program to push the registration drive.

The Texas Council of Voters carried on a campaign for the President and the Vice-President in 1960. The largest number of Negro voters in the history of Texas voted that year. We have in Texas approximately one million, seven hundred thousand potential Negro and Latin-American voters. The leaders of both groups have agreed to unite in our future political program. A group of leaders from each of these groups will sit down somewhere in Texas between now and Labor Day and map out a program that will carry us through the election in 1964. We will need both advice and financial assistance in our efforts.

Texas Council of Voters was able to raise all of its money to finance the 1960 campaign. We have a greater job, however, to do between now and the election to be held in 1964 than we had in 1960, in that we hope to have 65 per cent of the Negro and Latin-American voters qualified to vote, then we will be compelled to follow through to get the Negro and Latin-American voters to the polls on election day.

If the Democratic Party is to carry Texas, we must have the Negroes and Latin-Americans vote in large numbers to fill the vacuum that has been made in the democratic rank by the conservative democrats going to the Republican Party. We have nowhere else to look for votes to fill this vacuum.

We will certainly appreciate any advice and aid that you can give.

I am enclosing photostat copies of news releases concerning recent meetings of the Texas Council, Latin-Americans, liberals and independent democrats.

Respectfully,

W. J. Durham

Connally Petitioned By Negroes

Texas Negro leaders meeting in Dallas Saturday petitioned Gov. John Connally to speedup desegregation in Texas by means of executive orders similar to those issued by the governors of North Carolina and Kentucky.

Citing the action taken by Gov. Bert Combs (Kentucky) and Gov. Terry Sanford (North Carolina) the group asked for an end to segregation in all state facilities including parks and hospitals, all businesses operated in Texas requiring a state license, and all jobs under the direction and supervision of state officials.

The petition was sent to Gov. Connally by telegram after the Hotel Adolphus meeting of the Democratic Coalition, a newly formed liberal group seeking an increased voice in Democratic party affairs.

The petition was signed by 10 members of the subcommittee of the Texas Council of Voters' Executive Committee. It began with a national note:

"We recognize the urgency of the demand for equality of opportunity now being made by Negroes in every area of our country.

"We are persuaded that every means available to our elected officials should be used in meeting the demand of this cause."

Gov. Connally was then asked to issue the broad executive order.

The telegram was signed by Mrs. Erma LeRoy of Houston, W. J. Durham of Dallas, the Rev. C. William Black Jr. of San Antonio, Francis L. Williams of Houston, Willie Melton of Kendleton, Moses LeRoy of Houston, Marion J. Brooks of Fort Worth, B. T. Bonner of Austin and G. J. Sutton of San Antonio.

State's Liberals Join in Coalition

Immediate Goal: 'Participation In Election to Repeal Poll Tax'

By ED COCKE

The sometimes ailing cause of liberal Democrats in Texas was put on an organized basis here Saturday as some 300 liberals from across the state met for the official organization of a new political group known as the Democratic Coalition.

The afternoon-long, closed door meeting in Hotel Adolphus was described as a "leadership group," intended to produce a workable return "to the historic Roosevelt-ian coalition."

On a more practical level, the coalition centered based on support from Negro, labor, Latin-American and liberal-loyal Democratic groups—the traditional "splinter" groups of Texas politics—which the coalition's statement of principles described as "the core of support for the programs, principles and candidates of the national Democratic party."

There was little doubt left about the new organization's practical and immediate aims. The first point in the statement called for "maximum voter participation in the Nov. 8 election to repeal the poll tax."

This move is to be followed by a "grass roots organizing effort . . . with the objective of obtaining the largest possible number of qualified voters for the 1964 primaries and general election."

Desegregation speedup sought, Sec. 2, Page 8.

Specific attention is to be given to "selected precincts and counties" where potential liberal support exists.

Drawing from the four major bodies which comprise its membership, the coalition elected four co-chairmen, who will preside on a revolving basis.

They are W. J. Durham, Dallas attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and president of the Texas Council of Voters; Hank Brown of Austin, president of the state AFL-CIO; Albert Pena, president of the Political Association of Spanish-speaking Organizations, and Franklin Jones Sr. of Marshall, a recognized spokesman for the group known as liberal-loyalist Democrats.

The group adopted the statement of principles, with the addition of an amendment proposed by the Negroes, which was further amended after discussion.

The Negro groups asked for and received a 5-point amendment demanding an equal share in policy making, equal consideration at the polls, no secret sessions and limited support to candidates who would work for equal rights legislation.

The amendment would deny support to candidates "in the untenable position of accepting or defending tokenism or gradualism as symbolized by the voluntary approach to these problems as advocated by the conservative element because of social pressures."

Durham explained that this amendment was offered "because Negroes have participated in coalitions before, had produced and did not receive any benefits for their efforts."

Tarrant County Dist. Atty. Doug Crouch questioned the wording of the amendment on the ground that it limited the appeal to Negroes. His position was backed by AFL-CIO leader Brown who entered the further amendment, adding Latin-Americans, labor and liberal Democrats.

In what appeared to be a compromise all around, the coalition adopted a veto plan under which any one of the recognized factions can void the majority opinion of the others.

The prime targets for voter registration were displayed on charts during the meeting. Included were maps showing potential targets for legislative gains in counties throughout the state, as well as counties with more than 25 per cent Negro population.

Attendance at the meeting was split about evenly among Negroes, Latins and Anglos, and the prepared statement said that it would work through "local labor unions, PASO chapters, voters' leagues, senior citizens, Young Democrats and other loyal organizations."

One of the features of the meeting was a short talk by Randolph T. Blackwell, field director of the Voter Education Project, based in Atlanta, Ga. The Negro vote leader said he was "very impressed with the coalition concept," and anticipated that it may lead to a "stronger voice for minorities in the Democratic party."

Liberals Join In Coalition

Statewide Vote Drive Set By Negroes, PASO, Labor

Liberal Democrats from all over Texas met behind closed doors in Dallas Saturday to mold their dissension-plagued factions into a unified organization in the Democratic Coalition.

Some 300 delegates met at the Hotel Adolphus, then issued a statement of principles which called for a push for poll tax repeal at the election in November.

In addition to poll tax repeal, the statement of principles said the group will work to mobilize the liberal vote throughout the state by concentrating on certain key counties and precincts.

Named as co-chairmen of the [illegible] were Blanche [illegible], Texas AFL-CIO president, Albert Pena, president of the [illegible] of Mexican-American Organizations (PASO); [illegible] Jones of Marshall and Negro attorney W. J. Durham of Dallas.

Those participating in the meeting identified themselves as members of the "four groups which historically in Texas have constituted the core of the support for the programs, principles, and candidates of the national Democratic Party."

The statement said the four groups are the Negroes, the Latin Americans, labor and loyal Democrats.

Negro delegates insisted on an amendment to the statement of principles to include guarantees Negroes will share in group-making, will receive the same consideration at the polls, will be included in all secret sessions and will be offered equal opportunity and protection guarantees by any coalition-backed candidate.

Another amendment pushed by Negroes attending the meeting stated that the coalition will back no candidates or issues that would place Negroes in support of "tokenism or gradualism" as symbolized by the voluntary approach to civil rights problems.

The amendments desired by the Negroes were approved after they were amended to make the guarantees to the Latin Americans and the "loyal, liberal Democrats" as well as the Negroes.

When the meeting was adjourned, a 30-man subcommittee of the executive committee of the Texas Negro Council of Voters shot off a telegram to Gov. John Connally demanding that he issue an executive order to end discrimination in the state.

Attention Mr. Wiley A. Branton, Project Director

Gentlemen:

A few days ago I wrote Mr. Lewis Martin, Vice Chairman of the Democratic Executive Committee and mailed a copy to you in order that you would know what the Texas Council of Voters is doing politically in Texas.

We have been furnishing such information to the National Democratic Executive Committee and Mr. Phil Weightman, of Labor, periodically since 1960, the year Texas Council of Voters was organized.

In order that you might have some idea of Texas Council of Voters, what it is, its program and objectives, and how it operates, I am attaching hereto a mimeographed information sheet for your consideration.

The Council has 927 representatives on its mailing list who are cooperating with it in various sections of Texas and who worked with the Council in 1960 and 1962 in the poll tax drives and in the Council's effort to get out the vote on election day.

You will note that existing organizations are accepted as members of the Council without re-organization and without losing the identity of the existing organizations. By this method, we have been able to bring a large number of existing organizations in addition to the local units into the Council.

This has proven very profitable, for the reason that the size of Texas and the cost and time it would require to set up local units in every area of Texas prohibits us from going out to set up local units in Texas. We simply invite existing organizations to become affiliated with the Council and many of the already existing organizations are now affiliated with the Council and did effective work in the 1960 and 1962 poll tax drives.

I am enclosing also herewith a photostat copy of two (2) news articles concerning a Coalition recently formed between Labor, Latin Americans, independent liberal democrats and Texas Council of Voters (composed of Negro and Latin American voters with a small number of independent liberal non-Negro democrats).

The Coalition was set up so as to give each member of the Coalition veto power, thus preventing the Negro voter and the Latin American voter from being committed to any issue or the candidacy of any candidate which in the opinion of the leaders of these groups was not in the best interest of such voters.

There has been a meeting between the leaders of Texas Council and the organization of the Latin Americans in addition to the Coalition, and an agreement reached between the Latin American voters and the Negro voters that they will sit down together and pool their voting strength in the coming elections and will not split in their support of candidates as they have heretofore done.

The Latin Americans agree now that they need the support and cooperation of the Negro voters, and it is obvious to the Negro leaders that they need the united front and cooperation of the Latin American voters.

There are in Texas potential Negro and Latin American voters aggregating approximately one million seven hundred thousand and for the first time the Latin Americans and Negroes have made a realistic appraisal of their past mistakes and potential strength and what must be done to make this voting strength effective.

We are all amateurs in politics. We need advice and counseling, as well as financial assistance.

I believe an examination of the number of Negroes who voted in 1960 will demonstrate that the Negro vote put Texas in the democratic column in 1960.

We solicit your advice and help.

Very truly yours,

W. J. Durham,

TEXAS COUNCIL OF VOTERS

WHAT IT IS, ITS PROGRAM AND OBJECTIVES

Prior to August 1960, there was no organization composed of Negro citizens on a State-Wide basis, attempting to make the Negro vote effective, through political education, in his fight for first-class citizenship and equal opportunities for all citizens in Texas.

PREAMBLE IN THE CONSTITUTION OF THE COUNCIL

Humbly invoking the blessing of Almighty God, the members of the Texas Council of Voters consider it imperative and necessary to band together for the purpose of perpetuating these truths; that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, among these are the Freedom of Speech, Freedom of Religion, Freedom of Assembly, Freedom of Association, life liberty and the pursuit of happiness. To secure and maintain these rights it is the considered judgment of the members of the Texas Council of Voters that every citizen must qualify to vote and consistently exercise his right to vote; therefore we ordain and establish this Constitution and By-Laws for the government of the Texas Council of Voters.

PURPOSE AND AIMS OF THE COUNCIL

1. To work for a sound and economical administration of the affairs of government, and to work and vote for candidates who will work for the protection, by the government, of all of its citizens, and for benefits flowing from the operation of government for all citizens, on the same basis and to encourage each citizen to discharge his responsibility to his government.
2. To encourage every citizen in Texas to qualify to vote and to exercise such rights to vote at all elections held within the State of Texas and/or elections held within the locality where the voter resides.
3. To carry on educational program for voters and inform the voter of his right and duty to vote, the value of his vote and the power of his vote.
4. To study and compile records of all persons who offer themselves as candidates for public office and to disseminate such information to the voters in the State of Texas.
5. To carry on, on a yearly basis a "POLITICAL EDUCATION AND RESEARCH PROGRAM" on the procedual processes of City, County, State and Federal government, including the number of employees employed by the City, County, State and Federal government, in its various departments, its annual payroll covering employees in various departments, and the number of Negro citizens appointed to government positions, and employed in various departments of the government, a failure of the various governments to appoint or employ any appreciable number of competent Negro citizens and members of other minority groups.

5. To work through the ballot box (by encouraging Negro citizens to actually qualify and vote), to eliminate racial discrimination against Negroes in the appointment and employment of competent Negroes and members of other minority groups.

6. To encourage our younger citizens in their quest for an education to prepare themselves for government employment and appointments to government positions.

7. To work for the appointment of competent Negroes and members of other minority groups in every area of government.

8. To disseminate information periodically on the power of the vote and the duty and responsibility of the Negroes to qualify and vote.

9. To gather data and information on any citizen of Texas, who offers himself for public office, and to disseminate such information to the voters throughout the State, in order that the voter before election time will have all relevant information with reference to the candidate, thereby enabling the voter to intelligently and wisely cast his vote on election day.

METHOD OF OPERATION AND MEMBERSHIP IN THE COUNCIL

1. The membership is composed of individual members, who have no organizational connection.

2. Any existing organization whose members agree with the purpose of the Council may become a member of the Council by making application, and such organizations are allowed from three (3) to ten (10) votes, based upon the membership or the persons represented by such organization.

3. The member organization does not lose its identity, and is not merged with the Council, but remains an independent organization, while such organziation holds membership in the council, with right to vote and receive information on all political candidates and public issues.

4. Local units of the Council are likewise organized, and the number of votes allocated to local units are on the same basis as Independent organizations, which are not local units of the Council.

METHOD OF OPERATION

The Council in addition to its educational program and its effort for employment and appointment of competent Negro citizens and members of other minority groups in various governmental positions, and for equal opportunities for all citizens, support and work for candidates for State and Federal offices, based upon their public record or agreement to work for equal opportunities for all citizens without reference to race, creed or color.

The program for the local area, the local citizens select the candidates that they will support in the local areas, and if the local citizens feel the need of State support, they apply to the Council Headquarters for such aid.

5. Where a candidate running for a State or National office lives in a particular area, he must obtain first favorable commendation from the Negro leaders and workers in the area where he lives, before the Council will consider his candidacy (he cannot by-pass the leaders and workers in the area where he resides, By this procedure he is made to know that the Negro leaders and workers in his area must be first recognized.).

6. There is no membership fee. Any person holding a Poll Tax receipt or an Exemption Certificate qualifies himself for membership.

7. There is a representation fee for individuals of One and No/100 ($1.00) Dollar in the Annual or Special Meeting and a fee for organizations according to the membership ranging from $10.00 to $25.00 at the Annual or Special Meeting.

8. Areas and individuals are at time requested to make voluntary contributions to carry on the work of Political Education and Research Committee. The Council has no authority to penalize any area or organization if they fail to make such contributions. These contributions are voluntarily made.

HOW TO ORGANIZE A LOCAL UNIT

A group of citizens, not less than ten (10) may assemble and elect a President, as many Vice-Presidents as the local unit desires, a Secretary, a Treasurer and an Auditor, and appoint the following standing committees:

Executive Committee
Committee on Political Education and Research Committee of Employment and Appointments
Committee on Membership
Committee on Local Program
Committee on Finance, and such other committees as the local units deems advisable.

Thereafter notify the Executive Secretary, Mrs. Lorrayne M. Jordan, P. O. Box 641 Dallas, Texas, giving the names and address of the principal officers. The Executive Secretary will enroll the local unit by number and name, and such officers will be placed on the mailing list and will receive periodically information gathered and compiled by the State Committee on Political Education and Research. Five and No/100 ($5.00) Dollars will be sent by the new local unit along with its report, showing the organization of the unit.

It is the purpose of the State Council to increase the status of every local leader and worker, and to make his or her influence known to all public officials, and to aid such leaders and workers to increase their usefulness politically and otherwise.

FUTURE

There are thousand of other positions where competent Negro citizens in the future will obtain appointments and employment, provided that the Council step up its program for Poll Tax Payment, Political Education and Research and its Crusade to increase the number of Negro voters who actually go to the Polls and vote on Election Day.

The Council needs your support in its future program.

The Council solicits the membership of every local organization and individual citizen.

We ask that the leaders and workers in each area immediately organize a local unit, or the now existing organization become members of the Texas Council of Voters and make your report to the Executive Secretary, and receive your Charter.

Respectfully,

TEXAS COUNCIL OF VOTERS

PARTY VACUUM CLAIMED

Times Herald 9-21-63

Negroes, Latins Seek Dem Role

By KEITH SHELTON
Political Writer

Negro and Latin American voters must step in to fill the vacuum created in the Democratic party by the departure of conservatives into the GOP.

This is the foundation stone of the new coalition of Negroes, Latins, labor and liberals, according to one of the co-chairmen, W. J. Durham of Dallas.

President of the Texas Council of Voters, a Negro registration group, Mr. Durham heads the Negro segment of the loose political cooperative.

Coalition leaders have no desire to become a third party force in Texas, Mr. Durham said in an interview with The Times Herald Saturday.

Instead, the coalition will make itself felt in next year's Democratic primary from the precinct to the state convention. He indicated an all-out fight for control of the Democratic party.

Negroes and Latin Americans are the ones to fill the vacuum in the Democratic party, Mr. Durham said, and labor and the Democrats elsewhere realize it.

"Negro voters have been loyal to the Democratic party since Roosevelt's day. I see no weaning away of them at this time."

VAST POTENTIAL

There are 1,700,000 potential Negro and Latin American voters in Texas, Mr. Durham says. The new coalition is the first joint effort of the two groups with a working agreement tying them together.

In 1960, about 300,000 Negroes were qualified to vote in Texas and the largest percentage of qualified Negroes voted — 78 per cent. The largest previous turnout was 63 per cent in 1948 when President Truman was running.

Studies show a 60 per cent turnout of qualified Negroes could have decided most of the recent governor's races.

There were indications the coalition will rival the United Political Organization, of which Rev. H. Rhett James of Dallas is a leader and which has been tied to Gov. Connally.

"The head of the UPO says it is a conservative organization," Mr. Durham said. "Sen. Eastland and Bruce Alger represent what they claim is conservatism. We don't believe that type of conservatism is good for the Negro voter or even America."

POLL TAX DRIVE

Mr. Durham's Texas Council of Voters will spearhead the coalition's drive to repeal the poll tax in the Nov. 9 special election. The council has 527 members in 102 Texas counties.

A coordinating director likely will be designated to steer the drive from Austin. The council will hold a meeting of about 250

Negro leaders by Labor Day on a ranch near Houston or Fort Worth to lay plans for the campaign, which will be launched Labor Day.

PASO, the Political Association of Spanish-Speaking Organizations, representing the Latin Americans, has discussed the campaign with the council and other segments of the coalition will be brought in.

Mr. Durham said a coalition organization in some form will be set up in Dallas County. He named Dr. Dudley Powell, Rev. Caesar Clark and E. L. Haywood as probably Dallas coalition leaders.

He said the new coalition differs from the old Democrats of Texas (DOT) and other coalitions of the past in its permanent nature. "The present group appears to have a long-range program, a continuity of action from year to year," he said.

CONNALLY'S RIGHTS TALK LAUDED, HIT

Stand Denounced By NAACP, Lauded By Civic Leaders

NAACP leaders Saturday charged that Gov. John Connally's racial stand would "cut the guts" out of the civil rights bill, but other Dallas leaders hailed the governor's position as reflecting the views of most Texans.

Clarence Laws, secretary of the NAACP (National Association for the Advancement of Colored People) for five states, disputed statistics used by the governor and said that calling civil rights a local issue is just another way of passing the buck.

W. J. Durham, national Negro leader and attorney for the NAACP in school desegregation cases, said: "If what I read in the papers is correct, Gov. Connally would cut the guts out of the civil rights bill."

He challenged Gov. Connally's statement that integration has been accomplished on a volunteer basis. "The facts are that the Negro has been required to spend large sums of money in court battles in order to bring about desegregation with few exceptions until the national administration requested action," he said.

CABELL PRAISES

Mayor Earle Cabell complimented the governor for a forthright speech. "I believe sincerely that he has expressed the opinion of the vast majority of the better-thinking, forward-thinking citizens of Texas," the mayor said.

Robert B. Cullum, president of the Dallas Chamber of Commerce, said he was very much impressed with the governor's talk on a statewide television hookup Friday night.

"I agree heartily with everything he had to say and I was very much pleased with the firmness with which he took his stand," Mr. Cullum said. "Yet, he did not equivocate for a moment with the responsibility Texans have to the Negro."

RIGHTS

Cliff Cassidy, vice chairman of the county Democratic Executive Committee, commented in the absence of the county chairman, Lee Smith, who is in Colorado.

"The governor's views will bring approval and congratulations from the majority of all Texans," he said.

NOT PLEASED

The Negro leaders were not so pleased, however.

Mr. Durham noted Gov. Connally's mention of Negroes he has appointed to state posts. Gov. Allan Shivers and Gov. Price Daniel also appointed Negroes, he said.

"That's nothing new, but as far as we have been able to ascertain, Gov. Connally has not appointed a single Negro to a government position with any salary attached.

"A Negro cannot feed his family or buy a home on honor. He reportedly appointed one Negro to a job with a salary, but the only work we have been able to ascertain that he does is political work. We checked it."

Mr. Durham did not name the appointee, but indicated he was referring to the president of the United Political Organization, a Negro voter registration group.

The Texas Council of Voters, Negro voting group of which Mr. Durham is president, has asked Gov. Connally to issue an executive order clearing the way for the appointment of Negroes to the state highway patrol and other positions.

CALLED MISLEADING

Mr. Laws, the NAACP secretary, said Gov. Connally's figures, if not inaccurate, are at least misleading. Gov. Connally said 212 Texas school districts have taken steps toward desegregation. "The facts are that at the close of the school term only 177 out of 919 school districts were desegregated," he said.

"The governor says that 53 per cent of the Negro school children were in school districts which have a program for desegregation. What he failed to say was that actually less than 3 per cent of Negroes in public schools in Texas are actually in desegregated situations."

Mr. Laws said only 7,000 out of 304,000 Negro school children are in integrated schools, or 2.3 per cent.

"We take the position that to say civil rights is a local issue is just another way of passing the buck — of avoiding responsibility. Civil rights should be no more of a local responsibility than the conservation of the state's natural resources, higher education, tourism and some of the governor's other pet projects.

The NAACP leader said that while Gov. Connally's views were clothed in "pious sugar-coated platitudes, they are no more palatable than the pronouncements of his fellow governors, Wallace and Barnett."

He said the NAACP takes the position that human rights supercede any property rights involved in the public accommodations section of the civil rights bill.

Dear Mr. Durham:

Thank you for your informative letter of August 1 pertaining to the activities of the Texas Council of Voters. It would appear from the information furnished to us that your organization is non-partisan even though the membership may have been active to a rather large extent in Democratic party politics. I point this out only to emphasize at the beginning the non-partisan interests of the Voter Education Project.

We will be pleased to study any proposal which you care to submit to us and just as soon as your proposal is received we will give immediate consideration.

Very truly yours,

Dear Sir:

Shortly after I wrote you on August 12, 1963, I sustained a back injury, was confined to the hospital and as a result of such injury I have been kept away from the office until today. I am sending this letter by Air Mail containing our program.

The organization is nonpartisan in that its prime purpose is to encourage Negro citizens to qualify to vote, and thereafter to carry on an educational program informing Negro electors of their right and obligation to vote.

The membership of the Texas Council of Voters is made up of democrats, republicans and independents; however, the members work for individual candidates at the election. The majority of the members are democrats.

Our program is set to start on the 15th day of September, however the 15th falls on a Sunday but the program will start Monday, September 16, 1963. If we are able to get the financial assistance set out in the outline attached, we will be able to prosecure a full program. If we do not get any financial assistance, we will prosecute the program to the best of our ability with the funds we have on hand.

With highest personal regards, I am

Respectfully yours,

Outline Attached

SEP 1 1963

TEXAS COUNCIL OF VOTERS

ITS PRESENT FACILITIES

1. A general office located in the Universal Life Building at 2600 Flora Street, Dallas, Texas, a part of which is used by the Dallas Unit of Texas Council of Voters.
2. Equipped with desks, tables, filing cabinet, chairs, mimeograph machine, typewriter, letterhead and supplies.

RECORD
For Dallas County

1. A complete breakdown of the qualified Negro voters in Dallas for 1962 in card form including the names, addresses and telephone numbers of every qualified voter in the Dallas County.

PROGRAM
For Dallas County

1. On September 15, 1963, a survey will start to obtain the name, address and telephone number of every Negro citizen in the County above 21 years of age. (As much of this work will be done as possible by December 31, 1963. During the last month of the registration drive, we will make a special drive to see those who do not hold poll tax receipts for the year of 1963 and encourage such persons to register.)
2. Our records (cards) will be revised after the payment of poll tax campaign end, so as to show the name, address, and telephone number of every qualified voter in Dallas County 1963. (1964 election)
3. An effort will be made to get one citizen in each block to allow his home to be used for a block headquarter where information and literature will be given out and where the voters in that block can register.

PUBLIC RELATIONS -
ADDITIONAL PROGRAM

1. The Council will use the facilities of the newspapers to publish news releases written by members of the Public Relations Committee. We will use other medias such as radio and T V, all organized efforts among Negro citizens now in existence such as clubs etc. will be solicited to aid in the crusade through their officers and influential members. This will include social clubs, Barber and Beautician Unions, Business and Professional Clubs, Churches, Greek Letter Fraternities etc. (This method was used in 1960 to get out thr vote which was successful in Texas.)
2. Workers will be enlisted and employed to do block work by going from door to door handing out literature and encouraging the Negro elector to register, thereafter go to the polls and vote.
3. Car pools will be formed to assist electors in going to the polls on election day to vote.
4. News letters will be sent out periodically to every potential voter in the county informing the voter of his right and duty and the value and power of his vote, and encouraging him to exercise his right tovote by acutally going to the polls in every election and cast his vote.
5. Telephone committees will be organized as in the past, who will call voters encouraging them to register, and then to vote at the coming election.

There are between 76,000 and 80,000 Negro citizens residing in Dallas above 21 years of age who are potential voters.

The largest number of Negro citizens in Dallas County who has qualified to vote in previous years are slightly in access of 23,000.

We believe by the use of the above program and other additional techniques and efforts that will be developed as we go along, if the payment of poll tax is abolished on November 9, 1963, we can qualify between 40,000 and 60,000 Negro voters in the county.

In my opinion, in order to prosecute the program, it will take between $8,000.00 and $10,000.00.

STATE

1. We have local units of the Texas Council in the various sections of the state of texas which include existing organizations (such as Harrison County Council of Organizations with many thousands of members and similar organizations throughout the state of texas) already in existence. Social Clubs, Business and Professional Clubs, Beautician and Barber Unions become members of the Council by applying to the Council to become an associate member without changing the purpose or the name of the existing organization.

They are admitted as members of the Texas Council with full right to participate in its educational program. Leaders of these organizations worked in the Council program in 1960-62 in the poll tax campaign and the program to get out the vote campaign. The organizations that are a part of the Council have among their membership such persons as: Dr. Marion J. Brooks, Dr. J. M. Burnett, Mr. J. Dorsey Adams, Mrs. Lenora Rolla all of Fort Worth, Texas; Rev. C. A. Black, Dr. Ruth McCoy and J. G. Sutton of San Antonio, Texas; Dr. Dudley M. Powell, Dr. J. R. Williams, Attorney E. Brice Cunningham, Attorney J. L. Turner, Jr., Dr. C. A. W. Clark, Mr. Ernest Haywood, and Mrs. Judy Lott and many other leaders of Dallas, Texas; Honorable Fred Hicks and others of Waco Texas;

Dr. E. D. Sprott, Attorney Theodore Johns, Attorney Elmo Williard, Attorney Mack H. Hannah III of Beaumont, Texas, and Mr. Buddy Roosevelt, all influential leaders of Beaumont-Port Arthur, Texas. Attorney Francis Williams, Mr. Sid Hilliard, Mrs. E. M. Knight, Mr. W. C. Day, Attorney W. M. Plummer, Mr. H. L. Garner, Mrs. F. A. Robinson, (Head of Grand Court of Calanthes with many thousand members,) Mack H. Hannah, Jr., as well as a host of other political and labor leaders of Houston, Texas; Mr. John J. Jones, Mr. J. E. Pettaway, Mr. B. H. Rosborough of Texarkana, Texas; Mr. Arthur Dewitty and others of Austin, Texas.

2. A record in card form of more than 900 leaders in various sections of the State of Texas, including their names and addresses, who have heretofore worked with the Council and more than 80 per cent have agreed to work from September, 1963 through 1964 in getting out the vote and the crusade by the Council for Payment of poll tax and/or encouraging the voter to register, in the event election to be held on November 9, 1963 is won to abolish the payment of poll tax in Texas.

3. The Council has leaders and local units and organizations in various other smaller towns reaching from Texarkana, Texas to Shelby County, running down the east and central portion of Texas, including such towns as Paris, Clarksville, Naples, Daingerfield, Pittsburg, Atlanta, Jefferson, Marshall, Longview, Carthage, Center, Huntsville, Lufkin, Liberty, Orange, Corsicana, Cleburne, Denton, Navasota, Bryan, Hearne, Kendleton and various other towns in the state.

4. The same program as set up for the Dallas program has already been set up in some counties and the Council expects to set up a similar program in all of the smaller towns named above and it has already asked the leaders in such cities as Beaumont, Port Arthur, Houston, San Antonio, Austin, Waco, Fort Worth to initiate this program on a local basis.

5. To allocate funds, as we are able, to leaders in each of the last named cities to carry out the program directly without the State Organization being compelled to handle expenditures and responsibilities of seeing that money is spent well and the objective of the Council is achieved.

In the smaller towns first mentioned above, our experience 1960-62 convinces us that these counties should be handled and supervised directly by the Council who already has a full time Executive Secretary and two traveling representatives and will need more travelling representatives, the first above-named cities and counties reach from Texarkana, Texas to Center and have more than 200,000 Negro citizens above twenty-one (21) years of age. This is a conservative estimate.

1. The office equipment and facilities described in Paragraphs 1 and 2 in this outline were purchased and paid for by the state organization (Texas Council of Voters).

2. The largest number of qualified Negro voters in the history of Texas was in the year 1960 when between two hundred seventy-four thousand (274,000) and two hundred eighty thousand (280,000) qualified to vote. It is the opinion of the officers of the Council that if the election is won on November 9, 1963 to abolish the payment of a poll tax as a requirement to vote, that a half million (500,000) Negro electors can be encouraged to qualify to vote through registration, and eighty per cent (80%) of that number can be encouraged to go to the polls on election day, if the program outlined herein is properly executed.

3. If the November 9th Election is not won, we still believe because of the interest being manifested in the civil rights movement and the stand taken by the President and the Vice-President of the United States on this question, then through the prosecution of the program such as is outlined here, at least three hundred fifty thousand (350,000) Negrores in Texas could be encouraged to qualify to vote and eighty per cent (80%) of that number could be encouraged to go to the polls and actually vote in 1964.

4. Because of the size of Texas and the area that must be covered, in our opinion, it will require the expenditure of between Eight Thousand Dollars ($8,000.00) and Twelve Thousand Dollars ($12,000.00) in addition to what the Council now has in sight to do the job in the East Texas area outlined in this program.

As we have stated before, we believe the most effective way to handle the program in the large cities: Fort Worth, Waco, Austin, San Antonio, Houston, Beaumont-Port Arthur, would be as suggested in this outline; that is, any financial assistance allocated for work in those cities should go directly to the groups dedicated to this program in each of said cities, and in addition to any outside financial assistance these groups would be able to raise finance locally to implement such outside aid or obtain the voluntary services of dedicated citizens to the crusade.

Our campaign, beginning on the 16th day of September, 1963 will, until the election on November 9, 1963, devote the time of the workers, exclusively, to getting out the present qualified voters to the election to be held November 9, 1963. This will be done both in the counties, as well as on the state level.

Respectfully,

TEXAS COUNCIL OF VOTERS

Dear Mr. Durham:

Under the provisions and terms of the U.S. Treasury Department concerning the tax-exempt status of the Voter Education Project, we have been charged with the responsibility of being able to account for all expenditures of our funds, including, of course, those distributed by us in the form of grants. For this reason, we are sending you, under separate cover, a supply of voucher forms with these instructions.

A voucher form should be filled out to support each and every expenditure of the $2000 grant to your program from the Voters of Texas Enlist. These should be sent to VOTE on a routine schedule (perhaps cumulatively by week or month, depending on the rate at which expenditures are made) and they, in turn, will be responsible for supplying us with this information.

We realize this may impose somewhat of a burden on your staff, but it is a fact of life that we cannot avoid and we will appreciate your cooperation.

Dear Mr. Branton:

Mr. Durham is still out of the office on account of a back injury, and has asked me to write and sign this letter.

This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 12, 1963, regarding the Dallas Voter Education Project.

As the vouchers attached to cancelled checks Nos. 12, 13 and 16 indicated, these checks were made to the Dallas Committee to Abolish the Poll Tax for the purpose of paying a pro rata share of the utility expenses of the Headquarters.

Dallas Committee to Abolish the Poll Tax was a non-partisan group; as a matter of fact, it was set up by the Texas League of Women Voters. As you know, the League of Women Voters was a leading group in favor of abolishing the poll tax as a prerequisite to voting in Texas, and it also enjoys a tax exempt status.

The Dallas Committee to Abolish the Poll Tax was sponsored and staffed by the League of Women Voters, as well as independent citizens, who were Republicans, Democrats and independents.

On all the literature which the League of Women Voters mailed out during this campaign to abolish the poll tax, they requested contributions which they advised would be tax deductible, since they enjoyed tax-exempt status, and the funds so raised were used to finance the campaign to repeal the poll tax.

Under the circumstances, it is believed that the sharing of expenses for utilities with a tax-exempt group would not affect the tax-exempt status of the funds represented by those checks.

vep 3-22

Based upon the facts stated above, please advise me whether or not you are still of the opinion that the funds represented by the three checks, Nos. 12, 13 and 16, were improperly spent and must be refunded. I will attempt to comply with your instructions.

If you need further information, please advise.

Sincerely yours,

W. J. DURHAM

Attention Mr. E. Brice Cunningham

Dear Mr. Durham:

Larry Goodwyn was in our office on December 9 and brought us a financial report concerning your Dallas voter education project. We have since received a copy from you in the mail. We note that Checks 12, 13, and 16 were made payable to the Dallas Committee to A bolish the Poll Tax. While we do not know the exact nature of these expenditures we are led to believe that this was for partisan politics and as such cannot be appproved by the Voter Education Project.

We realize now that we never informed you as to the limitation which we must place on all VEP grants as a result of our Internal Revenue Service tax exemption. The grant was made to V.O.T.E. and that organization made the grant to you. VEP funds may not be used to engage in partisan politics in any manner whatsoever or to support or oppose any legislation, or on behalf of or against any political candidate or issue.

We, therefore, request that your committee immediately obtain funds from some other source and repay the total amount of these checks ($222.41) to the Dallas Voter Education Project, and inform us in writing when this has been done.

Dear Mr. Branton:

Find enclosed a report including photocopies of invoices, receipts, cancelled checks and bank statements showing the disbursements made from the Two Thousand ($2,000) Dollars allocated to the Dallas area for educational work in connection with the vote to repeal the poll tax.

I trust this report will comply with your requirements.

You will observe that we had a balance remaining in the sum of Four Hundred Fifty-eight & 21/100 ($458.21) Dollars. We have a small light bill which we have not received a statement for and a small telephone bill which will probably be received during the month of December, both of which we expect to pay out of the balance remaining. Also, there is a check in the amount of Eight and 50/100 ($8.50) Dollars which was paid for the use of voting machines rented to teach voters how to use the voting machine, which check had not cleared the bank at the time we received the last bank statement.

We have already opened our headquarters for the poll tax campaign. We propose to use the balance of the $2,000.00 in connection with our educational program to encourage voters to pay their poll tax. Out of this money, we plan to have leaflets, etc., printed to be sent to prospective voters giving reasons why the poll tax should be paid and the value of paying the poll tax and voting, as well as to help pay the salary of a full-time director. I trust this will be acceptable to you.

Dear Wiley:

I know this is an unpardonably long letter, but the implications of Mr. Durham's letter for the future of the Coalition were so severe that I felt impelled to make as much headway as possible toward clearing up these incredible misunderstandings.

I ask you to forgive the henscratchings on the attached: the original to Mr. Durham is much clearer, but the reproducing machine seems to acentuate type-overs. Don't blame my secretary--from the internal evidence in the attached letter, you will discover she suffered from one of VOTE's periodic economy waves. I typed it myself.

I am sending a copy of the letter to Durham to Mr. Phil Weightman. He is very close to Mrs. LeRoy, whom he trained, and I know he is following events in Texas with acute interest. Phil has been out of town on each of my last five trips to Washington so I have not seen him since last July. This was just before we started our huge blockworker program. It is too bad, for I have suffered due to a lack of close contact with Phil.

I am going to make the assumption that VEP will feel constrained to direct any future assistance to Texas through the Texas Council. Therefore, in the interest of our general cause, may I volunteer one or two guidelines? I hope you will not regard them as brash. (1) One of every 5 Texas Negroes lives in Houston. There are 63 predominantly Negro precincts, most of them in two wards, the third and the fifth. With 250,000 Negroes in the city, the project is simply too huge to function out of one office, in my opinion. I was hopeful that VOTE could encourage two budgets for Houston, one for each ward. Now I am hopeful that VEP can so encourage. You need a project director in each ward (at about $200 each for the final two weeks of the free registration period, ending March 6th) and an assistant project director in each(at about $100 each, or $50 a week for the final two weeks). And each ward office needs three telephones, so that's another $35 for each office. Total, each ward--$335.00 or a total of $670 for the city. For the sake of harmony, the parent organization the Harris County Council of Organizations should get an allocation of say, $100, as they will want to do a mailing or some other non-blockworker type of effort. Total, therefore, for Houston $770.

I didn't put Houston into the VOTE budget because we didn't have the money to do it right, so there was no point in giving them a smaller amount than they needed to do the job--the money wouldn't perculate down to the precincts where it needs to be spent. Fort Worth ought to have a little help--enough to keep Lenora Rolla in that office for two weeks--$150 plus $50 for phones. Again, I had to choose between Dallas and Fort Worth and gave Dallas enough ($400) to do the job right, leaving nothing for Fort Worth. Mrs. Plummer in Beaumont is a good project director--she will get some folks registered if she had a little help. $150 would do it. I have sent all these projects the necessary materials (free registration post cards), and they know how to mobilize blockworkers. They just need to keep the office open, the telephones paid up, and some money for themselves. $2,000 to the Texas Council, spent in Houston, Fort Worth and Jefferson County(Beaumont,Port Arthur) would register a passable amount of people. VOTE is covering Dallas, San Antonio, Midland-Odessa and $600 to Mr. Durham that he requested in his letter. Must run and get this in the mail so you will get it Friday. We may have some stunning news on poll tax registration. The preliminary reports are so good they scare me. We're going to have some mighty proud blockworkers if the latest estimates stand up.

Cordially,

Larry

Mr. W. J. Durham
President, Texas Council of Voters
2600 Flora
Dallas, Texas

Dear Mr. Durham:

Though the purpose of a conference of leadership, such as the Coalition, is to facilitate communication between leadership, it is apparent that I have failed--even more than I feared--to maintain satisfactory communications. I shall endeavor, with this letter, to correct this insofar as one letter can do the job.

This Monday morning's mail brought your lengthy letter, with the attached note by your secretary explaining why the letter was not mailed until February 14th(Friday).

I know that you, by reputation, and also, perhaps, because of your legal training, are a man of restraint so I know that you did not undertake to write me without reflecting on the matter for some time. This makes it all the more clear to me that I should cover this matter as thoroughly as possible in an effort to el eliminate all possible misunderstandings. I do not suggest that VOTE is a well oiled machine that does not make mistakes, but I do hope I can demonstrate that whatever we have done, both the successes and failures have been a product of a good faith effort.

Running through your letter was the theme of the termination of Mrs. LeRoy so I think I should address myself to this subject first. Mrs. LeRoy's services have, indeed, been intermittent, but this was the way things were originally planned. On July 28th, 1963, at a special called meeting of the Coalition's Steering Committee, I proposed a rather bold step: the hiring of four directors of voter registration to serve the four "legs" of the Coalition and the purpose of the Coalition generally. I proposed this step on the basis of the future funds I thought the Coalition would be able to raise as a result of my first fund-raising trip to Washington and New York in June. (Prior to the June trip, all expenses of the Coalition since it was first constituted in November, 1962, had been deferred through funds raised in Texas by mail and through one large mass meeting back in January, 1963. It is pertinent to record that during these months, when the coalition concept was largely a dream sustained by the faith of many interest liberals, some of whom were members of the Texas Council and others from the independent Democratic community, that serious deficits were incurred, amounting at one bad moment, to $3,900 in the red on May 30, 1963. During this period, the "Team Program" of speakers was developed and became the chief tool of carrying the message of the "brand new Democratic Party" we were trying to build. The development of the Team Program was one of several things that sustained us in our faith, even when the deficits were becoming oppressive. It was against this backdrop, that I proposed the expansion to the Steering Committee.

2) Mr. W. J. Durham

To the proposal for four statewide directors, each of the Coalition's legs responded in a slightly different way, reflecting their individual needs. PASO DECIDED NOT TO PUT on a staff representative but to use the proposed $600 salary as traveling expenses to be divided among four part-time registration workers. The labor movement agreed to pay, out of labor funds, a registration worker to represent labor on the Coalition and they named Mrs. Latane Lambert to this post. The Texas Council, meeting in Houston in August, named Mrs. Erma LeRoy and she began on September 1st. The independent liberals named Martin Wiginton.

During the period, Sept. 1st to Nov. 9th, these arrangements were carried out, with the following specifice expenditures:

1). PASO received $600 for the month of September as travel allowance, $600 for October, and $300 for November. Total to November 9th...$1,500.

2). Mrs. Lambert began on September 15th. She received $300 plus $150 expenses for September, $600 plus $150 expenses for October, and $180 for the 9 days in November. Total...$1,380.

3). Mrs. LeRoy received $600 plus $268.25 expenses for September, $600 plus $418.44 expenses for October, and $180 plus $160 expenses for the 9 days in November. Total.....$2,226.69

3) Mr. W. J. Durham

4) Mr. Wiginton received $600 plus $330.10 expenses for September, $600 plus $421,60 expenses for October and $180 plus $105 expenses for the 9 days in November. Total.....$2,236.70

The four PASO representatives traveled by car in the southern tier of 30 counties between the Rio Grande River and San Antonio, predominantly Mexican-American in population.

Mrs. LeRoy traveled by car in the eastern tier of approximately 40 counties bordering Louisiana where the heaviest concentration exists of rural Negro population.

Mr. Wiginton traveled by air, to each of the 15 metropolitan areas in which the VOTE blockworker program was being inaugurated, and to all other major population centers as well, ranging from Amarillo in the North and El Paso in the West to Brownsville in the South and Port Arthur in the East.

Mrs. Lambert stayed in Austin, manning the Wide Area Telephone (WATS) phone, through which all project directors reported in their requests for materials, blockworker kits, IBM lists, and through which schedules were arranged for the appearances of the Team Program of speakers.

These staff expenditures amounted to just under $7,400; yet they did not constitute the major part of the VOTE budget. For, additionally, the following expenditures were authorized by the steering committee to run through the period Sept. 15-Nov. 9th: full time local project driectors to supervise the blockworker program in Mexican-American areas in 5 cities (San Antonio, El Paso, Corpus Christi, Hidalgo County and Cameron County)...and full time local project directors to supervise the blockworker program in Negro areas in 9 cities (Houston, Beaumont, Port Arthur, Galveston, Dallas, Fort Worth, Waco, Austin, and San Antonio). Each of these blockworker directors received $300 a month, beginning September 15th and though there were minor variations according to the exact date of hiring, they received roughly $570 each. Expenditures were considerably higher than this is the two Texas cities with the largest Negro population--Dallas and Houston, and an extra $100 was allocated to San Antonio during the final week. Additionally, the Coalition projected a rural program, including a workshop, in South Texas and a rural program in East Texas. Altogether, the Coalition and

4) Mr. W. J. Durham

VOTE spent slightly over $12,000 on local projects, exclusive of printing materials.

In answer to requests made individually by Houston, Dallas and East Texas to Mr. Wiley Branton, the Voter Education Project made a grant of $9,000, resulting in allocations of $2,000 to Dallas, $2,700 to East Texas and $4,150 to Houston. VOTE kept $150 to help defray long distance phone calls in administrating these funds.(I shall refer to VOTE's role in administering these grants later in this letter).

Additionally, the Coalition printed and distributed through Project Directors and the staff registration workers of each of the groups in the Coalition, some 12,000 blockworker kits containing 240,000 brochures, 480,000 hand cards and various other materials, plus the reshuffling, via IBM machines, of poll tax lists from 15 cities contained a total of 239,000 names---all these expenses totaling in excess of $25,000 and duly reported to the Steering Committee meetings in November. In all these instances, no funds from the Voter Education Project were used during the period October 22 through Nov. 9th so that it would be clear that no VEP funds had been used for partisan purposes. Our records show that something like $14,000 was expended in this period by the Coalition, with well over half of it going to project directors working in Negro areas, to Mrs. LeRoy, and for printing of repeal-the-poll-tax literature. All of these funds came from independent Democratic sources.

As you noted in your letter, the Dallas project people made an inappropriate expenditure of $200 from the VEP grant in their possession, which was the only deviation from the plan in any of the 15 cities. After Mr. Branton's office called this Dallas matter to my attention, I undertook steps to correct this mistake which I, myself, had not caught in the process of forwarding the vouchers to the VEP.

On November 9th, this entire registration organization was temporarily disbanded as VOTE had no further funds. As a matter of fact, we fell some $8,000 short of the $50,000 goal to be raised during the final 60 days of the repeal campaign. I signed a personal note at the Austin National Bank for $5,000 in the middle of November to keep the VOTE office open pending further fund-raising efforts. I had signed, and subsequently repaid, a similar note during the early, struggling days of the spring of 1963.

The principal personal crisis I had at this time, other than my own, concerned Martin Wiginton. Unlike either the labor or Negro registration worker (there being no PASO worker), Mr. Wiginton was sole support of his family and prior to the time he was offered this post (which necessitated his giving up his law practice in El Campo and moving his wife and two young children to Austin), I sought and received from the independent Democratic wing of the Coalition a verbal commitment that they would underwrite his salary for one year. Short of this, Mr. Wiginton could not afford to leave his law practice. Since the independent Democrats had no other qualified worker free at the time to take the post, they agreed to underwrite his salary. This was eminently satisfactory to me since I was out of the office and, indeed, out of Texas, about one-third of the time on administrative and fund-raising missions and needed someone in Austin to help carry on the day-to-day business of VOTE and the Coalition. However, after the heavy drains made on the liberal community in the course of the poll tax campaign--drains not only for their own local programs but for support of the statewide effort as well--the liberals appeared well on their way to failing in their commitment to Mr. Wiginton. Following the Nov. 9th election, he stayed in Austin (he hardly had a choice) but he was not being paid.

At this juncture a series of basically unrelated events combined to solve this problem. To explain them, I will have to digress for a paragraph or two. One of the changes in the structure of Texas politics achieved in the course of the repeal election was the removal of white liberal influence in Negro precincts. This was greatly desired by individual Negro leaders in various cities--a point they emphasized to me with great clarity. This objective was achieved, through the joint cooperation of the state VOTE office, local Negro leaders and also with the cooperation, in the case of Houston, of the white liberals themselves. All card files, block-worker lists, etc, in the possession of the Harris County Democrats, for example, were transferred--bag,baggage and file cabinets--to the office of the Harris County Council of Organizations. Thus the blockworker program for the repeal election in Negro precincts was entirely Negro-directed. It was at this point, in the two weeks following the repeal election, that my problem concerning Mr. Wiginton and the independent liberals was solved. At a VOTE meeting in Austin, attended by Mr. Cunningham, three Negro leaders rose to "put the heat" on the independent segment of the coalition. These three were Dr. Marion Brooks of Fort Worth, Mr. G. J. Sutton of San Antonio and Mr. Moses LeRoy of Houston. Each cited the success of the blockworker program in their respective cities and challenged the (now unemployed) white liberals to do the same in previously neglected low-income white precincts. Following this meeting, a group of the independents met and mapped out a blockworker program for low-income white precincts, specifically emphasizing the cities of Dallas and Houston. I might insert here that this had been a long-range objective of Mr. Randolph Blackwell of the VEP, first proposed by him to me back in July, 1963, which I, as the Coalition's executive director, had been trying to implement, without too much success I concede, until Mssrs. Brooks, Sutton and LeRoy made my task somewhat easier. I wrote the VEP about these efforts, summarizing their successful culmination in a long letter to Mr. Branton in December. The independents mapped out of alow-income white precinct program for the poll tax drive, using full-time volunteer project directors to be recruited from among the women in politics of which we have so many in Texas. And to coordinate this volunteer program, one statewide staff person would be needed--to see that each locality understood and implemented the new blockworker program...and so, Mr. Wiginton was saved, for the independents forthwith met their obligations concerning his overdue salary, and pledged to do the same in the future.

During this period between the Nov. 9th election and Jan. 1, 1964, there was no poll tax selling campaign in Texas, as you perhaps recall. The tax-assessors in the various counties around the state did not have their poll tax books printed and ready as they had to await the outcome of the repeal election before they knew whether the printed forms were to read $1.75 per poll tax (if repeal failed) or 25 cents (if repeal succeeded). While these books were being printed in December, nothing happened on the poll tax front. During this period, not only was Mrs. LeRoy not on salary, but neither was Mrs. Lambert nor any of the many local project officers employed in the poll tax campaign around the state. Mr. Wiginton, in accordance with the new aims of the independent Democratic group in the coalition, proceeded to begin setting up the machinery for a registration drive in white or anglo Democratic precincts. Further, in response to our severe financial condition, I took the additional economy measures of (1) letting go the secretary in the VOTE office (2) publishing no newsletters in this period. The only persons employed, then, by VOTE between Nov. 9th and January 1st were myself and Mr. Wiginton, and while the latter received some income from the independent Democratic group, I was not paid as we simply had no money. I go into these details, Mr. Durham, simply to illustrate that VOTE has, since its inception, struggled along as best it could, meeting all its obligations but not necessarily meeting them with great promptness in all cases

Meanwhile as the year ended, the coalition's deficit climbed slightly over $10,000. I renewed the note at the Austin National Bank. A number of obligations remained unpaid, including the final $160.00 of the $2,200 paid to Mrs. LeRoy during her ten weeks on staff, plus back salary and expenses of my own amounting to $1,219.83 as of Dec. 31st and a large printing bill which Futura Press, as always, was quite gentlemanly about. I made two separate trips to Washington and New York in December and had some good fortune, especially good, I thought, since we had lost the repeal election. At the statewide coalition meeting on December 28th, I was able to proposed a $39,000 budget for the period January 1-31, the crucial last 30 days of the poll tax drive. (The actual amount proposed for spending in January was slightly over $28,000, the remaining going to defray the deficit). The budget came about as a result of a $10,000 pledge from the AFL-CIO, a pledge of $6,500 from the independent segment of the Coalition, plus various out-of-state commitments. It became impossible for me to raise additional funds over $6,500 from the independent segment of the Coalition, as they became preoccupied with their own low-income white program and the generally heavy expenses of their overall local poll tax campaigns. Accordingly, I wrote the VEP, requesting a $10,000 grant for the month of January, to be used in the support of the poll tax drive among Negro and Latin-American voters (roughly 70% Negro and 30% Latin-American expenditures). To our joy, this grant was made in full, and the January drive launched.

As stated in the letter of invitation to all steering committee members for the Dec. 28th meeting, the budget for the January registration drive was to be considered in an open meeting of the entire steering committee. This was done. After much discussion, the committee voted to have the official four-man VOTE board of directors draft the final details for the budget. The VOTE board thereupon met in the same room at the conclusion of the Steering Committee meeting. In the absence of you and Mr. Cunningham, Mr. Moses LeRoy, as Vice-President, represented the Texas Council. The other three VOTE board members present were Mr. Albert Fuentes, executive secretary of PASO, Mr. Roy Evans, Secretary-Treasurer of the State AFL-CIO, and Mr. Houston Thompson, the officially designated representative on the VOTE board of the independent Democrats. Two budgets were drafted--one to allocate all existing monies on hand; the second to allocate additional monies as they were raised in January. A priority was agreed on, so that the first additional money received would go to print more materials, then to hire additional local project officers in some of the smaller cities, and so on. I was then instructed by the VOTE board to proceed on this basis.

It is to be noted that, once again, each of the legs of the Coalition made different arrangements in the handling of its statewide registration worker. PASO requested VOTE to underwrite $1,000 if possible, but at least $500, for long distance phone calls from the PASO State Headquarters in San Antonio to the 30-odd counties in South Texas where they had set up registration campaigns manned by volunteers. It was PASO's intention to supervise these volunteers by long distance phone, feeling this would get more results with less money than hiring a person to tour so many counties in so short a period of time.

The Texas Council, through its senior representative at the Dec. 28th meeting, Mr. LeRoy, indicated its desire to continue as in the past, with Mrs. LeRoy traveling in East Texas.

8) W. J. Durham

I received a request from Rev. Thomas, Rev. Henderson, Rev. Walker and Willie Jerry Jones, of various East Texas counties, for $150 each for gasoline allowance to conduct registration drives in their area. For this, I had nothing in my budget, as it was approved by the VOTE board. By sheerest coincidence, Mr. Blackwell of the VEP, was in my office on a trip from Atlanta at the time this came up and I discussed this problem with him and he suggested I put the issue up to the leadership of the Texas Council. So I phoned Mr. Cunningham and explained that I was not authorized to put both Mrs. LeRoy and the East Texans to work for the month of January, but that I could do one or the other. Mr. Cunningham said he would check with you (I believe you were just home from the hospital) and phone me the next day. After checking with me once in the interim to verify the names of the four people involved, Mr. Cunningham subsequently contacted me to say you had approved the money going to the four East Texans on the ground that the nearer the money was to the local sources the more productive you thought it would be. I informed Mrs. LeRoy of this decision, but asked her to "stand by" for we intended, at the very minimum, to promote a massive all-East Texas workshop, for which her familiarity with the region would be helful. Further, if certain fund-raising hopes we had did materialize, we had even larger plans. I proceeded, then, to make out four checks of $150 each to Mssrs. Thomas, Walker, Henderson and Jones. These were reported, routinely, in VOTE's periodic accounting statements to the Voter Education Project.

What we now know to be the highly successful registration drive followed. Yet, throughout January, VOTE continued on a hand-to-mouth basis, due to the fact that independent liberal money sources suddenly dried up in the face of new demands on them from various prominent state and local candidates who needed money for filing fees and intial campaign printing orders. As a result, I did not get the $6,500 from these citizens. As of this date, the VOTE office has received $2,800. As this situation became apparent to me around January 15-20, I made certain economies in the budget--in accordance with the priorities set up by the VOTE board--for example: cancelling a projected South Texas workshop, and sharply reducing printing orders. All this was in an effort to avoid a deficit at the end of January. I also held off paying accrued debts (to Futura Press, to Mrs. LeRoy, to Mrs. Lambert, to Mr. Wiginton, and to myself) until I had a better idea of when I could safely discharge these responsibilities. Throughout this period, VOTE paid all local project officers on time and in full, a step we all felt was necessary to morale in the field; knowing that the staff leadership were old hands, it was felt they could more safely ride out this period without any drop in morale.

As a result of running as tight a ship as possible, we emerged on Jan. 31st with only a $1,200 deficit, despite the unexpected drop of $3,700 in receipts.

I should like to take special pains to point out that not one penny of the $10,000 grant from the VEP went to defray the cost of the State office, the rent, the salaries of myself, Mrs. Lambert, or Mr. Wiginton, the cost of the office clerical help, or any of the reproduction equipment we rent. The VEP money went into the field--to local project officers and for the materials sent to these local people. When I was able, finally, to pay the top staff people their back travel expenses, this too came from non-VEP funds. All VEP funds are kept in a separate account and the expenditures, by name and by amount, are reported to the Atlanta office. The records of the distribution of the $10,000 VEP grant reveal no expenditures for myself, or the prepresentatives of the other groups who were on the state staff.

On January 31st, the labor representative, Mrs. Lambert, returned to her home in Dallas to await further word on the next round of fund-raising and all local project officers were told to stand by as we anticipated that theyratification of the 24th amendment to the US constitution would occur shortly, thus necessitating still one more last 30 day campaign, this time a "free" registration for federal elections. The four East Texans likewise received no further assistance from VOTE after Jan. 31st and similarly, PASO having no field person to lay off, that relationship was concluded with the payment of the PASO phone bill. Meanwhile, Mr. Wiginton is hopeful the independent liberals will continue to underwrite his efforts and, after the experiences of January, I am hopeful, too, only not so hopeful as I used to be. (But we shall see. I still am optimistic and the fact remains, these good people have put in over $15,000 in the past year, most of it going to support the state office and the printing, with less than $3,000 being spent in their own independent liberal precincts, so I am certaintly gratified with their faith and their labors and in no mood to depreciate their efforts, even though their actual dollar contributions in January were not quite as large as I, in my optimism, had hoped.)

I hope this necessarily long reconstruction of events serves to clarify the situation surrounding Mrs. LeRoy*s "termination." She has been terminated no more than Mrs. Lambert has, or any of the many local project officers; except in the one single instance of which you approved, or I understand from Mr. Cunningham, that you approved. All of our local project officers seem in the best of spirits following their various local successes in the poll tax drive and all are ready to go ahead on a big two week push for free registration as soon as VOTE, once again, can find some way to finance it.

Now, Mr. Durham, I should like to direct a few words in explanation of a paragraph on page 7 of your letter to me. Your paragraph reads: She (Mrs. LeRoy) advises me, however, that her services were terminated about the time the election was held, or shortly thereafter, and that she was not permitted to work in the educational program, except she might have been called in one time to help set up a meeting, where Negro citizens were asked to meet and an attempt had been made to hold a meeting prior to the time she was asked to set the meeting up, without any success in the first effort. Only a few Negroes attended the first meeting, or first effort to hold a meeting."

Early in January, a small leadership meeting of the top Negro registration people in the 7th congressional district was set up by the Musslewhite people. This meeting was held as scheduled. Mr. Wiginton, en route from Waco to Houston, stopped off and delivered some material to this meeting, which was held in Crockett. Purpose of the meeting was to plan, and divide up responsibilities for, a huge mass meeting. The Musslewhite people envisioned a mass meeting only of people in that district, but Mr. Wiginton prevailed upon them to cooperate with VOTE in expanding the meeting to all the counties of East Texas. A date was fixed for the mass meeting and areas of responsibility divided up among those present.

I, personally am familiar with the huge workshop which resulted for it was a gigantic effort of a whale of a lot of people and it resulted in such a striking success that most everybody connected with it felt refreshed by the event and we have all been telling others about it ever since. Our opening salvo was to mail out some 520 letters to every East Texas Negro leader we knew of. I would estimate that somewhere between 60% and 75% of these names have been provided, in the course of several years, by Mrs. LeRoy and represent the remarkable end result of her years of effort to find, train, and motivate leadership in this most hostile of all Texas areas. We followed up this letter with personal contact which we handled in the following manner: In the 13 counties of Musslewhite's district, the top leaders involved in the earlier planning session were to be responsible for contacting rank and file people. In all other counties, I asked Mrs. LeRoy to be responsible. I arranged for Mrs. LeRoy to have access to the free Wide Area Telephone Service (WATS) phone available through independent liberal leaders in Houston--to phone in a personal invitation to all the people on her list outside of these 13 counties. VOTE agreed to pay her at the rate of $25 a day for the two days she would spend on the telephone. I requested further that she attend and address the meeting, as it was to bring together so many of her protoges. VOTE, of course, was to defray her expenses for this trip, as well as a side trip of Mrs. LeRoy's to a meeting in San Jacinto Cty. Further, Mr. DeWitty, Austin leader and originator of the "Team Program" of Speakers--and a man who has traveled extensively in East Texas for the AFL-CIO-- wrote letters of invitation to his many acquaintances in the area.

On "workshop day," no less than 209 people met in Crockett. I felt then, and still feel, that there was glory and accomplishment enough for everyone in this achievement. It was truly a history-making event and everyone felt so--in fact, the phrase "history-making day in East Texas" was used by quite a few people there that day, both by those in the audience and those on the speaker's platform. (It is interesting to compare 209 people at a regional rural meeting with the 50 people U.P.O. got to attend their highly touted statewide meeting in Dallas). The register kept at the Crockett meeting shows that slightly more than 150 persons came from the 13 counties of Musslewhite's district, with the remaining coming from the other 40 counties. I feel this is a further evidence of the enduring qualities of Mrs. LeRoy's past work, and so told her at the time, for she not only found and helped train Rev. Thomas, et al, but she found many of the people whom Rev. Thomas and his young associates got to the meeting. Indeed, it is because of Mrs. LeRoy's spadework in 1962 and earlier in the 13 counties of the 7th district that such a large turnout was possible. I do want to add, however, that I think Revs. Thomas, Walker, Henderson and Mr. Jones in East Texas, and Mr. DeWitty in Austin, did their job well, too--as is further evidenced by the tremendous increase in poll taxes in Angelina, Rusk and other counties in that area. An increase in Angelina from 11,000 to 15,000 is something everyone connected with the East Texas effort can be proud of. (Here is a typical report I am getting in the VOTE state office. From Emerson Stone, Jr., the Ralph Yarborough leader in the area, comes this: "The increase in Negro voter registration in Rusk County is fantastic, Larry. You should have seen that courthouse crowd when they saw the big change. Whether they like it or not--and some didn't-- they all knew a new day had dawned in Rusk County.")

The mention of Musslewhite brings up another subject touched on in your letter. May I say at the outset that I have had a few troubles of my own with Benton, traceable to what I consider his failure to live up to some contractual arrangements. I do not know whether Mrs. LeRoy, with whom I worked in Benton's campaign two years ago, has had similar difficulties, but I have made it clear to Benton that he hasn't shot completely squarely with me. In mitigation, it must be said that like all candidates, and particularly candidates on our side of the fence, he has had insuperable financial problems. It is not easy to run against a six-term Dixiecrat incumbent like John Dowdy. But an even more germane reason why I continue to try to live with Benton is his courage on the one issue so essential to the Coalition--namely civil rights. Benton attended the Crockett workshop, the only public office-holder or candidate in the area to do so; indeed, the only white person in the district to do so. The only other whites present were myself and Roy Evans of the AFL-CIO and we appeared as part of the Team Program, along with Arthur DeWitty and Rev. Lavert Taylor of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, who has been working in Tyler with Mrs. Wheat of the NAACP. We have come to expect our Senator Yarborough to pioneer in these matters, but Benton is the first person running in a purely East Texas constituency who is willing to buck the old traditions. So I try to work with him as best I can, and put the past asside.

Now then, you had some specific questions concerning the $2,700 grant from the VEP for the East Texas project back last October. When I first told Rev. Thomas (after talking to Wiley Branton) that I thought he might, indeed, be expecting some help shortly from the VEP, I received a phone call from Musslewhite asking that the grant be handled with as much discretion as possible and specifically requesting that it not be processed through a Lufkin bank, as local political figures, including local bankers, were well aware of the fact that Rev. Thomas is a pro-Musslewhite man. Benton feared that Dowdy, whom as we all know is a demagogue of the worst sort, would make a campaign issue out of "outside money coming into the district to register Negroes." Since grants made by the VEP carry various reporting requirements, such as all checks be printed in triplicate, and all VEP money be kept separately in a separate account, the problem was a real one. For similar reasons, I do not keep the VOTE account in an Austin bank--either the VOTE regular account (which contains VEP funds) or the VOTE special account (which contains funds from the independent Democratic community and from labor). Instead, I use the bank of Walter Hall who is the only banker in Texas who is a liberal. This bank is located in Dickinson, Texas.

Accordingly, I arranged for Mr. Hall to open a new account, "East Texas project," to print up the necessary checks in triplicate and to send a signature card to Rev. A.D. Thomas. In a phone conversation to Mr. Branton, I mentioned that the East Texas Project money was being placed in a bank out of the area, for reasons of political discretion as we had a congressional race coming up in that district.

As to the other specific questions about the specific number of poll taxes sold by each worker in East Texas, I can only call your attention, Mr. Durham, to the new mass-volunteer method of blockworkers that is the cornerstone of the Coalition's entire program. that has as its principal aim the doing away with the old method of paid deputies being compensated on the basis of the number of poll taxes sold, or compensated in any other manner. None of the paid project directors of the VOTE effort, sell poll taxes. They recruit blockworkers who go door to door acquiring registrations on a volunteer basis. For this reason, I cannot at this time report the number of poll taxes resulting from VEP-supported programs in East Texas, any more than I can for the VEP supported effort in Houston and Dallas or the joint VOTE-VEP programs in 12 other Texas cities. I can say we have poured some 6,000 volunteer blockworkers into the precincts and that in every urban area having project directors of VOTE, a record poll tax sales has been announced by the county officials.

The VOTE state office has received carbon copies of correspondence from these local projects to the VEP and I have kept informed as best I could. There is still a minor question, concerning $250 sent to Mr. Francis Williams for the Houston project, which VEP has asked me to clear up..and there was that question about the $200 expenditure in Dallas. But, so far as I know, there has been noproblem about lack of reporting by the East Texas project to Atlanta. You ask specifically: "Was that money placed in a South Texas bank and paid out by someone other than Rev. Thomas?" I will check this personally and report it to you within the next few days, but it is inconceivable to me that Rev. Thomas did not, in fact, sign the signature card and was not, in fact, the person signing the checks. Copies of these checks go to Atlanta, and since they made the grant to Thomas, presumably they would have called me before now had anyone else been signing checks. I will say this: I will share your disappointment--and I will have to revive my attitudes accordingly--if any of this $2,700 did not, in fact, go for voter registration.

Another point, bearing on this. As you perhaps know, VOTE has tried vigorously to implement a blockworker program in Tyler, the largest city in East Texas. A Mr. Charles Coleman, as President of the Progressive Voters League there, resists any effort on the part of the Texas Council of Voters people or any other "outsiders" suggesting that he update his techniques. Vew few Negroes are registered in Tyler. In one big precinct, with some 6,900 persons over 21, only 1,200 are registered or have exemptions, despite the fact that almost 1100 persons are over 60 and thus are entitled to free poll taxes. Competent local leaders, like Mrs. Wheat of the NAACP are in despair over Mr. Coleman. At one point last fall, I asked Julia Scott, your project director in Dallas, if she or Mr. Cunningham or both, could drive over to Tyler to try to enlist Mr. Coleman's cooperation. But Julia pleaded--correctly, there is no doubt--that she was too swamped with the mammoth job at hand in Dallas. To local people in Tyler, Mr. Coleman had already expressed his lack of warm feelings for Mrs. LeRoy. (Before our wfforts were done, Mr. Coleman expressed his lack of warm feelings for just about everybody--the only requirement to get his wrath being, apparently, that the person be from outside of Tyler) In any case, we ran just about everybody at Mr. Coleman. During this period, Mrs. LeRoy was touring sections of East Texas other than Tyler and Thomas' people were covering the heart of the East Texas area. So I phoned Mr. Musslewhite. I pointed out that under the terms of the grant from the VEP, as I understood the request signed by Mr. Thomas, many counties outside the 7th district were to be included. I suggested, rather firmly as I recall, that perhaps part of this $2,700 should be spent outside his district. I explained that our reports indicated the need to (1) activate Tyler, which is outside his district and (2) activate some young students in East Texas Negro Colleges--Prairie View, Mary Allen, Texas College, Butler, etc. VOTE already was financing, partly independent of VEP funds, a pilot student program involving one and subsequently two students from Prairie View. I stated to Mr. Musslewhite that we were desirous, but lacked funds, to put Mr. B. T. Bonner on the road to talk to students and also to Mr. Coleman. (Mr. Coleman had expressed the view that no one was "militant" enough for him, so we thought Mr. Bonner might have the necessary credentials to induce him to listen to the merits of the blockworker approach to political organization and voter registration.)

I further explained to Mr. Musslewhite that we wanted to load Mr. DeWitty's car up with registration-by-mail forms and blockworker kits hand have him distribute them in the smaller hamlets of the counties in which Mrs. LeRoy had visited the larger towns. Though none of the ground to covered by Mr. Bonner and Mr. DeWitty was in Musslewhite's area, they were in the area covered by the grant authorized by the VEP. I accordingly suggested, somewhat insistantly, to Mr. Musslewhite that unless Rev. Thomas had other plans for allocating funds outside the 7th district, that perhaps it would be appropriate for $900 of the $2,700 grant to be used for the various purposes outlined above, including the paying of additional materials to be distributed in rural areas. In due course, monies of the East Texas project amounting to $900, or approximately $900, were forthcoming and were used to defray the traveling expenses of Mr. Bonner, Mr. DeWitty and for the material they distributed.

It was during the travels of Mr. Bonner and Mr. DeWitty that we learned that the Texas Council had persons traveling in the extreme North, Northeast part of Texas. All in all, I think the joint efforts of all became widespread, more so than at anytime in the past--with the Texas Council people, Mrs. LeRoy, Mr. DeWitty for a brief period, Mr. Bonner, the Prairie View students, and Thomas and his people all trying to get the job done. (Mr. Coleman remained resistant to the end. He took the IBM lists of Tyler Negro precincts that VOTE had prepared but did not use them, nor did he use the freedom kits, nor did he recruit any blockworkers. There was, accordingly, a very light vote on Nov. 9th in Tyler. Mr. Coleman is an enigma. He is a Yarborough Democrat and dislikes UPO but apparently he can find no grounds for dealing with Mrs. LeRoy, DeWitty, Bonner, Rev. Taylor of the SCLC, Mrs. Wheat of the NAACP, or anyone else. Bonner completed our confusion by reporting that Mr. Coleman said his idols are Malcolm X and Roy Wilkins!)

I would summarize this East Texas thing with these observations: It is clear that Rev. Thomas and Mr. Musslewhite have worked together a long time, not only in the fall of 1961 and the spring of 1962 but again this fall leading up to the repeal election, and since. Rev. Thomas was deeply depressed when the poll tax was not repealed. He had worked, as no man had worked, in that immediate area. I have always felt that he should have felt disappointed about the performance of the white people of that area, for they certainly didn't support repeal, but he tended to be most concerned about the lack of a truly high Negro turnout for what he regarded as a pivotal election. Actually, the Negro turnout was good for an off-year special election. It was higher, in most instances, than the white vote. In any event, he soon plunged back into the struggle in the registration drive. I do not know the nuances of his relationship with Musslewhite. I can only say, for the two of them, that theirs is a lonely task, in a difficult area, and that Musslewhite is the best white politician we have in East Texas and Thomas the best local leader. On that basis, I am prepared to continue to do what I can to help, insofar as it pertains to voter registration--with the proviso that I am going to try not to be involved in the transmission of funds regarding them in the future, for it proves too burdensome. As I'm sure you appreciate, the VOTE office has enough problems just trying to get the job done on a day-to-day basis.

Now then, Mr. Durham, I apologize for the length of this letter. I am hopeful it makes up for the long period of our lack of contact. I hope I have covered all the essential points.

In summary, I would like to say that VOTE has no long-term budget, is not underwritten by anybody, and thus cannot make long-range plans. We live on a day-to-day basis and we expand our program as we acquire funds. Sometimes we are more or less forced to expand on the basis of anticipated funds, and in one or two instances, this has resulted in a temporary deficit causing top staff people to have to wait awhile for their expenses. We could have been more conservative in our activities, but then we wouldn't have registered nearly as many new people, either, I judge. On balance, I believe we have done pretty well; we ended up on Jan. 31 with a relatively small deficit which has since been made up, and everyone connected with VOTE and the Coalition has been paid in full through January 31st. Therefore, the Texas Council will not have to pay the expense of Mrs. LeRoy as you mentioned in your letter.

Secondly, VOTE's budgets were submitted to, altered by, and approved by the official VOTE board of directors, Mr. Cunningham representing the Texas Council in the discussions of the first budget and Mr. LeRoy for the second. In no instances has any authorization of the VOTE board not been carried out. Additions have been made, as we acquired funds, but no deletions without prior approval of the group involved.

Thirdly, it is certainly my hope that this letter has cleared up any doubt as to whether VOTE has attempted to infringe on the prerogatives of the Texas Council of Voters. If, in any way, you feel this has not been satisfactorily cleared up, you have only to let me know and I will make a trip to Dallas to discuss this with you.

Fourthly, the total funds expended by VOTE and by the Coalition on voter registration activities in Negro areas of Texas is in excess--in fact, substantially in excess--of the funds received by grants from the Voter Education Project. In the course of last fall's effort, it is true that some VEP money was used to pay VOTE staff persons, myself included, but this was by prior arrangement with Mr. Branton--all of these funds were more than made up during the period Oct. 22-November 9th when all activities by everyone statewide were paid by the Coalition from non-VEP funds. This latter includes all funds for local project directors working in Negro precincts in Houston, Beaumont, Galveston, Port Arthur, Dallas, Fort Worth, Waco, Austin and San Antonio. All of these allocations, of course, merely reflected the combined will of all four legs of the Coalition, as announced at the first statewide coalition meeting in Dallas which you you attended last July. As you said then, you have been coalitioning a long time and you know, as fully as any of us, that though the concept is sound, its day to day implementation is difficult. I have had it impressed upon me by many events that weekly communication is almost essential to keep everyone appraised of new events so misunderstandings do not develop. I accept full responsibility for not staying in closer touch with you, Mr. Durham. Though you weren't available by phone, I could have written you, and now realize I should have, at least once a week.

All we had at the beginning was faith; now we have faith, plus 6,000 trained blockworkers, massive new precinct machinery, autonomously directed by each member group of the coalition, the beginnings of machinery in low-income white precincts, and hundreds of new local leaders trained in the blockworker concept of mass use of volunteers. We also have somewhere in the vicinity of 300,000 new Negro and Mexican-American voters on the rolls. Our next challenge, of course, is to improve the blockwroker organization so that as many of these new people as possible actually walk in and vote next May and again next November.

These developments have already begun to have an effect on politician s which is, perhaps, the soundest barometer we have of our progress. I noticed yesterday that the conservative Democratic candidate for the U.S. Senate felt constrained to identify himself as a conservative on economics but a "liberal on civil rights." He went on to say he couln't take a stand on public accomodations as he "had not read the bill," but even with this disclaimer, his position is far removed from the heydey of Allan Shivers, isn't it?

A word, in closing, about the budget for the free registration period. At this moment, we have $5,000 from the AFL-CIO and $1,500 from independent liberals for a total of $6,500. Now, $500 of this is reserved for that PASO phone bill; I am awaiting the forwarding of the telephone company statement by the secretary in the PASO office. Out of the independent liberal contribution, $750 is ticketed for Wiginton's salary for five weeks (Feb 1-March 7) and $350 for travel expenses for him in the same period. The various debts, including Mrs. LeRoy's mentioned earlier, have all now been paid and must be deducted from the total available. This morning, after checking with our bookkeeper, I drew up a proposed budget that visualizes the following allocations:

Anglo project, west Texas	$500
Labor project	$500
Latino project (Valley-wide)	$900
Midland-Odessa (Negro) proj	$200
Texas Council project	$600
Dallas project (Negro)	$400
San Antonio project(Negro)	$200
150,000 registration post card	$270
State office, newsletters, clerical & shipping, rent & salary of exec-sec	$1,280
	$4,850

(Calvin Lee has done an outstanding job in Midland-Odessa Negro precincts & we thought it proper to give him som e help for the first time; Julia Scott in Dallas also has a fine record & we hope to add 10,000 free voters there; Santone money is for M.D. Wright, an associate of Mr. Sutton's.

17) Mr. W. J. Durham

The $600 for the Texas Council is in accordance with your recent letter. This total of $4,850, when coupled with the expenditures summarized in the preceding paragraph puts us some $2,500 over the budget of $6,500. Nevertheless, I think it is a reasonable figure for I hope to be able to raise $2,500 by March 6. Note that this is an urban-centered budget. There are 100,000 unregistered Negroes in the big cities and 100,000 unregistered Mexican-Americans in the deep Rio Grande Valley. Since our inestimable Texas lawmakers have forced this abrupt 30-day period on us, I think the time element precludes intelligent expenditures in rural areas. I propose instead to send 1,000 of the free registration postcards to the Negro leadership in our files in each of the 50 counties of East Texas--or, if you would prefer to use the mailing facilities of the Texas Council, I can ship 50,000 of these postcards (one is stapled at the bottom of this page) to your office in Dallas.

Instead of calling a special meeting of the four VOTE directors (I know everyone is a little worn out from so many meetings--six, since November 9th) I thought I'd try to do it by mail and save everyone some travel expense. Therefore, I am sending a copy of this budget to Albert Pena, Houston Thompson and Roy Evans, all in today's mail, so that by Friday, we can proceed to allocate these disbursements.

A final note. When we got a breathing spell after Jan. 31st, we got some volunteers in the office and I ran off my entire mailing list of 8,500 names, including some 3,000 Negro blockworkers, on 3 X 5 cards. These I am now preparing to ship to you for your permanent files of the Texas Council. However, in mailing the last newsletter to this list, I got quite a few returns, indicating this is a highly mobile list. Some 400 of the Negro blockworkers have already moved. So, tommorrow, we are having another "stuffing party" at the office in which volunteers willextract the obsolete blockworkers from the list. When we finish this task, I will ship the box of some 8,000 names to you at 2600 Flora. They represent the top leadership in Texas in the liberal community, including all four groups in the coalition, in all 254 of Texas' counties. You may want to invite some, or all, to the Texas Council's annual meeting in Fort Worth on March 6-7.

Respectfully,

Larry Goodwyn

Dear Mr. Branton:

I have not had a reply or heard from Larry Goodwyn in response to the letter I wrote him after I saw you in Fort Worth, Texas, a copy of which was sent you.

I am sending you a news item that was carried in the Dallas News and given by the Tax Assessor Collector of Dallas County. His opinion that a vigorous campaign registration up to March 6th would probably increase the present qualified voters by fifty thousand (50,000). I think that his opinion supports the conclusion we came to in Fort Worth that a vigorous two (2) weeks campaign over the state would increase the voting strength of the Negro electors from fifty thousand (50,000) to seventy five thousand (75,000).

With highest personal regards, I am

Aid Funds Pour In

By JAMES EWELL

Workmen, supervised by firemen, Tuesday began hauling away debris left in the wake of Sunday's killer fire, so investigators could examine the ruins.

Firemen said it may be a week or more before investigators can enter the basement of the Golden Pheasant Restaurant, 1417 Commerce, where four firemen perished while fighting the 5-alarm blaze.

Prime arson suspect quizzed by investigators, Sec. 1, Page 1.

Investigators were convinced that the blaze started in the basement. But the wreckage so far has blocked their efforts to determine the origin of the fire.

Contributions to the families of the dead firemen, meanwhile, continued pouring into City Hall and The Dallas News Tuesday.

City Hall tabulators quit for the day Tuesday afternoon with $2,269.85 on deposit, assistant city auditor C. F. Craig reported.

The figure included some, but not all, of the $2,470.35 received by The News since Monday.

The debris removal was authorized by fire officials only with the agreement that it be done under fire department supervision. Fire officials took the step to guard against destroying possible clues to the origin of the blaze.

Fire Chief C. N. Penn put all resources at his command into the investigation. The entire 7-man arson squad was ordered to stay on the probe round-the-clock. Inspectors from the fire-prevention bureau took over the squad's routine investigations for the duration of the top-priority probe.

"We don't know what regular hours are any more," said one investigator, who was still making inquiries at 3 a.m. Tuesday.

None of the arson men was able to attend funerals conducted Tuesday for three of their fellow firemen.

While prevented from making a close-up physical inspection of the ruins, investigators have been interrogating persons connected with the firms involved in the blaze.

Persons desiring to contribute to the fund for families of the four victims should make checks or money orders payable to the Dallas Policemen and Firemen's Welfare Fund. In addition, donors should note whether they want their contributions to go to a specific family or to all four families.

Contributions may be sent to The Dallas News or Dallas City Hall, Room 211.

Among contributions Tuesday was a $100 check from County Commissioner Jesse Bell, a former Dallas fireman. The Garland Firefighters Association collected $125 from Garland fire stations.

Gentle Says 50,000 More Could Vote

By DON MILLSAP

More than 50,000 additional voters qualified to cast ballots in federal elections could be added to Dallas County's voter lists if civic and political groups would get out and work, Tax Assessor-Collector Ben Gentle said Tuesday.

Gentle earlier had predicted that the special 30-day registration period — which began Feb. 5 following passage of the 24th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution abolishing the poll tax—would result in at least 50,000 extra voters.

"I've given out some 150,000 applications for registration to both political parties and to individuals," Gentle said. "If they will get out and work, the figure will be much higher than 50,000."

Gentle also said that preliminary figures show that 333,333 persons had purchased poll taxes or received exemptions before the Jan. 31 deadline. This qualifies poll tax payers to vote in all elections—local, county and state, in addition to federal elections.

"The final figure probably will be a little smaller than this due to duplication of receipts and exemptions," Gentle said.

But registration of voters who will only be able to vote for federal posts—President, vice-president, senator and congressman—is going well, Gentle said.

His downtown courthouse office is now registering an average of about 135 per day, he said.

And with subcourthouse registration and through the use of numerous special registration booths set up in businesses throughout the county, Gentle feels his prediction will be met.

To help qualify voters, the Dallas County Democratic Executive Committee is planning a massive registration drive from Feb. 27 to March 1.

This campaign will be sponsored in cooperation with other interested civic, service and political groups as a non-partisan community effort similar to January's Poll Tax Torchlight Parade, said William H. (Bill) Clark III, Democratic county chairman.

Clark said volunteers will be stationed in major grocery stores throughout the county to sign up the voters.

Although no door-to-door campaign is yet planned by the Republican party, GOP county chairman John Leedom said that party headquarters is encouraging precinct chairmen to contact unregistered voters urging them to obtain the free registration.

Any citizen of Texas between the ages of 21 and 60 years is eligible to register for federal elections by the March 6 deadline if they have not already purchased a poll tax receipt.

Persons over 60 may not register because of the poll tax exemption regulation of Texas voting laws.

Redistricting

POPULATION equality must be the basis for congressional districts, the Supreme Court ruled. But Monday's decision that Georgia's present districting is unconstitutional failed to spell out the rules for equality and constitutionality. The Texas situation is still not clear.

Some unanswered questions:

- Will the Supreme Court approve flotorial redistricting, which ignores county lines, to achieve population equality? (Texas now does this in its own House of Representatives, but not in districting for Congress.)
- If the Texas Legislature should be called in special session and reapportion representation, would the plan meet the undefined court standards for equality?
- Must population equality be the sole yardstick? As Lt. Gov. Preston Smith has pointed out in an earlier article on this page, that would make one Texas district larger than Oklahoma. And, as Federal Judge James Noel pointed out in his dissenting opinion in the 3-judge Texas ruling last fall, population as the sole basis can create lack of representation for minority groups even worse than now exists.

OTHER MYSTERIES of the courts' reasoning on redistricting remain. They confirm the wisdom of Gov. John Connally's decision earlier not to call the Texas Legislature into special session to redistrict. The result might have been far worse—and Texas taxpayers would have paid a heavy cost—if the Legislature had rushed into this dark and troubled forest as many demanded that it do.

Even now, there is a possibility that courts could call for at-large election of Texas' congressmen. Or there could be a ruling that new districts must be created before the November election, improbable as such legislative action would seem in view of past history.

About the only certainty in the whole atmosphere is that federal courts, including the Supreme Court, are determined to bring about districting to make every man's vote equal.

HOW TO DO THIS is the Gordian knot which legislatures must cut through, unless they want courts to redistrict for them. Most Texans and citizens of other states do not want federal domination of states' rights to district.

None of this lessens the obligation of the Texas Legislature to redistrict. Dallas and other cities are shamelessly outvoted by rural electorates. Redistricting should be the first order of business when the next Texas Legislature convenes; it should be done as equitably as possible according to population, but with due concern for representation and rights of rural minorities.

This obligation is no greater than the compulsion upon courts to set clear, fair rules for the game which the judiciary is determined to referee.

Our Legislature can't act until it knows the rules. This was Gov. Connally's position when Republicans were criticizing him, and he was right.

VIA-AIRMAIL SPECIAL DELIVERY

TEXAS COUNCIL OF VOTERS
Universal Life Building
2600 Flora Street
Dallas, Texas

February 13, 1964

The Texas Council of Voters will hold its Fourth Annual Convention at the Blackstone Hotel, Continental Terrace Room, located at 5th and Main Streets, Fort Worth, Texas, March 6,7, 1964.

All members of the Council, members of organizations affiliated with the Council, all citizens eligible to vote and the members of the Texas Coalition are specially invited to attend the Convention.

You are invited to bring as many citizens with you who are holders of poll tax receipts for 1964 and any and all persons who have qualified to vote without the payment of poll tax at all Federal elections. The election in 1964 will be a crucial election, not only for the members of the Council but for every American citizen.

Our government is now passing through one, if not the most crucial period, in the history of its existence. Texas will be a battleground in the 1964 election. Let all of us meet in Fort Worth on the 6th and 7th of March, 1964 and do our whole duty as American citizens, by setting up a constructive and workable program that will cause the largest number of electors in Texas to go to the polls on election day (primary and general elections) and cast the biggest vote in the history of this state for men seeking public office who have shown by their acts and conduct while serving as public officers that they believe in equal rights as well as equal opportunities and equal treatment for all Americans. We must vote and ask our neighbors to vote for men who have never held public office but who make their positions crystal clear on the above questions.

You are not required to have a membership certificate in the Council before coming to Fort Worth. You will be allowed to register after you reach Fort Worth and enjoy full participation in the proceedings of this Convention.

This is a special invitation to each person to whom this invitation is addressed to attend this Convention. Those desiring accommodations (room and board), please write Mrs. Lenora Rolla at 1414 W. Humboldt Avenue, Fort Worth, Texas or call Ed2-4721, ~~JE4-1349 or ED6-5836.~~

Please notify the Assistant Executive Secretary, Mrs. Wanda Thomas, P. O. Box 641, Dallas, Texas your name and address and the names and addresses of all other delegates, who expect to attend the Convention. If you will give the Assistant Executive Secretary your cooperation by sending the names and addresses of all persons who expect to attend the Convention, it will save considerable time, in that the Assistant Executive Secretary can begin now making up the Convention roll from names sent in, and the roll can easily be completed at the Convention from those who register at the Convention. By this procedure, we can save a great deal of lost motion in making up the Convention roll, which will enable us to get down to the work of the Convention immediately.

It is important that all delegates and guests be present at the opening session of the Convention. Men of National reputation will address the Convention each day.

Respectfully,

Liberals Pick Slate For Texas

HOUSTON, Texas (AP) — The "independent liberals" of the Democratic Coalition threw their full support to Don Yarborough, candidate for the nomination for governor, at a statewide organizational meeting Saturday.

Some 200 men and women voted to form under the name Texas Organization of Liberal Democrats (TOLD)—with their slogan, "liberalism, brotherhood and justice" (LBJ)—and also endorse these other candidates in the May 2 Democratic primary:

Albert Fuentes Jr., San Antonio, lieutenant governor; Ralph W. Yarborough, Austin, senator; Dan Sullivan, Andrews, congressman-at-large; John C. White, Austin, commissioner of agriculture; Jesse Owens, Vernon, railroad commissioner, and Fred H. Williams, Dallas, land commissioner.

Don Yarborough called Gov. John Connally a "Tory," a "mossback" and a "Republican" and referred to him as "the sorriest, worst and least effective governor in the history of the state."

The youthful Houston attorney charged "the state Democratic executive committee is controlled by people who think more like Republicans than Democrats."

He said the present governor does not want the state to move forward and could credit 70 per cent of his support to Republican voters in the last Democratic primary.

"He thinks Republican. He has Republican sentiments and Republican friends," the candidate said. "A rose is a rose any way you look at it. He is a Republican."

Yarborough said he has a program "for all segments of the state," but did not elaborate. Plans were announced after his speech to give a $100-a-plate dinner to raise some $20,000 for his campaign.

Fuentes, a former official of the Political Association of Spanish-Speaking Organizations (PASO), said "Texas will go down the drain" unless a lieutenant governor is elected to handle properly bills to solve the state's economic problems.

He said in particular the problems of state government have increased and that the government "is controlled by out-of-state corporations."

Sullivan called the incumbent congressman-at-large, Joe Pool, a "Republican" who is not worthy of liberal support.

Loosely organized for about a year, the independent—or doctrinaire—liberals form one of four branches of the Coalition.

The others are the Texas Council of Voters (Negroes), PASO (Latin Americans) and the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education (COPE).

2 More In Race for Governor

By JIM MOUSNER
Chief of the Post Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A woman Bible teacher from Brenham and a Negro minister from Beaumont paid their filing fees to run for governor Thursday, the last day for fee payments.

The Brenham woman, Mrs Johnnie Mae Hackworthe, 59, brought a $1,000 cashier's check to the state Democratic headquarters in Austin.

The Negro, the Rev M. T. Banks, 71, a retired Baptist minister, sent a Western Union money order.

MRS HACKWORTHE, who operates the House of Prayer in Brenham, entered the capitol news room, held her Bible aloft, and said, "This is my platform."

She was one of 70 candidates in the 1961 special election in which U. S. Sen John Tower, R-Texas, was elected.

Hugh Wilson, a Port Arthur industrial worker who filed as a Democratic candidate in the U. S. Senate race, informed the State Democratic Executive Committee that he would contest the legality of the filing fee requirement, a committee spokesman said.

HE WAS not among the 48 Democratic candidates certified to the secretary of state by the SDEC. This group also included Democrats running for seats on the state's 13 courts of civil appeals.

The SDEC also reported that Joe Pitzinger of Dallas, a 41-year-old engineer and architect, had withdrawn as a candidate for congressman-at-large. This leaves five Democrats seeking the nomination for this office.

The state Republican headquarters certified 15 persons as cadidates for the GOP nomination to 11 state-wide offices.

Among those on the list was Harry Diehl, a Houston businessman who is seeking the Republican gubernatorial nomination. Diehl who filed last Monday, had not paid his $1,000 filing fee late Thursday.

Dear Joe:

In accordance with our conversation of yesterday I am enclosing list of the 22 counties and cities comprising the Fourth Congressional District. The enclosed chart shows the county or city name, the number of Negroes of voting age, the number of Negroes registered and the number remaining to be registered prior to the beginning of our campaign.

As you probably know, several organizations are making efforts to increase Negro voter registration in various counties in the Fourth Congressional District. Our efforts thus far and our continued goal will be to set up a district-wide machinery by which potential Negro voters will be registered, and then assisted to the polls on election days.

We are making a studied effort to co-operate with the existing groups so as to avoid duplication of effort and to minimize friction caused by organizational jealousies.

We have approximately forty days remaining before election day and plan to make an all-out effort during this period.

Very truly yours,

Henry

Expulsion Of John Riddick Called 'Act Of Vengeance'

'Disloyalty' charge scored as cover-up

By RAY BOONE
Special to the AFRO

SUFFOLK, Va. — Is there more to the Nansemond County Democratic Executive Committee's membership expulsion of John R. Riddick — youngest brother of Moses Riddick Jr., No. 1 colored leader of this heavily colored populated county — than "disloyalty" to the party?

An emphatic "yes" was the answer that Moses, the oldest of three politically aggressive, closely-knit brothers, gave the AFRO here last Friday.

Big Brother Moses charges that the expulsion of John was "an attempted act of vengeance" stemming from his recent political success.

The Hampton Institute-educated Moses, who defeated incubent N. T. Poarch — white and a Democrat — Nov. 5 in the general election battle for a seat on the County Board of Supervisors, said:

* * *

"THE CHOPPING of my brother's head off was really a chop at me because of my victory. The white folk downtown still haven't gotten over the fact that there's colored representation on the 'inside' "

"Poor fellow," he added, shaking his head "they sure are taking it hard."

Then he said firmly: "All of this is going to boomerang right back in their faces."

John, one of two non-whites elected Sept. 4 to the local Democratic Executive Committee for the first time in modern history was ousted last Wednesday night after a fiery meeting in which the third Riddick brother, Haywood, came to the defense of John.

And, in refusing to yield the floor, Haywood forced the Executive Committee into a secret session behind closed doors at the County Court House.

JOHN, AS a committeeman was charged with disloyalty in refusing to sign a newspaper advertisement supporting [illegible] "so why should my brother be?"

Moses refers to the Cross case as another tactic of the Executive Committee to split the colored vote and keep the board all-white.

"But, thank God, he (Cross) saw what was happening and withdrew" says Moses.

After Cross' withdrawal from the race, the battle was between Riddick and Poarch.

HISTORY would have been against Moses had Cross continued in the race. On two other occasions, when a second colored candidate was in the race, Moses lost by narrow margins.

Moses, who has devoted 17 of his 46 years to almost nothing but building the Independent Voters League, believes the expulsion of John will be a cause for "our people to further unite and accelerate our voting drive" to eliminat "unfair and undemocratic practices."

Apparently, this is the "boomerang" Moses was talking about.

Over the last eight years, says Moses, it has been the IVL — not the local Democratic Party — that has determined who would win or lose in the county.

In the November election, he points out, the IVL — through its bloc voting—defeated three party candidates running for Board of Supervisors seats. There are five seats on the board.

IF THE Riddick Brothers have their way, it is unlikely —in view of John's expulsion —that the trend against party candidates will be changed

"You'll see the results in the next election," Haywood told the Executive Committee at the Wednesday night meeting.

He said that John's expulsion would mop out Mills Godwin's chances of reaching the governor's seat and would also jeopardize reelection of local Democratic officeholders.

cated Moses, who defeated incubent N. T. Poarch — white and a Democrat — Nov. 5 in the general election battle for a seat on the County Board of Supervisors, said:

And, in refusing to yield the floor, Haywood forced the Executive Committee into a secret session behind closed doors at the County Court House.

JOHN, AS a committeeman was charged with disloyalty in refusing to sign a newspaper advertisement supporting Poarch, his brother's political opponent.

All three brothers regard the Executive Committee's stand as an insult to not only themselves — but the colored populace in general.

Asked, John's first verbal reaction on receiving notification of the Executive Committee's charge against him through certified mail was:

"These people must be crazy to think I would turn against my own brother. What they wanted me to do was to sell my people down the river. They must be crazy!"

John has openly declared that he will fight the architects of his expulsion until "the bitter end."

* * *

BIG BROTHER Moses further believes that John's election to the Executive Committee was a part of a plan to split the colored vote —and "keep the Board of Supervisors lily-white."

But they failed, said the hard-working executive secretary of the powerful Independent Voters League here, adding:

"Once again they underestimated the unity of our people and the Riddick brothers. They thought John would fall for their little trick and disown his people and me — but again they were wrong.

"I repeat, all of this is going to boomerang in their faces."

THE PRACTICE of expelling one and not all who perform identical acts, claims the Brothers Three, is both "unfair and undemocratic." The Democratic Party, they charge further, is employing dual systems of justice.

Executive Committee Vice Chairman Willie C. Knight, accuses John, is as much guilty of party disloyalty as he, but Knight, a white man, hasn't been booted off the committee.

John charges that Knight "circulated and signed" a petition in behalf of the candidacy of Charles E. Cross, a colored businessman once faithful to the Riddick camp, when he (Cross) tossed his hat in the ring as an independent running for the same seat as Poarch and Riddick.

SEN. HARRY BYRD (D., Va.), charges Haywood, publicly declined to back Stevenson for President in 1952 and Lt. Gov. Mills Godwin refused to endorse President Kennedy in 1960.

"Neither of them were expelled," recalls Haywood, a cause for "our people to further unite and accelerate our voting drive" to eliminat "unfair and undemocratic practices."

Apparently, this is the "boomerang" Moses was talking about.

Over the last eight years, says Moses, it has been the IVL — not the local Democratic Party — that has determined who would win or lose in the county.

In the November election, he points out, the IVL — through its bloc voting—defeated three party candidates running for Board of Supervisors seats. There are five seats on the board.

IF THE Riddick Brothers have their way, it is unlikely —in view of John's expulsion —that the trend against party candidates will be changed

"You'll see the results in the next election," Haywood told the Executive Committee at the Wednesday night meeting.

He said that John's expulsion would mop out Mills Godwin's chances of reaching the governor's seat and would also jeopardize reelection of local Democratic officeholders.

WHY CAN these three colored brothers talk so big? Mainly because they've got power in numbers (or votes) to back it up. The IVL, of which Moses is kingpin, controls the balance of power in Nansemond County.

Nansmond, which thrives on the peanut industry, has a heavy colored population—outnumbering the whites, 22,000 to 11,000, in round figures.

There are 3,500 eligible colored voters as compared to 4,500 white—and the colored vote, according to Moses, is steadily increasing. "The whites are now scraping the barrel for votes," he added.

BUT THIS hasn't always been the case in voter breakdown. When Moses returned to his native Suffolk in 1944 from Hampton Institute, he apparently viewed the colored political situation as dark and depressing as Booker T. Washington, also from Hampton, viewed the colored educational condition when he arrived at Tuskegee, Ala., in 1881 to establish a school.

In January 1945 — when the IVL was founded — there were only 83 colored voters in the entire county, recalls Moses.

Is there more to the expulsion case here than "disloyalty?"

Moses thinks it's basically the vote disguised by the word "disloyalty."

VTA Plans Conference On Citizenship April 18

Pour. & Sunday, 4-18-64

LAWRENCEVILLE, Va. — The Virginia Teachers Association has announced that the campus of Saint Paul's College here has been selected as the site of its statewide Conference on Citizenship on Saturday, April 18.

Dr. G. James Fleming, professor of political science at Morgan State College, Baltimore, will be the featured speaker for the meeting of educators from all over Virginia who are expected to convene for this meeting.

Registration will begin at 9:30 a.m., and the first general session will get under way at 10 a.m.

DR. FLEMING, who is also director of Morgan State College's Ford Foundation Institute for Political Education, a project on citizenship, will discuss primarily the teacher's role in encouraging greater participation among students, the parents and the community.

The theme of this day-long gathering is "Needed - Full Citizenship Participation in Virginia." Conference participants will examine the role of the teacher and the citizen in the promotion of dynamic citizenship with both students and adults in the community.

THIS meeting is a follow-up of an earlier meeting, "Virginia Forward," called by the VTA last December, which involved citizens and leaders from throughout the state from all professions and trades. The April 18 meeting here, consisting primarily of teachers, will do essentially what was asked of all leaders attending the December gathering. At this time, it was requested that each group hold a meeting within their own professional or trades' group on a statewide level to promote citizenship — with the full intent to secure new understanding and greater support at these economic levels for effective citizenship action.

Dr. Earl H. McClenney, St. Paul's president, will deliver the luncheon address. Participating on the panel discussion preceding the luncheon will be George Pannell, president, Crusade for Voters, Richmond; George Hill, who was a City Council candidate in the city of Covington not long ago; Moses Riddick, executive secretary of the Independent Voters League in Suffolk and Nansemond county and commissioner; and Mrs. Louise H. Carter, secretary of civic education, VTA, Chesapeake. Mrs. Carter will serve as moderator.

Court Junks Jim Crow In State Records

Jour. & Guide
5-9-64

ALEXANDRIA — In a suit brought about by an integrated group of Northern Virginia residents, a three-judge Federal Court reversed portions of the State Constitution which required indication of race on state poll tax lists, voter registrations and property records.

The group challenged the long-standing law as being unconstitutional. The court in agreeing with the plaintiffs, declared that state laws which require racial designation are in conflict with the 14th amendment to the U. S. Constitution.

Commenting on the decision, Gov. Albertis S. Harrison said, "it may pose some problems and may make it more difficult to identify one voter from another."

THE EXECUTIVE secretary of the State Board of Elections stated that the only effect the reversal would have would be to make it impossible to determine the number of eligible Negro and white voters.

The injunction, which also prohibits the keeping of separate voter registration books for whites and Negroes, will become effective Dec. 31, 1964.

In apparent anticipation of possible attempts to circumvent the decision, the court wrote, "No form of state discrimination, no matter how subtle, is permissible under the guarantee of the 14th amendment."

THE OPINION was written by Judge Albert V. Bryan, of the 4th U. S. Court of Appeals. He was joined by Federal District John D. Butzer Jr., of Richmond and Oren R. Lewis of Alexandria.

Concerning your inquiry of July 9 this agency can supply separate maps of each of Virginia's 98 counties but these maps show only the magisterial districts, These are the voting districts for the counties. We do not maintain city maps or town maps showing voting precincts or other political units. The county maps are available at 10 cents each.

The Virginia State Chamber of Commerce at 611 E. Franklin Street, Richmond, may have booklets on Virginia government which contain maps showing legislative and judicial districts and possibly may have other helpful material.

The best city maps are available from the cities themselves. Enclosed is a map showing U.S. congressional districts in Virginia, a regular state highway map, a sample of our county maps, and a price list for all of our maps.

I am sorry that we could not be of more assistance.

Richmond Quietly Leads Way in Race Relations

By Robert E. Baker
Staff Reporter

RICHMOND—In 1957, Editor Virginius Dabney of the Richmond Times-Dispatch wrote with accuracy and a heavy heart: "The tragic fact is today that hardly any liaison remains between the white leadership and the Negro leadership."

A year later, Editor James Jackson Kilpatrick of the Richmond News Leader wrote with his typical fiery zeal: "Speaking for those of like mind, let us say this: We do not yield. We do not expect to yield ever."

Dabney's lament and Kilpatrick's proclamation were voiced in the troubled days of "massive resistance" in Virginia and general defiance in the South of the Supreme Court's school desegregation decision. Their views reflected the situation then in Richmond, where traditional moderation, understanding and well-mannered discussion in race relations had been shelved.

Yet today, the progress that has been made in desegregation and non-discrimination in Richmond is one of the exciting racial stories in the South. Its pace astonishes many Richmonders, white and Negro.

Key to the Council

THE NEGRO VOTE, once the kiss of death, now is an asset; no candidate for City Council can afford to offend it and expect to win. The City has adopted a fair employment policy in municipal jobs, unique in the South, and Negro Richmonders have better job opportunities than ever before.

Negroes may stop at several formerly white-only hotels and dine at several formerly white-only restaurants. Some 130 Negro children, probably more, will be attending formerly white-only classes when the public schools reopen this fall.

Perhaps nowhere else in the country, certainly nowhere else in the South, do Negroes use their vote with more sophistication than in Richmond. It wasn't always so.

Not many years ago, the Negro vote in Richmond was a commodity to be purchased on the sly by white politicians from Negro salesmen who claimed they could deliver the goods. Public endorsement of a candidate by Negroes meant disaster, a fact used cleverly by more than one politician who would circulate a spurious Negro endorsement of his opponent.

During the days of massive resistance and accompanying racial rancor, Negroes tried "single-shot" voting for Negro candidates in City Council campaigns. But these candidates got only that vote and went down to defeat.

The Heberle Case

BUT THINGS changed in 1960 with the emergence of the Crusade for Voters, headed by intellectual Negro leaders. Abandoned was the single-shot technique. Instead, the Crusade examined each candidate for City Council and endorsed a full slate of nine candidates. The change was dramatic, as the case of Councilman Robert J. Heberle shows.

In 1957, Councilman Heberle urged Richmond to withdraw its financial aid to the Virginia National Guard in retaliation for the federalization of the Arkansas National Guard during the Little Rock crisis. In 1958, when President Eisenhower requested public officials to comply with the Supreme Court's school decision, Heberle, as Vice Mayor at that time, fired back a letter of refusal. In 1959, Councilman Heberle advocated that Richmond cut off local funds to any school that became desegregated.

By 1960, therefore, the Crusade for Voters viewed Heberle as an ardent segregationist and he was not among the slate of candidates it endorsed in the City Council elections that year. The 37 per cent of the vote that Heberle got wasn't enough for his re-election.

A Shrewd Demonstration

AFTER TWO YEARS out of office Heberle announced his candidacy for City Council in the June elections this year. He promised to serve and work for all the citizens. He gave his wholehearted support to the City Council's fair employment resolution, which had been approved unanimously shortly before the election.

With a touch of political genius, the Crusade for Voters endorsed Heberle and he led the field of 25 candidates with 51 per cent of the vote. The lesson was clear. The Negroes had bounced a segregationist from the Council, then returned him when he repented.

Lack of the Crusade's support in 1960 also knocked veteran Councilman Phil J. Bagley, Jr. from office. He was returned to the Council this June, however, without the Crusade's endorsement. Yet he still was to feel the influence of the Negro vote.

In Richmond, a new City Council elects the mayor from among its members, and the new Council in June was deadlocked: four votes for Bagley, four votes for Heberle and one vote for Eleanor P. Sheppard. The Crusade leadership said the Negroes would be displeased if Bagley were elected mayor.

On the 25th ballot, Mrs. Sheppard became the first woman mayor in the city's history. She had been endorsed by the Crusade.

Some Clever Timing

LED AND EDUCATED by the Crusade's leadership of Negro professional and businessmen and faculty members of Virginia Union College, about 8000 Negro voters went to the polls in June, two-thirds of the qualified Negro voters in the city. Some 14,000 white Richmonders voted, perhaps one-third of the qualified white voters.

The Crusade didn't announce its endorsements until just before election day, so the candidates worked to win the Negro vote right up to the deadline. The Crusade's selections included members of the two rival tickets, so one ticket wasn't tempted to use Negro support as an issue against the other.

Seven of the nine Council winners had received the Crusade's endorsement. The two losing endorsees came in 10th and 11th. No. 10 was a Negro. Another Negro candidate without the Crusade's endorsement came in 20th.

Negro Richmonders have matured as a political force. They also have matured in the use of their economic power.

The Richmond Citizens Advisory Council was formed by representatives of 36 primarily Negro organizations 18 months ago to help Virginia Union students who had participated in sit-in demonstrations in Richmond department stores and restaurants. Even before the RCAC asked for funds, the Negro community raised $14,000 for that purpose.

The responsibility of the RCAC leadership was shown early when some Negro pickets at a department store carried signs offensive to Jews. RCAC leaders told the Negroes to remove such signs at once or the RCAC would withdraw its support of the picketing. Down came the signs.

Boycotting of the Miller & Rhoads and Thalhimer's department stores undoubtedly was effective. Shopping excursions to Washington stores were organized by the Negroes.

One of the RCAC leaders is J. Rupert Picott, executive secretary of the Virginia Teachers Association (Negro). He advised a Richmond hotel that teachers attending a VTA meeting would try to register at the hotel. The hotel management said it would prefer that the registrants be integrated rather than all-Negro —so some white teachers from northern Virginia came to Richmond and registered at the hotel, too.

Last year, the RCAC went into negotiations with the Virginia Transit Co., a private company with a municipal franchise that operates Richmond's buses, over the hiring of the first Negro bus drivers. Progress was slow. Finally, the Negroes indicated that a bus boycott might be called.

The transit firm then agreed to hire Negro drivers if the RCAC would postpone any action until after the company took up a new rate schedule with the City Council. The RCAC waited.

On March 5, four Negro applicants supplied by the Richmond Urban League began their training with the VTC. They began driving buses April 1.

Negotiations also have gained Negroes jobs as food checkers in chain supermarkets. The RCAC was surprised to learn that meat cutters in the back rooms, jobs sometimes available to Negroes, paid more than the food checkers, but they wanted Negroes as checkers because they are visible to the buying public, a symbol of progress that can be seen.

One of the remaining uncracked fields of segregation in Richmond is the motion picture theaters. Here the Negroes have no ready economic weapon because they haven't been admitted to the white-only theaters in the past and thus can't withhold their patronage now.

Negotiations are under way. It is felt that the theater owners are awaiting the outcome of a pending suit by Negroes against the Mosque and Parker Field.

The colorful Mosque is the city-owned auditorium which is leased to sponsoring organizations. The lease calls for adherence to the state law requiring segregated seating.

In fact, segregation at the Mosque is spottily enforced. Some "Twist Nights" in the Mosque ballroom have been integrated; operatic and symphonic presentations are generally segregated. In any event, Negroes are contesting the state segregated seating law.

Also segregated is Parker Field, the city-owned baseball park leased to the Richmond Virginians, the International League farm club of the New York Yankees. Negro baseball fans must sit in Section 16.

Negroes are testing the state law to force desegregation at Parker Field and it is likely that the baseball management hopes privately that they win. It would nourish the boxoffice if the fans now easily accommodated in Section 16 swelled to such numbers as to overflow several sections.

Negro leaders good-humoredly tell the story of an injured Negro player on the Virginians' team who didn't suit up for a recent game and sat in a white section to watch it. The player refused to move at the request of an attendant who then called a policeman. Recognizing the player, the policeman said he would have to move to the Negro section unless he put on his uniform.

THE PROGRESS of the Negro in Richmond must be credited in part to the rise of firm, responsible and sophisticated Negro leadership which speaks softly and carries a big stick of political and economic power by commanding the support of the Negro community. But white Richmond and its leadership must also be credited for its good will and understanding.

The top academic senior this year at the Medical College of Virginia was Charles Fletcher Christian, 37, a Negro. But neither he nor the five other Negroes in the graduating class of 88 were sent invitations to the social functions of graduation week-end.

MCV President R. Blackwell Smith Jr. said the exclusion policy was designed "to conform to the social customs of the community." When MCV professors heard about it they voted 70 to 14 against such exclusion. The senior class petitioned the college administration to change the policy.

THE RICHMOND Times-Dispatch said editorially that it was only right for the Negroes to be invited. It also asked understanding of the MCV officials involved. "Like most other Virginians, they have had to adjust their thinking to the changing times," it said.

The Richmond News Leader, while noting that it wasn't yielding in its opposition to school desegregation, said that the Negroes should be invited. "Any other policy is indefensible," it declared.

The MCV executive committee ruled that the Negroes wouldn't be denied admission if they appeared. The policy now is under study and it's unlikely that Negroes will be excluded in the future.

COMPARISON OF the Negro Richmonder's lot today with that in the period of "massive resistance" causes astonishment in observers and participants alike. Yet the progress is not surprising in the light of Richmond's history of race relations before massive resistance.

The city led the South in bus desegregation and the employment of Negro policemen. A Negro won election to the City Council in 1948 with the help of white voters. City officials kept their offices open on Saturdays in 1947 to cooperate with a voter registration drive by the NAACP.

In 1951, the Virginia NAACP held an integrated convention at the Mosque and the city said, well, it's a private organization, and looked the other way. Back in 1925, the city suspended segregation ordinances and Jim Crow regulations when the Negro Elks held their national convention in Richmond.

SOME OBSERVERS see an end to the new political status of the Negro Richmonder if the city succeeds in annexing huge chunks of neighboring Henrico and Chesterfield Counties, reasoning that the white suburbanites would dilute the influence of the Negro vote. The annexation proceedings now are in court.

But others believe that the racial relations progress and the present era of increased racial understanding now have too solid a foundation to crumble. The 225-year-old city, a symbol of Virginia and the South, has turned a historic corner in race relations after a five-year detour.

It was in August, 1958, that the Richmond News Leader urged stubborn resistance to school desegregation as the zero hour neared in "massive resistance."

"Virginians," said the editorial, "are about to have an opportunity to demonstrate to the whole country—indeed, to the whole world—what it means to be a Virginian."

Today, Richmond is demonstrating what it means.

Estimates Of Voters By Districts

Latest estimates of the number of qualified voters in Virginia are shown in the tables below, by cities, counties and congressional districts. Except for five localities, the figures are those reported as of April 1 to the State Board of Elections by local court clerks or registrars. No reports have reached the state board from Cumberland, Pittsylvania, King William, Giles or Radford. Figures listed for these five localities are approximations. In addition to the white and Negro classifications, Charles City county reported 82 Indians, an increase of 11 over the 1962 figure.

Rights bill passage could affect half of state's counties

BY MICKEY LOGUE
News staff writer

Passage of the voting rights section in the administration's controversial new civil rights bill could result in appointment of federal voting referees to register Negroes in 33 of Alabama's 67 counties.

These figures emerged from a Congressional Quarterly study of the 261 counties in 11 Southern states in which less than 15 per cent of the Negroes of voting age are registered to vote.

Under terms of the proposed civil rights legislation, court registration machinery, including the use of referees, could be activated in such counties immediately upon the filing by the U. S. attorney general of a complaint alleging a pattern or practice of discrimination. Registration would then proceed while the voting rights suit was pending in the courts.

Alabama is third among states with the highest ratio of counties with less than 15 per cent of voting age Negroes registered. Others include Mississippi (76 of 82), South Carolina (26 of 46), Louisiana (23 of 64), Georgia 36 of 159), Virginia 13 of 97) and Texas (22 of 254).

Scattered counties with similarly low Negro registration are located in Arkansas, Florida, Tennessee and North Carolina.

IN TERMS OF congressional district politics, Congressional Quarterly said the greatest impact might be felt in Mississippi and South Carolina. There are many districts in the two states which are composed completely or principally of counties where less than 15 per cent of eligible Negroes are registered.

The study disclosed that Alabama's nine former congressional districts contained from one to seven such counties.

Passage of the voting rights measure could mean federal voting referees in five of seven First District counties, seven of nine Second District Counties, five of 10 Third District counties, three of eight Fourth District counties, three of eight Fifth District counties, six of eight Sixth District counties, one of nine Seventh District counties and the one-county (Jefferson) Ninth District.

The smallest percentage (10) of registered Negro voters was in the Third District, where only 5,882 of 58,968 voting age non-whites were enrolled, according to 1961 figures. The largest percentage of registered Negro voters was in the Seventh District, where 31.8 per cent, or 3,609 of 11,339 voting age Negroes, were registered.

The largest percentage (81.8) of registered white voters also was found in the Seventh District. The Ninth District had the smallest percentage of registered white voters in 1961, 48.5 per cent. And only 10.2 per cent of the voting age Negroes were registered to vote in the Ninth District in 1961.

NEGROES MADE UP about 30 per cent, or 980,271, of the 3,266,740 Alabama population when the 1960 census was taken. In 1961, 66,009 (13.7 per cent) of the 481,320 voting age non-whites were registered, as compared to 860,073 (63.6 per cent) of the 1,353,058 eligible white persons.

In two Alabama counties, Lowndes and Wilcox, there were no Negro voters when 1961 statistics were compiled.

The number of Negroes more than 21 years old in the same counties were Lowndes, 5.122, and Wilcox, 6,085.

In Lowndes, Wilcox and six other of the 33 Alabama counties in which less than 15 per cent of the voting age Negroes were registered, more than 100 per cent of the number of eligible white persons listed were enrolled to vote.

An authoritative source said the discrepancy existed because certain white persons who had died or moved away had not been stricken from the voting rolls at that time.

GREENE COUNTY of the former Sixth District had the largest percentage (120) of registered white voters. The over-21 white population totaled 1,649 and there were 1,979 white persons listed as registered to vote, according to Congressional Quarterly.

The percentages of registered white voters in the seven other counties in which white registration surpassed eligible white residents were Lowndes, 118.4; Monroe, 111.2; Wilcox, 107.1; Bibb, 102.5; Clarke, 102.5; Hale, 102.2, and Butler, 100.5.

The adult populations of Wilcox, Lowndes, Greene and Hale Counties are predominantly Negro.

White persons are in the majority in Monroe, Bibb, Clarke and Butler Counties.

Of the 33 Alabama counties studied, Madison had the lowest percentage of registered white voters. Only 40 per cent, or 22,000 of 54,516 voting age white persons, were registered.

THE NUMBER and percentage of voting age white and Negro residents registered in the former congressional districts in 1961 were:

First District, 89,321 whites, 57.5 per cent; 10,977 Negroes, 13.4 per cent; Second District, 100,252 whites, 67.7 per cent; 7,554 Negroes, 11.2 per cent; Third District, 72,107 whites, 64.6 per cent; 5,882 Negroes, 10 per cent; Fourth District, 85,089 whites, 67.2 per cent; 6.727 Negroes, 14.4 per cent; Fifth District, 118,360 whites, 77 per cent; 5,115 Negroes, 21.5 per cent.

Sixth District, 61,578 whites, 66.7 per cent; 7,331 Negroes, 16.2 per cent; Seventh District, 102,331 whites, 81.8 per cent; 3,609 Negroes, 31.8 per cent; Eighth District, 106,775 whites, 58 per cent; 6,914 Negroes, 22.8 per cent, and Ninth District, 124,260 whites, 48.5 per cent; 11,900 Negroes, 10.2 per cent.

The Congressional Quarterly said an "ironic byproduct" of the proposed civil rights legislation might be a rush by white voting officials in some counties to enroll enough additional Negroes to bring the figure up to 15 per cent and thus preclude appointment of a federal voting referee who might quickly register a far greater percentage.

THE QUARTERLY said experience under the 1960 act showed that a strong court injunction often has resulted in the registration of substantial numbers of Negroes without the necessity of referees or direct involvement of federal judges.

In Macon County, for instance, Negro registration rose from 1,000 before filing of a voting rights suit to about 3,300 by latest counts. In Bullock County, the number of Negro registrants rose from a pretrial figure of five to about 1,100.

Apparently more than 15 per cent of the voting age Negroes in Macon and Bullock counties are now registered to vote. They are not listed among the 33 counties included in the Congressional Quarterly study.

The following is a complete list of Alabama counties in which Congressional Quarterly figures show less than 15 per cent of voting age Negroes are registered to vote:

With the Democrats...

8:52—State Sen. E. E. Willey arrives, at a moment when he's on downswing in see-saw race with Tazewell Carrington. "It's the Negro vote," he tells a reporter. "I can't buy their vote; I don't know what else to do."

8:55 — Sen. Willey, after handshaking tour of bystanders at studio door, goes to the posting board. "Here come the North Side precincts . . . they did a real good job last time . . ."

9:00 — "See what the Crusade is doing to me?" Sen. Willey exclaims as another Negro precinct reports.

Excerpts

Richmond Times-Dispatch, Wed., Nov. 6, 1963

Local Win Is First In Nearly Century

Vote Heavier Than Expected

More than 37,000 city and county voters went to the polls. Registration officials had predicted a total vote of only 29,500.

Traditionally, the November general election attracts fewer voters than the July Democratic primary. But tradition fell yesterday. The election total was at least 5,000 higher than the primary total.

In the city, 23, 913 persons—6,000 more than officials estimated—went to the polls. In the county, the total vote only slightly exceeded pre-election estimates.

Richmond's Negro vote was an important factor in the Smith, Herrink victory. It also helped push Pollard and Bradshaw to the totp of the ticket.

Backed All Republicans

The Crusade for Voters, a powerful Negro organization, backed all Republican candidates and Pollard and Bradshaw.

Crusade officials predicted before the election that 8,000 Negroes would vote. It is too early to tell how many did, but the Negro vote was obviously heavy.

Smith said last night he accepted his victory in "the deepest sense of humility."

Herrink said the Republicans demonstrated that they have "put together a hard-driving group of people who know what they want in politics and how to get it. What they want is competition and two-party system. As of today, we have it."

Tally Now Official

Negro Vote Held Key In Powhatan Upset

Times-Dispatch News Bureau

POWHATAN, Nov. 8—Solid bloc Negro voting appears to have played a major role in the upset election victory by Roscoe L. Timberlake over Samuel W. Bonifant, incumbent chairman of the Powhatan county board of supervisors.

Powhatan election commissioners have confirmed Timberlake's 12-vote margin over Bonifant, 261-249. The official vote canvass Thursday produced the same tally as unofficial tabulations Tuesday night.

Timberlake has been an outspoken advocate of a strong public school system in Powatan where public school integration occurred this fall for the first time.

There are two voting precincts in Macon district, the seat for which the two men contended.

In Smith's Crossroads precinct, where Timberlake had an official 202-102 margin, about 190 Negroes are reported to have voted. In Ballsville precinct, carried by Bonifant 147-59, there were 30 to 35 Negro votes.

"I think it helped immensely," Mrs. Elizabeth Hobson, Powatan NAACP president, said Friday when asked about the Negro role in Timberlake's victory.

"I think it is the best move we've had since Judge John L. Butzner handed down his decision this year," she added. She referred to a federal court order to desegregate Powhatan's formerly all-white public school.

Timberlake and his wife were leaders in Citizen's for Public Education, a group formed to promote high enrollment in the school. According to latest figures, 439 students—including 60 Negroes—are attending the public school, while about 550 white children are enrolled in Huguenot Academy, a private segregated system.

Victory in 3rd Try

Riddick Promises Work

By PRESTON CHARLES

Virginian-Pilot Staff Writer

SUFFOLK — Moses A. Riddick, victorious Tuesday in his third general-election try for the Nansemond County Board of Supervisors, promised Wednesday to be a "working supervisor."

The 43-year-old Negro political leader, running as an independent, defeated 65-year-old Democratic incumbent N. T. Poarch in Tuesday's race for supervisor from Cypress Magisterial District.

Riddick defeated Poarch 850 to 579. The result was not known until 2:30 a.m. Wednesday when officials of Pauls Branch Precinct finished tallying a record 1,017 votes.

STUDY OTHERS

"There are going to be some improvements made in the county," Riddick said Wednesday. "I'm going to be a working supervisor and a studious supervisor. First, I think we should look at the things that are being done in other growing counties and try to use some of their ideas in improving our county," he said.

How does the only Negro on a five-man board expect to put over the improvements he campaigned for?

Riddick pointed out that two new supervisors, Joseph A. Savage of Whaleyville and Lester K. Mansfield of Sleepy Hole, will take office along with him Jan. 1. He said Savage and Mansfield got considerable Negro support in their successful Democratic primary races.

"We feel that since we worked in their behalf in the primary, we should get their support in the improvements we seek," Riddick said.

Most of the improvements Riddick advocates are involved with the rapid urbanization of Nansemond County.

"I don't think that we on the just slap our stomachs and make Board of Supervisors should motions and then go away and wait until next month," he said. "Other counties and cities are spilling over into Nansemond, and we ought to realize that and start making plans."

Tuesday's election was a heated affair in Cypress District's three precincts, Eastover, predominantly white; Cypress, mostly white; and Pauls Branch, predominantly Negro.

As usual when there is a heavy vote, Eastover and Cypress results were announced hours before the Pauls Branch court.

BIGGEST EVER

The 1,017-vote total in Pauls Branch is believed to be the largest ever recorded at any Nansemond County precinct. The precinct officials' task was complicated by a mass of write-in votes for the Rev. H. W. Bell, Suffolk-Nansemond NAACP head, for the House of Delegates.

Poarch's defeat came as no surprise to Nansemond County white political leaders. Most of them had been predicting the outcome because of the increase in Negro voter qualification in East Suffolk. It is believed that Negroes who had registered and paid their poll taxes in Cypress district outnumbered whites by about 1,000 to 600.

Moses Riddick

Riddick was defeated by Poarch in elections in 1955 and 1959. Poarch received enough Negro votes from Pauls Branch in those elections to guarantee his victory.

Tuesday's election saw Negroes voting as a block for Riddick.

EARLY RETURNS

Early returns from Eastover and Cypress gave Poarch a substantial early lead. He won by 133 to 3 in Eastover, and by 262 to 32 in Cypress, and went into Pauls Branch with a 360-vote majority.

Riddick is only the second Negro to be elected to the Board of Supervisors in modern times. In 1947 Negro insurance man William A. Lawrence defeated Democratic nominee Frank E. Harrell, 292 to 290. Lawrence's victory came chiefly because of white voter apathy, and because of the work of the Independent Voters League, which Riddick had just organized.

The Independent Voters League was a big factor in Riddick's victory Tuesday. The organization worked chiefly on registering Negro voters, and getting them to pay their poll taxes.

Write-In Startles Politicos

SUFFOLK — "Who's H. W. Bell?" Suffolk-Nansemond County white residents asked Tuesday night when writein votes under that name began to appear in balloting for the House of Delegates.

Negro voters knew the answer. The recipient of these ballots is the Rev. H. W. Bell, middle-aged pastor of Macedonia AME Church at 127 Pine St., Suffolk. He has become better known recently, though, as president of the Suffolk-Nansemond chapter of the NAACP.

When the votes for the Rev. Mr. Bell first began trickling in, no one took the matter seriously. But later in the evening they began piling up. And when it was all over, a Virginian-Pilot count indicated a total of about 700 votes for the minister in Suffolk, Nansemond and Isle of Wight.

Haywood Riddick (brother of Moses Riddick, successful candidate for Nansemond Board of Supervisors) said the Bell campaign was largely a protest against Gov. Albertis S. Harrison's recently announced plan to retain the poll tax in state elections.

Haywood Riddick said the votes were for the Rev. Mr. Bell and against Del. Shirley T. Holland of Windsor, who represents the floater district of Suffolk-Nansemond-Isle of Wight in the lower house of the General Assembly.

He said the Negro group has nothing against Del. J. Lewis Rawls Jr. of Suffolk, who represents Suffolk-Nansemond.

There was confusion over the writeins among election officials, and some said they could not tell whether the Rev. Mr. Bell's votes were for the floater House seat or the Suffolk-Nansemond seat.

That question was irrelevant, since both Holland and Rawls had plenty of votes to spare. But the relative success of the campaign shook up many politicians hereabouts and now has them pondering what they are in for, with a large and active Negro bloc vote that can mount such an impressive writein drive without letting the word get out.

The Rev. Mr. Bell is widely known among Negroes here. He is active in the Independent Voters League, Riddick's political organization, as well as the NAACP. He speaks frequently at IVL meetings, in a folksy style of oratory that draws laughter and cheers, especially when he lays into the "Uncle Toms."

Haywood Riddick said the campaign was aimed at Holland because he is known to be a conservative and a follower of the Byrd organization.

Richmond's Negro Vote

Announcement by B. A. CEPHAS JR., respected Negro businessman, of his candidacy for City Council serves to call attention to the newly demonstrated influence of the Negro voting bloc in Richmond.

MR. CEPHAS announced as an independent, but expressed the hope that he would receive the support "of all groups and individuals."

An interesting question here is whether Richmond Forward, the newly-formed civic organization, will back MR. CEPHAS. It has not made known any slate of candidates, but is expected to announce one in ample time for next June's councilmanic election.

A campaign for poll tax payment by an additional 6,000 Negro voters here was made known over the past week end.

Already there are some 14,000 Negroes here who have paid their poll taxes and are otherwise qualified for the franchise, or nearly one-third of the white total. About 6,000 of them are estimated to have gone to the polls on November 5 when members of the General Assembly were chosen. This is a greater percentage than went to the polls on that date from the white group.

The colored vote had a direct bearing on the selection of the Richmond Assemblymen, just as several members of City Council hold their seats today because they got that vote.

Consider, for example, the fact that LOUIS S. HERRINK JR. and S. STROTHER SMITH JR., the first Republicans elected to the Virginia legislature from Richmond since Reconstruction, received strong Negro backing. By contrast, WILLIAM SHANNON and DELMAR BROWN, Democratic candidates who were running for the same seats, did not get the Negro vote. They lost.

Or take the vote polled by the three candidates for the Virginia Senate from Richmond. SEN. FITZGERALD BEMISS, who polled 15,962 ballots, was supported by most of the colored voters. SEN. E. E. WILLEY, who was by-passed by most of the colored vote — which backed not only BEMISS but also the Republican candidate, TAZEWELL CARRINGTON III— got a total of 12,714. MR. CARRINGTON, a newcomer in politics, came within 1,088 of WILLEY'S figure, with the aid of the colored bloc.

In this month's election, the Negro vote was thrown to all the local Republican candidates and to some of the Democratic candidates.

In recent presidential elections there has been no fixed pattern. In 1956, for example, EISENHOWER got most of Richmond's Negro vote against STEVENSON, but in 1960 KENNEDY got the bulk of it against NIXON.

However, in the past few Congressional elections, the colored vote has gone heavily Republican. In 1958, for instance, RICHARD RYDER got just about the same percentage of the colored vote against REP. J. VAUGHAN GARY that Republican LOUIS WILLIAMS polled against him last year. Ditto for Republican candidate ROY E. CABELL JR. in 1956.

It can readily be seen, then, that the Negro vote is being switched from party to party in accordance with what are considered to be the best interests of Negro voters and Negro citizens. Since the population of Richmond was 42 per cent colored in 1960, and the percentage is rising steadily, the importance of this group in future political campaigns requires no emphasis from us.

VIRGINIA SETS UP POLL-TAX CHANGE

Governor Offers Residency Qualification Plan

Special to The New York Times

RICHMOND, Nov. 12 — Gov. Albertis S. Harrison Jr., recommended today a substitute for the poll tax as a qualification for voting in Federal elections.

The heart of his plan is a provision for filing a certificate of Virginia residency to prove voting qualification.

His proposal will be considered by the General Assembly when it convenes in a special session next Tuesday.

The Governor called the extra session in expectation of ratification early next year of the 24th Amendment to the Federal Constitution.

The amendment would outlaw the poll tax as a prerequisite to voting for members of Congress, the President and Vice President.

Virginia, among five states with a poll tax, would retain it as a condition for voting in state and local elections under the Governor's plan.

Its adoption by the administration-oriented Assembly apparently will be little more than a formality.

Foes Plan Challenge

Under the proposal, a person who chooses not to pay the tax and wants to vote in a Federal election must file with his local treasurer a form attesting his residence in the state.

The form must have a notary's seal or the signature of an adult witness. It would have to be filed six months before a Federal election.

To be assured of voting in speical Federal elections, the citizen would have to file a certificate annually. Under normal circumstances, the certificate could be filed every two years.

For the voter who continues to pay the tax, adoption of the legislation would be academic. If he qualifies by a tax payment to vote in local elections, he would qualify automatically for Federal elections.

Opponents of the Governor's plan say it involves a double standard and is unconstitutional. They will challenge it on those grounds if it is enacted.

The chairman of two legislative committees that met today for the formal presentation of the plan endorsed it.

They were State Senator Garland Gray and Delegate John W. Cooke of the Senate and House Committees on Privileges and Elections.

Poll Tax Revised by Virginia; Governor's Substitute Adopted

RICHMOND, Nov. 20 — Virginia's General Assembly passed a law today providing a poll-tax substitute in Federal elections.

The law permits the filing of a certificate of residency in place of the poll tax in Federal elections. It was adopted at the end of a two-day special session.

Gov. Albertis S. Harrison Jr. called the session in expectation that the proposed 24th Amendment to the United States Constitution would be approved next year.

The amendment would prohibit the poll tax as a prerequisite for voting in elections for President, Vice President and members of Congress. Thirty-six states have ratified it. Two more are required.

Virginia's Constitution calls for an annual payment of $1.50 as the poll tax. Today's action will have no effect on the poll-tax requirement for voting in state and local elections.

Conservatives in Control

The conservative Democratic forces in control of the legislature had no trouble in passing the Governor's bill for a substitute. The House vote was 78 to 21; the Senate's 28 to 12.

However, 29 speakers attacked the bill at a public hearing before the Senate action. They represented Negro, church, civic and women's organizations, as well as both parties.

The speakers demanded outright repeal of the poll tax at all state election levels. Svee referred to Virginia's record of being 46th among the states in percentage of participation in the last Presidential election.

They contended that the Governor's proposal would further restrict voting in Virginia, one of five poll-tax states.

The new law permits anyone wishing to vote in Federal elections, without paying the poll tax, to file a certificate of residency properly witnessed or notarized. The certificate is due six months before a general election, the same deadline imposed for poll-tax payers.

Several opponents have said they will challenge the act in court. They have charged that it imposes double standards for voting, one system for Federal elections and another for state and local elections.

Legislators who want the poll tax repealed plan to continue their efforts when the Assembly meets in regular session next January.

FIRST STATUS REPORT
VOTER EDUCATION PROJECT
September 20, 1962

I.

The Project began April 1, 1962, following receipt of the Treasury Department's favorable decision on our request for an advance ruling regarding tax exemption.

Funds received for the Project as of this date are:

Taconic Foundation -	$250,000	for a	two	year period
Field Foundation -	75,000	"	ONE	" "
Stern Family Fund -	124,000	"	TWO	" "

Since April 1, two program series have been launched:

1. programs ending July 31, 1962 limited to areas where registration of voters eligible for the 1962 primaries was still possible;
2. programs for the period August, 1962 - March, 1963.

II.

It is now possible to appraise the results of the first program, both as to the quantity of increased Negro registration, and as to the information provided about Negro political participation in the South.

As a first step in dealing with the initial program, it seems approgriate to remark upon the criteria used in selecting areas and in allocating funds.

Political scientists and political sciologists, for the past twenty years or so, have increasingly concerned themselves with studies of voting behavior and political participation. There have been community studies of presidential elections from which inferences could be drawn about the meaning to the voter of the act of voting; there have been studies which attempted to delineate community political power and how it works through its various elements; there have been studies on presidential voting using nation-wide samples in which the attitudes and motivations of the U.S. electorate were, to some extent, clarified; there have been studies of the correlations between the attitudes on various issues of Congressmen and their constituents; there have been studies of community attitudes on various issues and the effect of those attitudes on the electorate's perceptions of and feelings toward politics and political participation; there have been studies of Negro political leadership and Negro political participation; there have been studies, some of them from the Southern Regional Councildescriptive of the patterns of Negro voting in the South and the obstacles placed before it. In short, the literature of political science and political sociology provides a valuable reservoir of hypotheses and data concerning voting behavior and political participation.

This past research gives little assistance, however, in selecting areas in which to carry on work, or in planning actual program. Where to work can be determined only by looking for the places in which problems, opportunities, and personnel combine or can be made to combine. How to work can be determined only by reference to the same factors. VEP was not established to study or to work within ideal situations.

Accordingly, VEP thought that its research interests would best be served by using the initial programs as experiments upon which could be based principles of area selection, fund allocation, and registration methods for the long-term programs which would follow.

The first programs served another purpose than experimentation. Within the proposed life of VEP, there will fall two major elections: the 1962 Congressional and state elections; and the 1964 elections. Thus it is possible to conduct programs under three different set under three different sets of political circumstances: during a Congressional election year; during an off-election year; and during a presidential election year. However, the primaries of 1962 were the important elections in the southern states, and registration for these closed in the Spring and early Summer. Since VEP did not get underway until April, speed in the approving of programs was necessary, if these test conditions were to be maintained.

Given, then, the timing for the initial projects, the next step was to determine the areas within which programs would be supported. There were only eight states in which registration for the 1962 primaries was feasible after April: Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Caroline, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Virginia.

State-wide programs would have profitlessly diffused resources; common sense dictated that funds and effort be concentrated. The availability of personnel and organization largely decided where, within each state, registration work would be supported. As it turned out, these locations suited well a research interest; i.e., they included areas in which resistance to Negro registration would be relatively slight, areas in which it would be severe, areas in which the elections would be transparently important to Negroes, and areas in which Negroes could have little practical interest in the outcome. VEP assumed that resistance would be maximum in Alabama, rural Georgia, northern Louisiana, Mississippi, and rural South Carolina; and that it would be relatively slight in North Carolina, Tennessee, and Virginia. Two Congressional districts in Tennessee were being contested by liberals and two Negroes were contesting for Congressional seats in Mississippi.

Total funds allocated for these first programs, ending July 31, 1962, were $63,990. The table below shows distributia of the money.

Table II shows the quantitative results of the initial series of programs upon which reporting is complete at this time. The number of voters registered was 21,279 and the money actually expended was $33,356.98. The programs have been ranked on the table in the order of their quantitative results. Column three indicates the proportion of unregistered Negro voting age population which was registered during each program. Table II naturally breaks down into three more or less well-defined groups as indicated by the broken horizontal lines. This breakdown suggests that the areas within each of the three groups represent examples of slight, moderate, and heavy resistance.

Table II shows an expenditure of $32,568.98 from grants totaling $63,990. The remainder has been either called back or authorizations for its re-investment have been made.

VEP has not succeeded in obtaining acceptable reports as yet from the following agencies:

2-Unregistered Negro Voting Age Population

3-This program was financed by $2,380 contributed by Field Foundation in addition to the VEP grant.

Some remarks about these various programs may be of interest.

Durham County, N.C., was in the process or purging its registration rolls in order to eliminate cumulative inaccuracies. (This was the official reason given for the purge and we have no contrary information.) The program in Durham was actually a re-registration drive, in which only those who had been registered prior to the purge were eligible to register. Thus the persons with whom the program was dealing were highly selective, in that the only persons who could register were those who had pseviously had the experience of registering successfully. The results were predictably good because only those with a background of political awareness and involvement were eligible. Moreover, the registration officials were cooperative; so much so that, in one instance, deputy registrars were placed at the disposal of program personnel for instituting a mobile registration office. These factors are reflected in the high proportions of eligibles who were registered druing the program.

Chattanooga and Knoxville had, prior to the VEP sponsored programs, proportions of 79% and 75% of the Negro voting age population registered. Thus it was predictable that the programs in those cities would show good quantitative results. The question that arises, however, is whether or not registration drives alone are likely to bring about increased Negro political participation in such areas. One feels that, as modes of racial discrimination become less gross, less visible, and thus provocative of less direct emotional involvement for Negroes, their political behavior patterns will tend to correlate with patterns characteristic of whites who are in similar socio-economically deprived circumstances. This is a consideration which should weigh heavily in future area selection and fund allocation decisions by VEP.

The only other initial program the quantitative results of which were comparably high was that in the 4th Congressional District of Virginia. The results there seem due to a combination of a relatively temperate racial climate and efforts over a period of years by NAACP and SCLC to arouse Negroes to interest in politics. However, the proportion of NVAP registered remains far enough below that of the whites that VEP believes further efforts in Virginia would be well worth while, both as a means of increasing our knowledge about Negro political efforts under these particular circumstances and as a means of encouraging further political involvement by Negroes.

Elsewhere in the Carolinas and in Atlanta, discrimination does not usually extend to Negro voting; indeed, registration policies, according to our reports, would easily permit a much greater volume of registration than the programs were able to stimulate in these places.

Registration workers in these areas do report encountering difficulty in convincing prospective registrants that they would meet with fair treatment at the registrar's hands. Apparently Negroes in these areas simply cannot conceive of relatively permissive policies at the courthouse in the face of heavy and intensive social and economic deprivation in other areas of activity.

The All Citizens Registration Committee of Atlanta, which conducted the VEP sponsored program in that city, was able to secure the cooperation of the Fulton County registrar's office to the extent that ACRC was permitted to station workers in the courthouse to solicit registration of individuals who came to the courthouse on other business. This elicited no evidence of resentment from whites. Indeed, a number of persons, both Negro and white, mistook the program workers for county employees who had been stationed there as a convenience for citizens having business in the courthouse. In addition, ACRC was able to place a worker in the registration office in order to enumerate registrations and to observe registration practices. Again, this elicited no evidence of resentment from whites, many of whom apparently took this worker to be a courthouse employee.

This ~~xxx~~ suggests that racial aversion in some areas may not be as spontaneous as surface appearances might indicate.

The results of the Carolina and Atlanta programs suggests that increased and meaningful political participation for Negroes can only be effected through arduous efforts to eliminate social, cultural, and economic disadvantages, as well as hard work on the voting front.

Quantitatively, the lightest results were achieved in the programs in Alabama, rural Georgia, Louisiana, and Mississippi. Here, Negro registration confronts, as opponents, the local police officers, county sheriffs, and state policemen, the Ku Klux Klan and the White Citizens Councils. The local and state judiciary frequently play a part by affording judicial process to clearly unjustified prosecution and conviction on such charges as "vagrancy", "loitering", "distributing literature without a permit", and many and varied "traffic offenses."

One municipal judge in a Mississippi delta town warned a young registration worker, brought before him on a charge of "distributing literature without a permit", that if caught doing registration work again in that town he would be sent to the county juvenile farm. This same court, a week or so later, was to try companions of the youngster on the same charge. One of the defendants, director of voter registration work in the area, showed up at the appointed hour, but felt that the white mob which had gathered for the trial made it unsafe for him to appear to receive his modicum of southern justice. The other defendants arrived with their lawyer, but, when he saw the mob which had assembled, the lawyer judged it expedient to plead his clients guilty. This occurred in the home town of Senator Eastland, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

These incidents are typical of the reaction of the dominant whites to Negro registration efforts in many areas of hard-core states. Statutes and local ordinances, innocuous on their face, are regularly and systematically used to impose what amounts to political criminality on Negroes seeking to exercise the franchise.

The technically simple process of making bail for registration workers charged with violations of local ordinances becomes a study in the delaying tactics by which constitutional guarantees can be scorned.

State statutes governing voter registration, especially literacy tests, are specifically designed to make registration difficult and are in many cases administered in flagrantly discriminatory fashion.

Daily newspapers in these areas have leveled charges of "communist conspiracy" against VEP's programs. In one industrial city, organized labor will have nothing to do with voter registration programs because of fear of the "red" tag.

Negroes have lost their jobs because whites suspected that they were working in voter registration. Negro churches have been deprived of tax exemption because they were used for voter registration meetings. Three rural Negro churches burned to the ground after having been used on several occasions for registration meetings. Gunfire has seriously wounded registration workers in Georgia and Mississippi.

Most, if not all, of these resistance tactics are vulnerable to attack in the federal courts. Federal injunctive action is possible against political, economic, and "legal" discrimination, intimidation, and harassment. It can likewise provide Negroes with some confidence that their rights under the U.S. Constitution will be enforced. However such injunctive action, as it has been implemented in the past, has been feeble.

The sanction of contempt must be relatively meaningless without adequate supervision of the conduct of those enjoined. Such supervision requires a complement of impartial personnel whose attention will automatically and immediately be drawn to violations of the injunctions, and a vigorous and efficient machinery of contempt enforcement. It is commonplace to observe that these requirements have not been met in the South. Illustrative of the ineffectiveness of past federal injunctive action is the case of Terrell County, Georgia.

On September 13, 1960, a federal district court in Americus, Georgia, enjoined discriminatory operation of the registrar's office in Terrell County. On November 16, 1960, M. E. Mathews was appointed chief registrar of Terrell County. Mathews is the nephew of Terrell County Sheriff Z. T. Mathews whose racial attitude was quoted in the 1961 Civil Rights Commission Report on Justice: "there's nothing like fear to keep niggers in line." M. E. Mathews was then and is now serving as dupty sheriff of Terrell County, as well as chief registrar. He was appointed to the registrar's office by Superior Court Judge W. I. Geer--known to Terrell County Negroes as "W. I.-don't-want-a-nigger-vote Geer." Judge Geer is the uncle of a state political leader who is widely regarded as one of Georgia's champion segregationists, a man who openly and strongly commended the student rioters at the University of Georgia in January, 1961. Under circumstances such as these injunctions against discrimination are probably meaningless without effective contempt enforcement procedures.

Abundant evidence exists that the registrar's office in Terrell County has practiced discrimination regularly and systematically during the past two years. There has been, so far as is known, no attempt to bring Terrell County officials to account under the two-year-old injunction. The Justice Department has recently asked in federal court that the same individuals and others be enjoined from various kinds of intimidation in connection with Negro registration activity. Assuming that such an injunction may be granted, it may well be as meaningless as the first without the necessary enforcement machinery.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation is the principal enforcement and investigatory arm of the U.S. Government in the civil rights field. FBI agents work in close harmony with local law enforcement officers as a necessary part of the FBI's criminal enforcement responsibilities. Experience has been that these FBI agents are extremely reluctant to act in civil rights cases in ways that will estrange local police.

An example of the close felationship which exists between local police and the FBI is a letter displayed on the bulletin board of the City Police Department in Clarksdale, Mississippi. The letter is addressed to Clarksdale police chief, Ben C. Collins. It is signed by K. W. Dissly, special-agent-in-charge of the FBI's Memphis office. The letter is dated August 16, 1962. It compliments Collins on his apprehension of individuals charged with a recent bank robbery. In closing the letter, Dissly writes, "It is a pleasure to be associated with such fine law enforcement officers." This letter was observed by VEP staff-members who were in the Clarksdale Police Department helping to arrange bail for six registration workers who had been arrested in Clarksdale for "litering" in a moving automobile as they made their way out of town after a voter registration meeting on August 22nd, 1962.

The results of VEP's initial programs in Alabama, rural Georgia, Louisiana, and Mississippi are quantitatively disappointing. However, if measured by the amount of resistance these programs have faced, and by the light the programs have shed on the measures which must be taken to alleviate political discrimination against Negroes in the South, VEP believes these programs have been successful.

III.

Programs running through March 1962 are now being authorized and are underway. To ~~day~~ date, grants have been made as follows: (Table 3.)

These programs were selected in the following manner:

Table 4 shows the present status of voter participation in the South, according to best estimates. Column of that Table shows the unregistered Negroes of voting age in each state as a percent of the same category for the whole South. This is the factor which principally determined allocation of resources. On the basis of it, funds were divided among the states. Within each state, areas were selected on the basis of a similar determination and on the basis of availability of organizations and personnel. After allocating resources on this formula, a discietionary supplement has, in some cases, been added either because of (1) known intensity of resistance; or (2) known opportunities for high results.

In addition to the above grants, which total $66,882, VEP has set aside approximately $ for other programs proposed or prospective for this period. This will exhause the funds available for operations during VEP's first year of April 1962 through March 1963.

FIRST STATUS REPORT

VOTER EDUCATION PROJECT

September 20, 1962

I.

The Project began April 1, 1962, following receipt of the Treasury Department's favorable decision on our request for an advance ruling regarding tax exemption.

Funds granted to the Project as of this date are: *

Taconic Foundation -	$250,000	for	two	year period
Field Foundation -	75,000	"	one	" "
Stern Family Fund -	124,000	"	two	" "
Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America -	200
	$449,200

Since April 1, two program series have been launched:

1. programs ending July 31, 1962 limited to areas where registration of voters eligible for the 1962 primaries was still possible;
2. programs for the period August, 1962-March, 1963.

II.

It is now possible to appraise the results of the first program, both as to the quantity of increased Negro registration, and as to the information provided about Negro political participation in the South.

As a first step in dealing with the initial program, it seems appropriate to remark upon the criteria used in selecting areas and in allocating funds.

Political scientists and political sociologists, for the past 20 years or so, have increasingly concerned themselves with studies of voting behavior and political participation. There have been community studies of presidential elections from which inferences could be drawn about the meaning to the voter of the act of voting; there have been studies which attempted to delineate community political power and how it works through its various elements; there have been studies of presidential voting using nation-wide samples in which the attitudes and motivations of the U.S. electorate were, to some extent, clarified; there have been studies of the correlations between the attitudes on various issues of Congressmen and their constituents; there have been studies of community attitudes on various issues and the effect of those attitudes on the electorate's perception of and feelings toward politics and political participation; there have been studies of Negro political leadership and Negro political participation; there have studies, some of them from the Southern Regional Council, descriptive of the patterns of Negro voting in the South and the obstacles placed before it. In short, the literature of political science and political sociology provides a valuable reservoir of hypotheses and data concerning voting behavior and political participation.

*VEP was instrumental in persuading the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education to commit $5,000 to registration work in New Orleans, through the Coordinating Council.

This past research gave some guidance to VEP. Given, however, the need to move quickly, dictated both by the exigencies of the election calendar for 1962 and the pent-up eagerness of the agencies interested in going to work, there was little time for full analysis of the area selection. Moreover, political science research is, it was determined, of least practical value precisely at this point of choosing target areas. Where to work can be determined only by looking for the places in which problems, opportunities, and personnel combine or can be made to combine. How to work can be determined only by reference to the same factors. VEP was not established to study or to work within ideal situations.

Accordingly, VEP thought that its research interests would best be served by using the initial programs as experiments upon which could be based principles of area selection, fund allocation, and registration methods for the long-term programs which would follow.

The first programs served another purpose than experimentation. Within the proposed life of VEP, there will fall two major elections: the 1962 Congressional and state elections; and the 1964 elections. Thus it is possible to conduct programs under three different sets of political circumstances: during a Congressional election year; during an off-election year; and during a presidential election year. However, the primaries of 1962 were the important elections in the southern states, and registration or poll tax payment for these closed in the spring and early summer, and in Arkansas and Texas even earlier. Since VEP did not get under way until April, speed in the approving of programs was necessary, if these test conditions were to be maintained.

Given, then, the timing for the initial projects, the next step was to determine the areas within which programs would be supported. There were only eight states in which registration for the 1962 primaries was feasible after April: Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Virginia.

Statewide programs would have profitlessly diffused resources; common sense dictated that funds and effort be concentrated. The availability of personnel and organization largely decided where, within each state, registration work would be supported. As it turned out, these locations suited well a research interest; i.e., they included areas in which resistance to Negro registration would be relatively slight, and areas in which it would be severe; areas in which the elections would be transparently important to Negroes, and areas in which Negroes had little practical interest in the outcome. VEP assumed that resistance would be maximum in Alabama, rural Georgia, northern Louisiana, Mississippi, and rural South Carolina; and that it would be relatively slight in North Carolina, Tennessee, and Virginia. Two Congressional districts in Tennessee were being contested by liberals and two Negroes were contesting for Congressional seats in Mississippi.

Total funds allocated for these first programs, ending July 31, 1962, were $64,240. Table 1 below shows distribution of the money.

Table 2 shows the quantitative results of the initial series of programs upon which reporting is complete at this time. The number of voters registered was 27,839 and the money actually expended was $41,149.79. The programs have been ranked on the table in the order of their quantitative results. The last column indicates the proportion of unregistered Negro voting age population which was registered during each program. Table 2 naturally breaks down into three more or less well-defined groups as indicated by the broken horizontal lines. This breakdown suggests that the areas within each of the three groups represent examples of slight, moderate, and heavy resistance.

Table 2 shows an expenditure of $41,149.79 from grants totaling $53,490. The remainder has been either called back or authorizations for its re-investment have been made.

VEP has not succeeded in obtaining acceptable reports as yet from the following agencies:

Agency	Amount of Grant
National Urban League	$ 5,750
American Friends Service Committee	2,000
Davidson County Independent Political Council	3,000

No further participation of VEP with these agencies can be undertaken until reports are in and reviewed. (This does not, however, apply to the National Urban League, whose programs in Winston-Salem and Richmond were, with permission, deferred.)

[1]Unregistered Negro Voting Age Population

[2]This program also received $2,731.17 from Field Foundation.

[3]This figure represents CORE expenditures in both Sumter and Bishopville.

Some remarks about these various programs may be of interest.

Clarksville, Knoxville, and Chattanooga had, prior to the VEP sponsored programs, proportions of 44%, 75% and 79% of the Negro voting age population registered. Thus it was predictable that the programs in those cities would show good quantitative results. The question that arises, however, is whether or not registration drives alone are likely to bring about increased Negro political participation in such areas. One supposes that, as modes of racial discrimination become less gross, less visible, and thus provocative of less direct emotional involvement for Negroes, their political behavior patterns will tend to correlate with patterns characteristic of whites who are in similar socio-economically deprived circumstances. This is a consideration which should weigh heavily in future area selection and fund allocation decisions by VEP.

Durham County, N. C., was in the process of purging its registration rolls in order to eliminate cumulative inaccuracies. (This was the official reason given for the purge and we have no contrary information.) The program in Durham was actually a re-registration drive, in which only those who had been registered prior to the purge were eligible to register. Thus, the persons with whom the program was dealing were highly selected, in that the only persons who could register were those who had previously had the experience of registering successfully.

The only other initial program the quantitative results of which were comparably high was that in the 4th Congressional District of Virginia. The results there seem due to a combination of a relatively temperate racial climate and efforts over a period of years by NAACP and SCLC to arouse Negroes to interest in politics. However, the proportion of NVAP registered remains far enough below that of the whites that VEP believes further efforts in Virginia would be well worth while, both as a means of increasing our knowledge about Negro political efforts under these particular circumstances and as a means of encouraging further political involvement by Negroes.

Elsewhere in the Carolinas and in Atlanta, discrimination does not usually extend to Negro voting; indeed, registration policies, according to our reports, would easily permit a much greater volume of registration than the programs were able to stimulate in these places. Registration workers in these areas do report encountering difficulty in convincing prospective registrants that they would meet with fair treatment at the registrar's hands. Apparently Negroes in these areas simply cannot conceive of relatively permissive policies at the courthouse in the face of heavy and intensive social and economic deprivation in other areas of activity.

The All Citizens Registration Committee of Atlanta, which conducted the VEP sponsored program in that city, was able to secure the cooperation of the Fulton County registrar's office to the extent that ACRC was permitted to station workers in the courthouse to solicit registration of individuals who came to the courthouse on other business. This elicited no evidence of resentment from whites. The results of the Carolina and Atlanta programs suggest that increased and meaningful political participation for Negroes can only be effected through arduous efforts to eliminate social, cultural, and economic disadvantages, as well as hard work on the voting front.

Though there is no sharp differentiation between the quantitative results of the last areas in group two and the first in group three, reports indicate that low registration in the two South Carolina cities is due more to Negro apathy than to white resistance.

Quantitatively, the lightest results were achieved in the programs in Alabama, rural Georgia, Louisiana, and Mississippi. Here, Negro registration confronts, as opponents, the local police officers, county sheriffs and state policement, the Ku Klux Klan and the White Citizens Councils. The local and state judiciary frequently play a part by affording judicial process to clearly unjustified prosecution and conviction on such charges as "vagrancy," "loitering," "distributing literature without a permit," and many and varied "traffic offenses."

One municipal judge in a Mississippi delta town warned a young registration worker, brought before him on a charge of "distributing literature without a permit," that if caught doing registration work again in that town he would be sent to the county juvenile farm. This court, a week or so later, was to try companions of the youngster on the same charge. One of the defendants, director of voter registration work in the area, showed up at the appointed hour, but felt that the white mob which had gathered for the trial made it unsafe for him to appear to receive his modicum of justice. The other defendants arrived with their lawyer, but when he saw the mob which had assembled the lawyer judged it expedient to plead his clients guilty. This occurred in the home town of Senator Eastland, Chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Negroes have lost their jobs because whites suspected that they were working in voter registration.

Negro churches have been deprived of tax exemption because they were used for voter registration meetings. Rural Negro churches have burned to the ground after having been used on several occasions for registration meetings, and arsonists have unsuccessfully attacked others. Gunfire has seriously wounded registration workers in Georgia and Mississippi.

Most, if not all, of these resistance tactics are vulnerable to attack in the federal courts. Federal injunctive action is possible against political, economic, and "legal" discrimination, intimidation, and harassment. It can likewise provide Negroes with some confidence that their rights under the U.S. Constitution will be enforced. political discrimination against Negroes in the South, VEP believes these programs have been successful.

III.

These programs were selected in the following manner:

Tables 4a. and 4b. show the present status of voter participation in the South, according to best estimates. The last column of Table 4a. shows the unregistered Negroes of voting age in each state as a percent of the same category for the whole South. This is the factor which principally determined allocation of resources. On the basis of it, funds were divided among the states. Within each state, areas were selected on the basis of a similar determination and on the basis of availability of organizations and personnel. After allocating resources on this formula, a discretionary supplement has, in some cases, been added either because of (1) known intensity of resistance; or (2) known opportunities for high results.

In addition to the above grants, which total $66,882, VEP has set aside approximately $66,503 for other programs proposed or prospective for this period. This will exhaust the funds available for operations during VEP's first year of April 1962 through March 1963.

IV.

Research data has come to VEP from the field. Some agencies (e.g. SNCC) have provided excellent cooperation and have furnished extremely valuable data; in some other cases, the task of data gathering has not yet been wholly licked, though experience gained from the initial programs will insure that data will be flowing consistently.

VEP is completing a research project in certain agricultural counties of South Carolina.

TO: All cooperating agencies and organizations

FROM: Wiley A. Branton

At the suggestion of Mr. Paul Rilling, Director of Field Activities for the Southern Regional Council, I am sending you a list of the voter registration projects which are currently being supported by the Voter Education Project.

VEP invites you to support any registration efforts being conducted in your state actively, and also to write us giving your comments concerning these programs. Although all of the programs listed on the attached schedule have been approved, this does not necessarily mean that all of the programs are under way at this time. However, they should all be started prior to March 31, 1963.

MEMORANDUM

TO: All Participating Agencies

FROM: Wiley A. Branton

Enclosed is a schedule of all voter education projects which were being supported by VEP as of November 1, 1962. Some of these projects have not yet started, but should begin prior to March 31, 1963, the end of our first fiscal year.

In addition to these projects, VEP will work very closely with a Greater New Orleans project which is under the sponsorship of the Coordinating Council and which is to receive some continued financial support from the AFL-CIO's COPE.

We also have an unfinished program in Davidson, Giles, Maury, and Williamson counties in Tennessee, under the sponsorship of the Nashville branch NAACP and the Davidson County Independent Political Council in cooperation with the Social Science Department at Fisk University. This latter program was delayed because of the departure of Dr. Vivian Henderson from Nashville, but is now getting under way again under a new director.

We welcome, at all times, any comments which you might have regarding these projects.

Dear Mr. Cabirac:

In correspondence from you in August and September, requests were made for names of people and organizations in voter projects in the South. Enclosed is a schedule of the various voter education programs which VEP is supporting as of November 1, 1962. All of these programs, if not already started, will soon be under way and will run through March 31, 1963. This latter date is the end of the first fiscal year of the Voter Education Project.

There will, in all probability, be other programs approved during the remainder of this first fiscal year, probably on the Virginia coast and in Alabama, and Georgia.

If we can furnish you with any other information relevant to these programs please let us know.

Sincerely yours,

Jean Levine
Administrative Secretary

Washington, D.C.

Dear Mr. Marshall:

Mr. Branton, who is out of the city, has asked me to send you this schedule of the various voter education programs which VEP is supporting as of November 1, 1962. All of these programs, if not already started, will soon be under way and will run through March 31, 1963. This latter date is the end of the first fiscal year of the Voter Education Project.

There will, in all probability, be other programs approved during the remainder of this first fiscal year, but they will probably be on the Virginia coast and in Alabama, and Georgia.

I know Mr. Branton would welcome your comments and suggestions.

Very truly yours,

Jean Levine

Mr. Louis Martin
Vice Chairman
Democratic National Committee
Washington, D.C.

Dear Louis:

I am enclosing for your files a schedule of the various voter registration projects which we are supporting as of November 1, 1962. All of these projects have not yet been actually started, but they should be all under way or completed by March 31, 1963. This date will mark the end of the first fiscal year of the Voter Education Project.

We still have a few more projects to approve for the remainder of this first fiscal year, but most of them will probably be on the Virginia coast and in Alabama and Georgia.

Any suggestions which you might have regarding voter registration in the South, or the conduct of our project generally will be welcomed at all times.

Let me take this opportunity to commend you for the very fine job which I am aware that you are doing in helping to get the many appointments of Negroes to high public positions. I know that many of the gains which we have made in this regard under the new Administration could not have been possible except for the fact that you are where you are, with the sincerity you possess.

Warm personal regards.

Very truly yours,

Wiley A. Branton

Dear Herb:

I am enclosing a list of the various voter education projects which we are supporting throughout the South as of November 1, 1962. Most of these programs have already begun and willrun through March 31, 1963. Some of the programs have not yet been started but will be by that time.

It would be of tremendous help to our program if you would alert the various Omega chapters in those states or areas where programs have been planned and encourage the brothers to support actively whatever agency is responsible for the voter educationproject in their respective areas.

It may be that you have formulated some opinions as to how you can best help or how the fraternity can best help in the over-all objectives of our project since you last talked with me and if so, then I would certainly welcome your comments.

Kind personal regards.

Sincerely yours,

Wiley A. Branton

Dear Wiley:

Please extend my deepest thanks to Lucille for the lovely dinner we had at your home during my stay in Atlanta. I have fond memories of the lovely visit with your family and am grateful for the opportunity to have met new friends and renew old acquaintances.

At your earliest opportunity, I would appreciate your sending me the information about which we talked concerning the Voter Education Project with any suggestions you might have in how the Fraternity may involve itself. You are to be commended for a great start on this project and I hope that the good work will continue.

With kind personal regards, I am

Dear Mr. Orr:

Thank you for your letter of January 25 in which you express your interest in the Voter Education Project, which we hope to get started at a very early date.

I am pleased to know that you, too, have such confidence in the ability of Mr. Phil Weightman in the area of voter registration work. I have known Phil for a number of years and have worked with him in voter registration efforts in the state of Arkansas. He was one of the first persons whom I contacted upon accepting this new job, and he and his staff will be working very closely with us in any way that they possibly can.

I am sure that the greater Miami area will be one in which we will want to make a determined effort in our survey, and I look forward to meeting you the first time I get to Miami.

Sincerely yours,

Wiley A. Branton

Dear Mr. Branton:

Jack Greenberg, the new General Counsel of the NAACP, advised me on Saturday afternoon, that you were shortly going to undertake the task of administering the funds which have recently been made available for the purpose of encouraging voter registration by Negroes in the south.

I am extremely interested in this project, and would like to make this observation to you. I have observed some, and have participated in many drives for the purpose of stimulating Negro registration. The only real successful one in Florida, that I know about, was conducted in 1950 by the C.I.O. Mr. Phillip Weightman, whose offices are now in the AFL-CIO headquarters in Washington, was the field man in charge of this registration. He really knows how to go about it, for there were more Negroes registered during the few weeks that he and two others were at work than had been in the entire history of Florida. I therefore recommend that you get in touch with Mr. Weightman for suggestions.

All of the other attempts that I know about, both before and after the 1950 campaign, have been conducted by well-meaning volunteer organizations, with very little success. I certainly hope that your efforts will bear fruit.

I am completely convinced that no really significant gains in the field of civil rights will be made until the voter registration rolls reflect the voting strength of Negroes in the south.

Sincerely,

John B. Orr Jr.

Dear Mr. Young:

I recently read of the group effort being undertaken by some five community agencies, including your own, to organize a program designed to stimulate Negroes in the southern states to register and vote.

I am familiar with many of the problems surrounding this situation, since they were frequently discussed in the past years during which we were producing the educational television series, "Briefing Session". For a parallel situation (without the coercion or violence), I have just finished a half-hour film for the AFL-CIO's Committee on Political Education, dealing with exactly these two areas of registration and getting out the vote.

I would appreciate the opportunity of meeting with you and your colleagues to discuss the possibility of producing a film to help this group of agencies in the immense educational task they have ahead of them.

My organization and its work are well known to some members of the National Urban League. This is especially true of Julius Thomas, who has helped in many of our educational programs.

Very sincerely,

Joel O'Brien

2— ~~Some of these programs were longer than ninety days, others were shorter. For example the Alabama Coordinating Association program ran only five days and operated in 60 counties in Alabama, while the DCNA program was actually in operation between January and May in Durham North Carolina. However, since the primary purpose of these grants was to provide VEP with field information upon which could be based the long-term grants, and since most of these grants were actually for periods of ninety days or so, they are all classed here, generically, as ninety-day grants.~~

* Registration Books closed during drive.
+ $2380 supplied by Field Foundation - total funds exploded -

AFSC project—Jackson, Tennessee—grant: ~~$1,~~ $2,000; period, June 15-August 10.

The period through July 2 was devoted to a house-to-house canvass attemtping to maximize Negro registration before the books closed for the August primary. During this time more than 2500 homes were visited and more than 1,500 prospective registrants were urged to register. Transportation was available for all those who needed it to go and register. After the books closed on July 2nd, pahse two of the program was designed to stimulate interest in the city and the county Negroes. clinics and workshops were set up in ~~xxxx~~ neighborhoods and ministers and community and business leaders were urged to influence all possible to attend. Persons at these meetings and clinics were instructed in registration technique and in the importance of voting and how the Negro vote could be used to better conditions for the Negro.

The thrid phase of the program was an attempt to reap the harvest of phase two by again attempting to maximize Negro registration between August 3 and August 10.

When the figures become available on the results of this drive, we shall be able to make an interesting comparison between the registration results of phase one and phase three and perhpas get some kind of an idea about the utility of the clinic-workshop-meeting approach as contrasted with the house-to-house canvass approach.

Alabama State Coordinating Association for Registration and Voting, W.C. Patton, President.

Project dates: July 1-6, 1962

Grant: $1,500.

This projedt resulted in the registration of 1742 new Negroes in Alabama. The somewhat truncated report from W.C. Patton indicates that the drive produced 9,371 personal contacts with prospective registrants by project workers. Such workers, from one to three per county, were operating in thirty of the 60 counties included in the project. According to the report, community leaders of one kind and another were active in the other thrity counties.

Patten reports that in Dallas and Tuscaloosa counties the registration boards tried to keep it a secret that the books were open during this special registration period. None of the applicants in Dallas County (the number of applicants is unreported) were permitted to register. Some of the other registration boards were hostile, though the report does not identify these hostile counties. Neither does it identify those counties in which registration boards were found to be "very cooperative". In Greene county, according to the report, the board uses as a stalling tactic, preoccupation with clerical work. Though such an interpretation of clerical acgivity seems to be dubious in general without further supporting evidence, if such are taking place, Greene county would be an appropraite place to anticipate them.

In addition to peresnal contacts, some 3,000 persons, organizational and community leaders, were contacted by mail; dodgers and pamphlets were distributed; advertising, editorial comment and news stories were inserted in a cooperative Negro press.

No hostile white press was reported, suggesting that white hostility did not choose further to give notice to Negroes that a drive was being conducted. Is this indicative that whites, for all their dominance in southern communities, actually lack basic confidence that they will be able to preserve that dominance. One might expect that such whites would feel confident that an urgent call to whites to register would more than offset any successes of the Negroes. This does not appear to be the case.

NSA Project--Raleigh North Carolina--June 15th, August 3rd--Grant--$1140.00 (Field Foundation Monies in amount of 2731.17 also used in this project)

The ~~xxxxx~~ registration of Negroes in North Carolina is not as difficult as in other areas of the South. Durham county has five Negro deputy registrars and so registrar resistance is minimal. There is also a Negro on the city council of Raleigh and the Negroes, in general, find a much more permissive atmosphere here than in other Southern communities. It might be suspected that political apathy among Raleigh Negroes is more due to depressed socio-economic status brought about by a century of second-class participation in the opportunities for advancement, than it is due to outright discrimination at the registrar's office and the polling booth.

This projedt succeeded in registering 1641 Negroes. The students mapped out the areas of the city in which most of the Negroes lived and then attacked them with door-to-door canvassing and with block and precinct meetings. On occasion the students were able to have deputy registrars making the rounds with them, registering people in their homes and at meetings and at booths set up in public places. This project was a good example of what can be done in a relatively permissive area with a well-organized program. The principal question is, however, in absence of severe oppression of the kind expereinced in Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi, are those Negroes registered actually going to participate in politics in any meaningful way ?

East Baton Rouge Parish, Louisiana--2nd Ward--Focus--Grant $1,000.00 6-4-62 expend. 966556
registrar's books closed June 27.

Focus reports an increase in Negro voter registration, due to their efforts, of 297 voters. During this same period of time white registration increased by 181 voters. There was a loss of 6 Negro voters due to some kind of attrition, presumably death or geographic mobility.

We do not have any report on the exact number of personal contacts made by Focus. However we do have their report indicating that they used the standard methods of eliciting support of ministers, clubs, employers (Negro), etc., in arousing interest of the people in voting. We know from perosnal observation that they did some house-to-house canvassing, but we do not know to what extent their success can be attributed to this technique and to what extent to the other modes. Focus printed up dodgers of various kinds and posted them inconspicuous places about the Negro community. Their only really specific comment about resistance was that the personnell in the registrar's office were far from cooperative, and that if they had been more cordial surely more Negroes could have been induced to attemtp to register. Also, Focus thought that the high per capita cost of registrants would have been reduced considerably on a longer project. Belton thinks that the program was just beginning to gain momentum in the Negro community, when it had to be halted because the books closed. This suggests that, in future, projects of more than one month should probably be sought.

The SNCC program should be considered merely the beginning stage of a relativley long-term operation. As the above figures indicate, not much progress can yet be reported in hard quantitative data. However, it is very clear from a reading of the field reports submitted by SNCC fiedl workers to the central office in Atlanta, that the groundwork has been laid from which should eventually come substantial increases in Negro political participation in Mississippi. In every one of the towns listed above, SNCC has established an office and maintains at least one field worker on duty at all times. These workers are the continual targets of harassment by whites, both official and unofficial. Particularly in the smaller communities they meet with outright brutality, and they are forced to deal with a Negro community which is kept in a constant state of terror by white harassment and intimidation. It is not so remarkable that their results are quantitatively small, as it is that there is anything at all to report, or anyone to report, from these blighted areas. It is to be considered a signal victory that any sustained effort at organizaing and arousing the Negro community has been carried on under such circumstances. One thing appears certain, from the SNCC experience. Liaison must be established with the justice department in such a way that immediate action can be taken to protect the lives and safety of voter registration workers in Mississippi. Furthermore, now would seem to be an excellent time to begin seeking federal injunctive action that would have some teeth. Unless justice takes action in the near future, the harassment is likely to become much more sophisticated and much more difficult to use as a basis for litigation. The resistance techniques of the whites are truly amazing inthair versatitlity.

they range from delaying tactics at the registrar's offices to the beating and jailing of registration workers. Landlords who have permitted workers to use their property are threatened with arson, as well as with bodily harm. One individual who not only rented space to the workers in Greenwood, but also helped them to recruit prospective registrants was arrested and charged with bigamy. Although it appears that he actually is living with his present wife without benefit of a divorce from his first, he has been doing so for the past fifteen years. It seems likely that the sudden interest of the police in this man is directly related to his connection with the voter registration activities in Greenwood.

All citizens Registration Committee - Atlanta
$2000 on April 12
$1600 on May 15
$3600 total VEP Grant.

The All-Citizens Registration Committee of Atlanta received a grant of $2000 from VEP on April 12, 1962 and a supplemental grant of $1600 on May 15, 1962. A Registration drive by the ACRC had been in progress since around the first of the year, so the net result of the program should be extended over a period of about five months. The registration drive ended on May 5th, 1962, the date on which registration for the summer and fall elections ended.

As of May 5, 1962, Negro registration in that part of Atlanta which lies in Fulton County stood at 46,945. The only figures available to us on Negro registration as of January 1, 1962 are those compiled for the December 6, 1961 city general election. This compilation shows a total of 37, 301 Negroes registered in Atlanta. Thus there appears to have been an increase of 7644 during the period of the ACRC registration drive.

There is no way of knowing with great precision how much of this increase is attributable to the ACRC drive. During the final two weeks of the drive, ACRC had an employee in the Fulton County Registrar's office who made a count of the Negro registrants. The count totaled 2,800, though, here again, there is no direct evidence indicating what proportion of the 2,800 registered as a direct result of the ACRC drive.

Employees in the registrar's office state that Negro registration is generally brought about, in their experience, by active programs, and that Negroes appear rather infrequently to register unless some kind of activity is underway to encourage their registration. The recent history of Negro Registration in Atlanta seems to bear this out. In July, 1960 the total Atlanta, Fulton County Negro registration was 34,572. Thus between July 1960 and December 1961, Negro registration in the area increased by only 2629. This period, furthermore, saw a hotly contested city election in which the Negro community was intensely involved. (Indeed, the Mayor of Atlanta was elected with a minority of the white votes, but with a near-unanimous Negro majority.) It could be supposed, therefore, that the period July, 1960 to December, 1961, represents a reasonably accurate picture of the normal volume of Negro registration in the absence of a sustained and intensive registration program.

In order to arrive at an estimate of the effectiveness of the ACRC program, we have taken the difference between the registration increase during the 18-month period, July 1960 to December, 1960 and the five-month period, January, 1962 to May 1962. This difference is 5,015. Such an estimate is rather conservative in that the 2600 votes by which the total registration during the program has been discounted represents the gradual appreciation of Negro registration over a period of eighteen months. It seems unlikely that the gradual appreciation figure over the five-month period of the program would have been as high. However we feel that in an estimate such as this one, conseratism will best serve the interests of accuracy.

The ACRC program included the distribution of some 50,000 handbills in Negro residential areas; sound trucks urging people to vote and offering free transportation to the registrar's office; chartered busses to transport prospective registrants (particularly high school students) to the registrar's office; newspaper and radio advertising; door-to-door canvassing, telephoning and the operation of car pools for transportation to the registrar's office.

The ACRC drive was originally designed to stimulate interest in registration among (1) high school students; (2) those living in densely populated areas.

The Fulton Connty registrar permitted a representative of ACRC to occupy a desk in the registrar's office for the purpose of enumerating Negro registrants.

Door to door canvassers learned that an unknown proportion of those whom they canvassed had been telling registration workers for years that they were registered in order to avoid having to admit that they were not, and then having to accept the opprobrium of not participating in the registration drive. Many of these persons, as well as persons who refused outright to participate, feared the stringency of a test involving interpretation of the Georgia constitution.

A part of the ACRC program was to place workers at a desk in the foyer of the county courthouse in order to solicit participation of those persons coming to the courthouse to pay taxes, get auto license, etc. This phase of the program was a considerable success. They found that many whites as well as Negroes took the workers to be courthouse employees and asked for various kinds of information.

~~[illegible]~~ No unpleasantness of any kind developed as a result of these workers being where they were, nor because of the employee who was stationed at a desk in the registrar's office.

SCLC Crash Program Grant

Grant, 507062, $11500
Expenditures	10090.96
Overhead	1409.04

SCLC reports a total increase of 7285 registered voters (Negro) in the 7 areas in which they operated under VEP authority during the 90-day period. They report no increase in Caddo Parish Louisiana, or in the state of Georgia. This the increase reported breaks down as follows

Chowan County, North Carolina	250	(with NAACP)
Charleston, S.C.	1,135	(with NAACP)
4th Cong. Dist., Va.	3,100
Chattanooga, Tenn.	1,800	(with NAACP)
Knoxville, Tenn.	1,000	(with NAACP)
	7285

The figures are estimates of the results of the programs. According to the SCLC report, cumulative data sheets were not kept on each of the areas involved so that no actual enumeration of results is possible. It should be noted that in all but one of the areas in which SCLC reports increased Negro registration NAACP was also operating under the aegis of VEP. Since we do not yet have the reports of NAACP for these areas no comparison is possible. We assume that the reported increases are the results of joint efforts and will attempt no division of credit.

SCLC spent the "lion's share" of the money on "operating car pools, paying door-to-door canvassers and general coordinating of the avrious committees functioning in the Voter Registration Campaign".

SCLC reports that affadavits were taken from prospective registrants who were subjected to resistance tactics by officials. One such affadavit tells of an eye-test for vision by the registrar's office in Shreveport, La. SCLC thinks the taking of these affadavits is of benefit in assuring the local ~~folkkkk~~ people that they have support which may be effedtive against local harassment and intimidation.

Durham, North Carolina – VEP GRANT, April 27, 1962 – $2500. $873.46 spent by DCNA between April 27th and May 17th.

The registration rolls of Durham County were purged during the Spring of 1962. Between the dates April, 21 and May, 12 all those who had previously been registered to vote were required to re-register. No new registration applications were accepted. Prior to the purge, Durham County had 13,201 registered Negroes out of a Negro Voting Age Population of 20,000. At the close of registration, May 12th, Negroe registration in Durham County was approximately 10,000. (Durham County does not report registration figures by race, so the number of Negro registered voters can only be estimated. The estimate is based upon the following: In five all-Negroe precincts, the average voter turnout was 70% of registration during the May 26th primary. C. E. Boulware, Negro Candidate for County Commissioner, received 7254 votes. Assuming that the great proportion of Boulware's votes were cast by Negroes, and attending the 70% turnout to the Negro registration as a whole, we arrive at an approximation of 10,000 Registered Negroes.)

It is difficult to estimate with acceptable accuracy the number of Negro registered voters which can be attributed to the efforts of the Durham Committee on Negro Affairs, (of which only $873.46 was spent during the drive) ~~[illegible]~~ D.C.N.A. carried on an intensive campaign to arouse the interest of the Durham Negroes in re-registering during the three weeks April 21, to May 12. A luncheon, ~~attended by 20 Negroe ministers, was~~ was held for 20 Negro ministers at which ~~their cooperation was assured~~ they agreed to urge all and the Durham Chapter of the NAACP ~~[illegible]~~ ~~[illegible]~~ ~~[illegible]~~ who co-sponsored a voter registration drive funded by a $2500 VEP grant.

Church members to ~~[illegible]~~ re-register. A DCNA speaker attended two meetings in each Durham County Negro Church, again urging all ~~[illegible]~~ in attendance to re-register. ~~[illegible]~~ A letter urging that all possible influence be exerted to persuade Negroes to register was sent to each minister, school principal, school teacher and to heads of all business firms. Speakers attended P.T.A. Meetings, social clubs, and fraternal organizations urging registration. 20,000 hand-bills were ~~[illegible]~~ distributed by high-School students. Another 15,000 handbills were distributed prior to and during a "Parchlight Campaign" on May 11, the eve of the last registration day. Three teams of two women each conducted all-day telephone campaigns on the two saturdays preceding the close of the registration period.

We assume that a certain proportion of the 10,000 Negroes presently registered resulted from the DCNA. program. In the absence of precise data we feel that a respectable estimate of the effect of the DCNA program can be made. Taking the registration prior to the purge as the universe of ~~qualified voters~~ ~~registrants~~ prospective registrants, we can compute the proportion of Negro and white prospects who actually registered: 47.6% of the whites and 75.7% of the Negroes. Assuming that, in the South, ordinarily no greater proportion of Negroes than whites would register, we can reason that the differential between these proportions provides a rough estimate of the effect of the DCNA campaign. Applying that differential, 28.1%, to the universe of Negro prospects, we arrive at an estimate of 3700 as the result of the DCNA program. It should be noted here that one of the reasons for the purge of the registration lists was the accumulated inflation of the lists. We have no data on the extent of the inflation, and no acceptable premises from which anything approaching a satisfactory estimate could be made. ~~[illegible]~~ the universe of possible registrants upon which we base our estimate of the effectiveness of the DCVA effort incorporates this inflation. It is reasonable to assume that there was a greater degree of inflation among the white than among the Negro registration prior to the purge; a number of counties listed ~~[illegible]~~ in excess of 100% of their white voting age population as registered, while in 20 counties was there such an excess in Negro registration. We mention this consideration merely to point out ~~[illegible]~~ one of the principal factors which ~~[illegible]~~ conditions the accuracy of our estimate of DCVA results.

Thus the inflation would tend to exaggerate the effectiveness of the DCVA program, ~~[illegible]~~ under the formula we have used for estimating that effectiveness. However, we have no way of quantifying this exaggeration.

Mr. Wiley A. Branton, Director

Room 206

Atlanta 3, Georgia

Dear Mr. Branton:

This is to acknowledge, with grateful appreciation, your letter of November 15 regarding our plans to survey the voting strength of The Negro Teacher in the South.

I am very pleased that your office is interested in this project, and also, am extremely happy for your offer of financial assistance. Thank you most kindly.

We have re-worked our questionnaire in terms of the suggestions of Mr. Jack Minnis. The revised copy is herewith enclosed. I should like to take advantage of your offer to mimeograph the questionnaire and furnish some postage for mailing them out. Also, I think well of the idea of having the questionnaires returned to your office for processing.

In view of this, I have indicated that the questionnaire is to be returned to your office when completed. Do you think it would help to increase the number of responses if a postage-paid business reply envelope is included with the questionnaire when it is sent out? If so, do you have a supply of these?

I had planned to send out around 5,000 inquiries. This is figured on the basis of an average of about 500 Principals and local association Presidents in each of 10 States. This is a rough estimation as I do not have the exact figures for all States. In view of your explanation, I will not plan to send this to Arkansas.

As to procedure, let me see if I am correct: you will reproduce the questionnaire and send the copies to me. I will mail them out. The questionnaires will be returned to you for processing. You will then send me the results of the findings. Let me have your reactions.

Mr. Wiley A. Branton November 21, 1962

Let me thank you again for your willingness to offer the facilities and financial assistance of your office for our use relative to this project. The American Teachers Association is anxious to help pave the way for first class, and more intelligent citizens. We feel that it is part of our responsibility, as an organization of minority group educators, to engage in those activities which will lead to equality of educational opportunities, as well as equality of professinnal status. Maximum understanding and use of the ballot, it seems to me, should help lead to the achievement of our ultimate goals. Your interest and faith in us is tremendously heartening.

Let me hear from you again soon regarding these matters.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. Jones:

Thank you for your letter of November 7, in which you enclosed the questionnaire which you propose to send to teachers.

We are very much interested, here in the VEP office, in your plans and would like to participate in them. We would be willing to give some financial support to such a project. The only state that I can think of where it would serve no practical purpose would be in Arkansas, for in that state all teachers and public employees are required to pay their poll tax (which is the registration in Arkansas) before they can draw their checks, so that every teacher in Arkansas is a registered voter.

I have asked Jack Minnis, our Research Director, to look over the questionnaire and I am enclosing some suggestions which he has made for your consideration.

We would be willing to take on the job of having all of the questionnaires returned to this office for processing and could offer other services such as the mimeographing of the questionnaire and the furnishing of some postage.

Let me know what you think about this.

Sincerely yours,

WAB:jl

Wiley A. Branton

1. (b) - should specify a time period. Five years perhaps?

We have some evidence that, in the poll tax states, registration of Negroes sometimes exceeds considerably payment of poll tax. Thus, many registered Negroes are not potential voters. A sub-question under "1" might inquire if this be true of teachers.

3. I would suggest rephrashing of this question. "Unusual" suggests that we know what the "usual" is in all of the areas into which the questionnaire will be going. Perhaps a question should ask something like "Do teachers appear to be reluctant to qualify for the ballot?" Then - "If so, does this reluctance seem to stem from lack of confidence that the ballot is an effective way to registeredissatisfaction with conditions; from apprehension that there will be reprisals; from lack of knowledge about the potentiality of organized political action."

Then, "In the past year or so (or, perhaps, five years or so) have teachers seemed to take a more active interest in registering and voting than they did previously?" "If so, to what do you attribute this changing attitude?"

Memo from JEAN T. LEVINE

Wiley:

With the few changes I'm noting this looks like it could be an important piece of research. I'd suggest we try to arrange to be given access to the results, even if it means investing a bit in postage, etc. Or perhaps we could make a deal with Jones whereby we would mimeo the quwstionnaire here and send it out ~~under~~ over his name, have it returend here for our processing, and then send it on to him for whatever he wants to do with it. Our best interests would, I think, indicate the latter.

Dear Mr. Branton:

I am delighted to have had the pleasure of meeting and chatting with you during the convention of the Arkansas Teachers Association last weekend.

Pursuant to our brief discussion regarding a project in which I am interested in developing, I submit herewith a rough copy of a proposed questionnaire for your reactions. I plan to send this to the school principals and presidents of local associations in each of the Southern States.

The information sought by this instrument may already be on file somewhere. However, I thought I would seek to pull it together and publish the results of my findings. I do not mean publish for public consumption necessairly, but make it available to those agencies or institutions or organizations who might find such information useful in their programs for progress in this area.

Before I proceed to polish and distribute this form, I should like your frank and objective reactions to its structure, content, and possible value if any. Since the project will take a considerable sum from our modest budget, I want to be sure it is worthy of the time, effort and money.

Please let me hear from you at your earliest convenience.

Thank you for your time.

Memorandum for the Teachers' Questionnaire File
December 14, 1962

On Thursday, December 13, I called on George Jones, Executive Secretary of the ATA at his office in Montgomery. I delivered the questionnaires to him and clarified with him the mode of operation.

He agreed to provide us with a numbered mailing list, the numbers to correspond to the numbered return mail envelopes. I told him we would ship him the envelopes either Friday or the following Monday by bus, and when we know the time I would phone him as to when to expect the shipment.

Jones tells me that the registrar in Montgomery is beginning to mail notices of acceptance to the persons listed in the Federal Court decree.

We tried to get in touch with Rufus Lewis, who is the big man in registration in Montgomery, but he was not available. Jones assured me that he would talk to Lewis, find out whether the court decision had changed the attitude of the registrars in any way, and would write us about it.

The ATA is a national Negro teachers' organization which has been in existence since 1904. Jones tells me that they recommend that Negro teachers belong both to the ATA and the NEA. He says that prospective ATA members frequently ask him why they should belong to both. He says that in many instances the NEA discriminates against Negro teachers and it is the ATA's position that so long as this continues there will be a need for a national Negro teachers' association. As one example of this NEA discrimination, he states that during the time when the Louisiana legislature was holding up funds for paying New Orlean's teachers, the NEA told the Louisiana white teachers association that an interest-free loan was available for continuing the white teachers salaries. When the Louisiana Negro teachers association asked the NEA for this same service, NEA informed them that only a certain amount of money was available for such purpose and that NEA had elected to provide the loans for the white teachers. NEA doubtless would have a different story about this, and it should be kept in mind that Jones' recouonting of this incident operates to the advantage of his organization. On the other hand, Jones impresses me as a dedicated and responsible professional. I doubt that he would make such allegations if they were not true.

While I was in Montgomery I went to the Secretary of State's office to try to get a copy of the constitution and the election laws and to find out what kind of registration and voting records were available in the state capitol. An administrative assistant to the Secretary of State informed me that in the six years that she had been in that office she had not seen a copy of the Alabama constitution nor of the election laws. She said that money was not available for such purposes. Just outside the door of the capitol building is a huge marble obelisk, guarded by iron confederate soldiers. The monument is dedicated to the purity of southern womanhood? I thought is was interesting that the state does not provide material which is necessary for the accumulation of the information the state requires of prospective registrants.

IN RE: THE ENCLOSED QUESTIONNAIRE

The American Teachers Association is currently engaged in a project, the results of which will be of tremendous benefit and value to all of us. We are seeking to determine the voting strength, and voting potential, of Negro educators in the South.

This is a mammoth task, and we need and respectfully solicit your assistance. Enclosed you will find a questionnaire which we are asking that you complete, and using the enclosed self-addressed business reply envelope, mail right away.

You will note that the envelope is addressed to the office of the Voter Education Project, Atlanta, Georgia. This organization has been kind and gracious enough to contribute significantly to this survey.

You will also note that some of the questions on the enclosed form require more space for an answer than is provided. Please feel free to use the back of the form, or a separate sheet of paper for your answer.

You may or may not wish to identify yourself, your school, or your county. This is your choice, and we leave that up to you.

All this requires is a few minutes of your time. And I think you should know that whether or not you take the few minutes necessary to complete and mail this form may mean the difference between greater or lesser security for the Negro teacher in the South.

You asked that ATA DO SOMETHING concrete, positive, definite and valuable for its membership. This is one of the many projects in which we are engaged which will help us do what you ask.

Your cooperation is urgently requested.

Thank you kindly for your time and understanding.

Dear Mr. Jones:

I appreciate very much your letter of December 13. You are indeed very generous in your kind words about the Bandeker District and me.

Your invitation to suggest something for ATA poses a real challenge. I believe there is a current need - a desperate need - for your organization. This is particularly true in the south. Not that the problems are any less in the north, but the organizational structure is perhaps a bit more favorable for attacking the problems. That is, we have more Negroes in favorable positions in the north or there is more likelihood of action programs in the best interest of Negroes getting pushed ahead than is the case in the south.

I certainly would like to help you and ATA push a program forward. I would hesitate, however, to attempt to suggest anything without intense study of the situation. Perhaps, as time passes I will have some strong convictions which I will pass on to you.

Merry Christmas, Happy New Year.

Dear George:

Thank you for your letter concerning the possibility that I might be of assistance in helping our Association develop some specific research proposals in line with the suggestions made at our recent ATA-NEA Joint Committee meeting. What I think might work would be for a small committee of experts to work under my guidance in accomplishing this job. I can assemble such a group who might contribute their services, but I think some travel and minor expenses may be involved. Perhaps $300-$500 would cover it since there may be two or three meetings required.

You may wish to explore with your officers the setting up of a small ad hoc committee to serve under my leadership. If the officers approved then I would want the funds made available to the committee to be used at my discretion with proper responsibility and accountability. In this way we can move fast and at our own speed without red tape and unnecessary delays. I would want the Executive Secretary, President, Vice-President and Treasurer to be ex-officio representatives on this committee. The professional designers would come from the Office and nearby colleges and universities. I think they would serve at no cost.

If we could get approval from you and operating funds, we would be able to call a preliminary group together around February 1. Two or three of the persons I have in mind would come from the Norfolk area and another from the University of Pennsylvania. All proposals developed would go to you and the Association before being submitted. There are a number of very good possibilities.

With every good wish.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. Jones:

I wonder if you would give us a brief progress report on the mailing out of the questionnaire to school principals and local association officials?

I was in Clarksdale, Mississippi, last week conferring with the voter registration workers there. One of the workers, Mrs. Idessa Johnson, 208 Edwards Street, Clarksdale, Mississippi, who is a substitute teacher and the owner of a restaurant, is very much interested in trying to get teachers in Coahoma County registered. She tells me that her activities with the NAACP and with local organizations interested in voter registration is hindering her ability to work with her fellow teachers. Whites in the area have been very successful in frightening the teachers about association with anyone connected with such organizations. Mrs. Johnson tells me that the local teachers association is more or less dominated by administrators whose positions and careers are at the mercy of white school officials. She finds that the local teachers association is therefore immobilized on any voter registration work. I suggested to her that there might be some ATA members in the county whom she could stimulate into action, using ATA as a basis for organization. If you think such a thing might be possible, I would suggest you write to Mrs. Johnson and make arrangements for some kind of contact with her and any members you may have in the area. I would appreciate receiving a copy of such correspondence for our files.

Best regards,

Jack Minnis

Dear Mrs. Johnson:

Mr. Jack Minnis of the Voter Education Project informs me that he spoke with you in Clarksdale recently regarding voter registration there. He told me that you are interested in pushing a more dynamic program in your area but are faced with certain handicaps.

As you know the American Teachers Association is concerned about those situations and circumstances which prohibits optimum performance of our teachers. We feel that one of the most serious barriers to quality service is political impotency. We are not only willing but anxious to work with any person or group interested in the removal of this barrier.

If local, district, or state associations do not, for some reason, have active programs in the area of voter registration, they should have. Meanwhile ATA will serve in whatever way it may be deemed feasible to stimulate or mobilize action in this area.

If you think well of the idea, I will accept an invitation to come to Clarksdale to discuss this further with you and other teachers in the area. Let me have your reaction to this.

Best wishes and kindest regards.

IN RE: THE ENCLOSED QUESTIONNAIRE

The American Teachers Association is currently engaged in a project, the results of which will be of tremendous benefit and value to all of us. We are seeking to determine the voting strength, and voting potential, of Negro educators in the South.

This is a mammoth task, and we need and respectfully solicit your assistance. Enclosed you will find a questionnaire which we are asking that you complete, and using the enclosed self-addressed business reply envelope, mail right away.

You will note that the envelope is addressed to the office of the Voter Education Project, Atlanta, Georgia. This organization has been kind and gracious enough to contribute significantly to this survey.

You will also note that some of the questions on the enclosed form require more space for an answer than is provided. Please feel free to use the back of the form, or a separate sheet of paper for your answer.

You may or may not wish to identify yourself, your school, or your county. This is your choice, and we leave that up to you.

All this requires is a few minutes of your time. And I think you should know that whether or not you take the few minutes necessary to complete and mail this form may mean the difference between greater or lesser security for the Negro teacher in the South.

You asked that ATA DO SOMETHING concrete, positive, definite and valuable for its membership. This is one of the many projects in which we are engaged which will help us do what you ask.

Your cooperation is urgently requested.

Thank you kindly for your time and understanding.

Dear Mr. Minnis:

Your letter of January 17 is herewith acknowledged. Thank you for writing.

Because of clerical staff problems I have not been able to mail out the questionnaire, regarding voting, to school principals and local association officials. However, I expect to resume work on this project and get the material in the mail this week.

The story in Clarksdale, Mississippi as related to you by Mrs. Idessa Johnson is not an atypical one. I have found too often that fear of economic reprisal is the most serious deterrent to the full pursuit of political rights. I think the Negro teacher in Mississippi is suffering very badly in this area. and needs the comfort, sympathy and support of those not afraid to give it. At the same time, however, these people are afraid to ask for help from outsiders and are afraid to work with those in the community who might help them. Thus I am happy to know that Mrs. Johnson is interested in doing something about voter registration in Clarksdale. A copy of my letter to her is herewith enclosed.

Also enclosed is a copy of the letter which I am sending out along with our questionnaire. As you can see, it was written over a month ago. But I will mail it out over the next serveral days.

Meanwhile please know that I do appreciate you writing and for calling the Clarksdale situation to my attention. I really think that ATA does have a responsibility here.

4. Teacher Questionnaire

Enclosed are thermofax copies of letters from Dr. Samuel Shepard, Jr. of St. Louis, Missouri and Dr. Edward W. Brice of D. C. These are in line with the items we were discussing during your visit with me in Montgomery. I thought you might be interested in developments.

Best wishes and kindest regards.

Attorney Wiley Branton, Director
Voter Education Project
5 Forsyth Street, N. W., Rm. 206
Atlanta 3, Georgia

Dear Attorney Branton:

I have finally managed to finish mailing out the questionnaire designed to determine the extent of registration among Negro teachers in the South. Forms were sent to School Principals and Presidents of local associations in the following States: Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia. A total of 4,975 were mailed with instructions (and an envelope) to return them to you. (In spite of this, some of them have already been returned to my office!)

The cost of mailing out the questionnaires came to $74.62. In order to get the work done finally, I had to hire two extra clerks. (The job turned out to be much bigger than I had envisioned!) I would appreciate it if you could see your way clear to assist financially with paying these young ladies. Each of them worked about three hours a day for about a month. It cost me $90.00 each--a total of $180.00 to get the extra typing done. I know this item was not included specifically in our original agreement. Nonetheless, it did turn up as an additional expense, and I hope you will give serious and favorable consideration to granting us this additional help. To summarize, then, the costs add up thusly:

Postage	--	$ 74.62
Clerks	---	180.00
TOTAL		$ 254.62

Under separate cover, I am sending you the list of persons to whom the questionnaires were sent. They are numbered, and each received an identically numbered return envelope.

Attorney Wiley Branton, Director March 13, 1963

I was in Atlanta a couple of weeks ago and while there, spoke to Mr. Jack Minis about the project. In addition to explaining the above matter to him, I asked that the final results of the tabulations which ensue from this project not be released to anyone until I had a chance to see them. He agreed to this.

If there is any thing else relative to this matter that I should attend to, please do not hesitate to let me know.

Best wishes.

Dear Dr. Minnis:

Thank you for your letter of May 23 relative to our survey.

It is almost unbelievable that only 840 replies have been returned to date out of the nearly 5,000 sent! This is very disappointing news. Even though I suspected that most principals were a little frightened, I did not realize that they were scared, hired men! Perhaps this is not the reason the questionnaires were not returned, but I am inclined to think so.

The information contained in your letter is sufficient for our mid-June meeting. Meanwhile, I would rather you keep the questionnaries. We will move our office to Atlanta in August, and I can get them then. If you can get some meaningful data ready for our annual convention, fine. If not, then we will make a progress report there, and release the full report later.

Thank you for your continued interest and cooperation. I, too, feel that the study is very valuable, even though I am greatly disappointed about the disgustingly limited response.

Best wishes and kindest regards.

Sincerely yours,

George W. Jones /R

5- Teacher Questionnaire

May 23, 1963

Mr. George W. Jones
The American Teachers Assn.
853 Thurman Street
Montgomery 4, Alabama

Dear Mr. Jones:

Eight hundred and forty (840) replies to our questionnaire mailing have been received by this office. We still get three or four a week, but I doubt that there is going to be a significant number coming in from now on. We have taken the information from the questionnaires and put them on 5 x 7 cards for ease in handling. I think it is going to be necessary to put the material onto IBM cards in order to get any meaningful information from it. This, of course, requires coding and card punching, which is time consuming and tedious. I do not expect to complete this phase of the operation before late summer. It is possible that something could be ready by the date of your annual convention, but I would by no means advise you to count on it.

Since we have taken the information from the questionnaires, we would be happy to send them to you, if you desire. In this way, you could prepare something for your mid-June meeting, and you could, as well, undertake to prepare whatever you think appropriate for your annual convention in the event that we do not complete our study in time for the convention.

We are a bit disappointed about the response to the questionnaire, but we nevertheless feel that the study is a valuable one even so.

My very best regards.

Very truly yours,

Jack Minnis
Director of Research

Dear Mr. Hatch:

Last year, in cooperation with the American Teachers Association, we sent questionnaires to principals and county association officials in your state. While the response has not been what we had hoped, we are attempting to compile the information received into a meaningful report. In order to make an analysis of the returns, we need to know the total number of Negro teachers in your state and the number belonging to your association as of June 30, 1963, and your most recent compilation.

Mr. Brooks has indicated that you are expected to attend a meeting here at the NEA headquarters on Monday. If you desire, you may leave the information with him or return it to me.

We will greatly appreciate your cooperation in this matter. We will share our findings with you.

Dear Mr. Branton:

We are writing to express our appreciation to you and the Project for making available to us the services of Mrs. Barbara Whitaker, your research assistant, at our initial workshop on Citizenship held in New Orleans on Saturday, May 9,1964.

Mrs. Whitaker was most helpful to us not only in our general sessions, but also in the small groups. She displayed keen insight into the problems which we were discussing.

It is our anticipation that during the next several months we may be able to launch a concerted effort among the teachers whom we serve in the American Teachers Association to stimulate a greater interest in the problems of Citizenship. We envision the possible publication of an inexpensive pamphlet which may be available to P. T. A. groups and other similar organizations. We also propose a series of conferences involving small geographical areas, possibly not to exceed two states. In this effort we shall certainly wish to cooperate with your organization wherever such is possible and there may be certain aspects of the program for which we may need professional assistance from you.

Please feel free to offer any suggestions that you may have in this matter; and if at all possible, we should like to have the cooperation of your office in a follow-up workshop which will be a part of our 61st Annual Convention at the Atlanta Municipal Auditorium on Tuesday, July 28, 1964.

Dear Dr. Brooks:

I regret that I will not be able to attend the workshop on citizenship which will be conducted during the 61st annual convention of the American Teachers Association on July 28, but I am having to leave for Washington that morning.

I suppose you know that the Voter Education Project has operated with a very small staff, and we have recently lost two of our key staff members, Mr. Randolph Blackwell and Mrs. Barbara Whitaker. I have been in touch with both of them, and I am happy to learn that they will be in attendance during your workshop. While they are no longer with VEP, I feel confident that they will be as much value to your program in their new positions as if they were still on our staff. We simply do not have anyone else on the staff with sufficient experience who would be of more value than these two former staff members.

THERE IS NO GOD BUT ALLAH

MUHAMMAD IS HIS APOSTLE

ELIJAH MUHAMMAD SPEAKS—above his gilt-decorated hat the invariable motto, "There Is No God But Allah, Muhammad Is His Apostle." Not just the admirers before him but 20 million Negroes in America listen. But in white society he is practically unknown. Now, Robert S. Bird, National Correspondent of the Herald Tribune and the first white reporter ever to interview "The Divinely Inspired Messenger of Allah," has written a portrait of the man, his message and his influence. Directly or subtly, for the 150,000 who devoutly believe and for the others who do not, he is making the most persuasive statement of what is wrong in America—White America. He is making the mass of Negroes prouder of their race, their color. His Black Muslim propoganda, without question, is forcing all civil rights organizations and even Negro politicans to take another step toward harder, more extreme positions. His preachings are loosening Negro ties to Christianity—not through conversion to Allah but through impatience with Christian slowness on segregation. This man's power is felt the breadth of the land and by every person treated in the series "Ten Negroes" which Mr. Bird begins today.

TEN NEGROES

By Robert S. Bird
Herald Tribune National Correspondent

After our interview Elijah Muhammad, leader of the Black Muslims, took me out from the living room through the kitchen into the high-walled courtyard of his winter home in Phoenix, and we stood under the Arizona sun while he said a gracious goodbye to me.

Brother Antonne X had gone to the garage to back the Cadillac out and drive me back to my hotel. I thanked Mr. Muhammad for giving me this unprecedented interview, and I mentioned that I felt he had spoken very forcefully.

This was an understatement, really, for never in my life had I heard the white race—my race—so unmercifully flayed, so thoroughly accused, so vividly denounced, so damned in judgment, as from him during the preceding hour and a half.

Still, he had displayed an exquisite courtesy throughout the long declamation, glancing at me in a kindly way every now and then as I sat beside him on the couch, or giving me a questioning look as if to see how I was taking it. But most of his excoriation seemed addressed to the middle of the living room, as if that were where white America might be listening.

THE CHARGES

He is small and fragile of figure, this man who is regarded by many law enforcement officers as the most dangerous Negro leader in the country. And standing there in the courtyard in well cut dark gray suit, gray and white bow tie of smooth design and dark, stylishly narrow-brimmed hat, he looked like an unobtrusive man of importance.

Brother Antonne X, in snow-white suit or uniform (I couldn't tell which), maneuvered the sleek car up beside us and Mr. Muhammad gave a warm, almost shy, smile and said he had enjoyed my visit. Then, speaking in a voice so low I had to lean over to catch his words, he volunteered an interesting explanation of himself.

"You see, I am between life and death," he said, "and I have to say these things in the way I say them. There was a time when I had no knowledge of them. But they have been revealed to me, and now Allah would punish me if I did not say them."

I had sought this interview with the 65-year-old Mr. Muhammad because his preaching is touching, influencing or exciting the whole Negro world in this country, including those who are his severest critics.

Nobody can laugh him off. For even though his devoted formal following is hardly more than a small fraction of the 20 million American Negroes, his harsh message is helping to change the inner feeling and the scene of Negro America.

THE DENIALS

In my visit with him we talked for a good four hours in two sessions spread over two days. The first session of about an hour and a half was given over to my questions and his answers. In the second one I asked him a few more questions and he answered at length. Then, at my suggestion that he describe in his own way, without interruption from me, his view of the race situation in the United States and the place of the Black Muslim movement in it, he embarked on his declamatory monologue of about an hour.

The total interview dealt, first of all, with the charges made that he preaches hatred and violence against the white people—

The charges that he has organized within his movement a highly disciplined household guard or militia—

The charges that he teaches "black supremacy" and "segregation" of the whites—

The charges that he teaches that the white people are inferior and that all are inherently "devils"—

The charges that he is advocating insurrection in the future, and destruction of the white race, and domination by the Negro population in this country by 1970.

More on TEN NEGROES—P 10

TEN NEGROES

To most of these accusations he gave denials, with explanations of why the charges were being made against him. But to that relating to the devilish nature of the white people he offered a regretful theological explanation as to why it was true, and he detailed supporting grievances to prove it, in chilling language.

He discussed the future possibility—but only a possibility, he insisted—of involving the Black Muslim movement in political voting, perhaps even in the next Presidential election.

He made it clear that there is absolutely no possibility in his view for any integration of the white and black races, or even a living together side by side in the long range future. Total physical separation in different territory and total independence for the Negroes are a "must," he said, and he described how this might be brought about at an unspecified time ahead.

He spoke pityingly about the various "foolish" Negro leaders, such as Dr. Martin Luther King jr., who are active on the scene today, and he described the Black Muslim elementary schools and "university" and its stores and other businesses in Chicago, Detroit and other places.

He dealt with what he calls the failures of Christianity in the Negro world, and he went deeply into his religion of Islam and the sacred nature and uniqueness of the black race, which he teaches was the "original" race from which the inferior white race was developed.

His Black Muslim preaching is spread through the Negro world largely by his own tabloid newspaper, Muhammad Speaks, published in Chicago, and by a column of his writings in certain Negro weekly newspapers, and his rare public appearances at Black Muslim meetings and rallies which have drawn audiences on special occasions of up to 10,000 persons.

But his message is being effectively relayed to even bigger audiences, perhaps, by his young "traveling minister," Malcolm X, an exceedingly articulate and forceful speaker who has gained a great deal of television "exposure" during the past year.

THE TAPING

Mr. Muhammad himself (his followers generally call him "mister") has shunned the spotlight and avoided interviews with white news men, and has stayed pretty much within the inner circles of his ministers and followers. He makes his headquarters in Chicago, but passes more and more time now in Arizona because of his severe asthma.

In this series of articles aimed at developing some new and perhaps deeper insights into the thoughts and feelings of Negroes, I had wanted to get a first-hand impression of this influential figure who is the earthly fount of the Black Muslim philosophy.

Through certain Negro intermediaries I arranged to speak with him in Phoenix by long distance telephone from New York, and he agreed to a two-hour interview in his home there.

I asked him if I might bring a tape recorder with me, and he instantly replied:

"That will be all right—because I will have one, too."

A few days later a Phoenix taxicab driver dropped me off at a little single-level, suburban-type brick house with red tile roof and a pretty, clipped lawn with newly planted flower border. The place was about 15 minutes' drive from downtown Phoenix in a very spruce, middle class Negro residential section.

I pressed the door bell, which had a white crescent insignia of Islam on the button, and a tall, stern Negro man in white opened the door. He turned out later to be Brother Antonne X, who is altogether friendly when you get to know him. He was expecting me, and passed me straight into the living room.

Mr. Muhammad was standing there waiting, and he came forward with a little smile and a handshake. He was gentle but a trifle stiff at first. Brother Antonne took a chair beside him and watched everything with an eagle eye.

We immediately went to work setting up our tape recorders, and I quickly discovered that the leader of the Black Muslims was a most considerate host, for he fretted a little to make sure that I was in a comfortable place and that all was well for going ahead.

Actually we ended up sitting side by side on a big, soft, curved [illegible]

WHITE SYMPATHIZERS—George Lincoln Rockwell, center, leader of the American Nazi Party, and a pair of his lieutenants sit up front as special guests at a giant rally of Black Muslims in Washington. Minority groups tend to lean toward one another in order to gain greater public attention, so in spite of the Muslims' desire to cut themselves off from white America, Muhammad's movement attracts "hate" affiliates like these home-grown Nazis, and his message is changing posture of Negroes.

London Sunday Times photos

IN THEIR HANDS—A white American Nazi, guest of the Muslims at a fund-raising meeting in Washington, sits alongside two Negro followers of Elijah Muhammad. One with strong, judo-trained fingers tightly clutched and the other holding a paper bucket into which the believers will toss their dollar bills for the ever-growing war chest. The Muslims wait, calmly and quietly, apparently within the law—for Allah's announcement of Armageddon. Hard core membership is about 5,000 to 6,000.

repeatedly that this was not done in the movement, that it was severely prohibited and would be punished. Speaking of a demonstration with strongly worded "police state" picket signs which I had witnessed on Fifth Avenue in front of Rockefeller Plaza, which was carried out with astonishing suddenness, efficiency and discipline, he commented:

"Well, I didn't see the signs but I heard that there were some protests made against the arrest of the innocent Brothers, and that's no more than natural; because the charge made against them they could not have been guilty of, because there were no such arms among the Brothers while they were in their meeting. That is absolutely prohibited, and they are not supposed to allow any one to come in with arms on them at the meetings.

"If that happens the guards or searchers will be also punished for allowing arms to enter the meeting, especially when it is at a stationary place."

Mr. Muhammad talks in a somewhat high voice and tends to falter at times, but when he gets emotional the words flow from him rather dramatically and far more easily. He got a little emotional over the police interference with the Black Muslim temple meetings in Los Angeles.

The leader's disclaimer of teaching black supremacy and segregation seemed to be more semantic than actual. In any case, when I asked him about this—and whether his teachings were not in one sense rather similar to the white supremacy and segregationist teachings of the white Citizens Councils of the South, he replied:

"Allah has revealed that the black man is the Original Man, and that's what I teach. Now where this supremacy teaching comes in, that is charged by the disbelievers—that I teach it in order to suit their particular purpose of charging us with being an aggressive movement, or intending to become such, because of the teachings of one being superior over the other."

THE 'BLAME'

He elaborated on this at length, adding:

"We say that the black man is the first man in the sun, and then they take this and just change it around—that he is teaching supremacy. And that, we are not doing. We already know that we are inferior to you here in America. We cannot say physically or even mentally that we are equal. We can't do it because we're not. We have undergone such treatment that it has absolutely made us inferior to you, and therefore we can't be your equal; not, say, your superior, when it comes to actual physical or educational ability."

Meredith and his success in getting into the University of Mississippi with the help of the United States Army.

"Poor fellow," Mr. Muhammad said, "trying to force himself in a school where it is 100 per cent white, and they're telling him they don't want him. And then the Army is standing around trying to force him in there—that's their crazy idea. I wouldn't want the Army to think about coming to help me against a white man, to allow me to come into his house or in the school or his restaurant, or anything else that he owns.

"If you tell me, I don't want you here, that's sufficient. I'm gone."

He said that "our people" would make room for the Muslims "but not for people like Mr. King and Meredith and other leaders who are yet ignorant of the knowledge of themselves."

"They will not accept them," he said, "because they don't have the knowledge of self, and therefore they hate self. They don't have as much love for self as they think they have; they don't have love for themselves if they want to let a strong people swallow them up."

Knowledge of self is a big aim in the Black Muslim teaching, and among other things it means to Mr. Muhammad a "cleaning up" of his people. He puts it this way:

THE MORALITY

"I am not so foolish a teacher to teach my followers to go and force the white man to allow us to become equal members of his society without cleaning up my people and making them self-respecting first. They must be qualified to demand even a black independent society.

"Therefore I start at the root of the matter. Go clean yourself up and show the world that you have self-respect, and seek education wherever you can get it, and make yourself equal with the civilized society of the earth, and they will accept you.

"Otherwise you are a dog in the society, or you are a rejected human being or beings in the society of the world, and I don't blame them. If you are not qualified and not their equal, stay out of it."

Cleaning up also means a rigorous morality characterized by modesty in women's dress and also by learning to eat the right foods, he said. He scathingly opposes the eating of pork.

I asked Mr. Muhammad how he felt about other Negro people who, though perhaps not leaders in the civil rights cause, were persons whom he knows or has dealings with in business and professional ways, even though they did not asking. We can't get along with you in peace, you don't want us in peace.

"If we sit over there in that house across the street, peaceful all day and all night, after a while that worries you. You will send someone around to see what is going on over there in that house. 'I don't ever see them, looks like they're doing nothing over there. Go on over there and see. I never hear what they're planning. Maybe they're planning something over there.'

"It's the white man's way of starting trouble. Breaking the peace of people by interfering with their peace. We're not sitting over there in that house planning anything, but are trying to plan peace for the house."

The Black Muslims, though forbidden by Mr. Muhammad to use weapons, are taught self-defense and to fight back if molested.

"In a case where the person will not accept this and he wants to fight, and he pounces upon us, sometimes without even warning us, we want our own men and women and our girls to learn to try to protect themselves the best they can in case of attack.

"But in the case of the so-called American Negro we have nothing to fight back with. If you come to the door shooting, we have no guns here to shoot back, so therefore the right is with God, as it is written in the Book. He will defend us if we believe in Him and trust Him, and we're not going to start fighting with any one to have Him to defend us. But if we are attacked we depend on Him to defend us because He has stripped us."

Mr. Muhammad's teaching about a separate territory for the American Negroes is open to negotiation, he indicated. He said, "They use this teaching of separation as something that we plan to make war, or cause insurrection in the country for even talking about it, and that it's out of place because we can't solve the problem by separation."

Here's what he says on that subject:

"The American white man is not going to move out of his estate to give to the so-called Negroes. We are not asking you to do any such thing. No, only unless you prevent our going to our own. If you are going to prevent us from going to our own, or back where we came from, where you found us, okay, then give us a place here to ourselves.

THE TERRITORY

"This has gone to too much talk about separation, and about our acting or demanding a territory here. We're not demanding territory in America. No, sir, we're asking America only if they don't allow us, or will not allow us to go back to our own people and to the country from which we

Mr. Muhammad himself (his followers generally call him "mister") has shunned the spotlight and avoided interviews with white news men, and has stayed pretty much within the inner circles of his ministers and followers. He makes his headquarters in Chicago, but passes more and more time now in Arizona because of his severe asthma.

In this series of articles aimed at developing some new and perhaps deeper insights into the thoughts and feelings of Negroes, I had wanted to get a first-hand impression of this influential figure who is the earthly fount of the Black Muslim philosophy.

Through certain Negro intermediaries I arranged to speak with him in Phoenix by long distance telephone from New York, and he agreed to a two-hour interview in his home there.

I asked him if I might bring a tape recorder with me, and he instantly replied:

"That will be all right—because I will have one, too."

A few days later a Phoenix taxicab driver dropped me off at a little single-level, suburban-type brick house with red tile roof and a pretty, clipped lawn with newly planted flower border. The place was about 15 minutes' drive from downtown Phoenix in a very spruce, middle class Negro residential section.

I pressed the door bell, which had a white crescent insignia of Islam on the button, and a tall, stern Negro man in white opened the door. He turned out later to be Brother Antonne X, who is altogether friendly when you get to know him. He was expecting me, and passed me straight into the living room.

Mr. Muhammad was standing there waiting, and he came forward with a little smile and a handshake. He was gentle but a trifle stiff at first. Brother Antonne took a chair beside him and watched everything with an eagle eye.

We immediately went to work setting up our tape recorders, and I quickly discovered that the leader of the Black Muslims was a most considerate host, for he fretted a little to make sure that I was in a comfortable place and that all was well for going ahead.

Actually we ended up sitting side by side on a big, soft, curved green couch, with my recorder on a glass coffee table and his on a side table.

He watched politely to see that we synchronized the start of our tapes, and then we were off.

THE VIOLENCE

The thing that is most worrisome about the Black Muslims to most white people who follow their activities is the hatred and violence that seems to emanate from the movement. Mr. Muhammad denies preaching either, but there appears to be a distinction between his tough talk against white treatment of the Negroes and anything suggesting the possibility of overt violence by the Black Muslims. As to this last, here is what he told me—and rather impassionedly, too:

"We are not going to take part in any violence whatsoever. We're not going to do anything other than what we are doing. That is trying to deliver the truth to our people and teach them that they are supposed to be Muslims, and that means they are supposed to be righteous people and that we have shed off all things that pertain to wickedness.

"We have stripped ourselves of harm to let you know that we are not people of violence. We don't intend to attack you. We have no idea or knowledge of anything like that coming in the future. Because if we attacked you we would have to have superior weapons to attack you with, and we don't have factories, nor earth to dig metals to manufacture tools or weapons such as you have.

"All this is your own creation, and therefore if we would get some of this you would have to let us have it—and you would not give me a gun to shoot you with. Therefore, God forbid us even to accept weapons, and even to carry anything like weapons to fight with. Because to fight is with Him, and you are not with us."

I asked Mr. Muhammad why, in view of this, a part of his movement was organized as a military unit. I referred to the so-called "Fruit of Islam," a contingent of husky finely trained young Negroes who are, in the opinion of some law enforcement officers, seemingly the cadre for a potential Black Muslim militia.

"The Fruit of Islam means the first converts to Islam here in America, and the first people to be cleaned and made fit to be called Muslims," he answered.

"And their training is on this basis, as being Muslims, to keep in practice; not just say it is their faith or belief. You must put into practice the principles of Islam that you believe in, and serve as an example for others who would accept Islam.

"They take physical training and exercises in many ways to keep physically fit and healthy and to try to get away from many of the physical ailments that they have suffered long before coming into the knowledge of Islam.

"And trained into the knowledge of what the aims and purposes of Islam is for. It is to clean up a people who are not clean, morally as well as spiritually, in America; and to make them fit to become good members of the society."

A little later in connection with this discussion he added:

"I notice that the white people are very keen and alert about who teaches us and what is being taught us. Well, I don't say that I would not do the same if I had brought up a people subjected to slavery under myself. I would like to know what my slave learned or is being taught other than that which I have not taught him."

THE WEAPONS

As to the disciplined demonstrations in the streets by the Black Muslims, such as were held in New York during the early spring in protest against the arrest of certain members of the movement in Rochester, N. Y., he said, "I can't tell you whether we will have any future demonstrations or not."

"We're not people who actually like to get out in the public for any show," he explained. "We don't like that. If we have to go out in the public we want this going-out to be in a good way, and for a good cause, and to know that it is for justice."

As for carrying weapons, the Black Muslim leader said

lented:

"Well, I didn't see the signs but I heard that there were some protests made against the arrest of the innocent Brothers, and that's no more than natural; because the charge made against them they could not have been guilty of, because there were no such arms among the Brothers while they were in their meeting. That is absolutely prohibited, and they are not supposed to allow any one to come in with arms on them at the meetings.

"If that happens the guards or searchers will be also punished for allowing arms to enter the meeting, especially when it is at a stationary place."

Mr. Muhammad talks in a somewhat high voice and tends to falter at times, but when he gets emotional the words flow from him rather dramatically and far more easily. He got a little emotional over the police interference with the Black Muslim temple meetings in Los Angeles.

The leader's disclaimer of teaching black supremacy and segregation seemed to be more semantic than actual. In any case, when I asked him about this—and whether his teachings were not in one sense rather similar to the white supremacy and segregationist teachings of the white Citizens Councils of the South, he replied:

"Allah has revealed that the black man is the Original Man, and that's what I teach. Now where this supremacy teaching comes in, that is charged by the disbelievers—that I teach it in order to suit their particular purpose of charging us with being an aggressive movement, or intending to become such, because of the teachings of one being superior over the other."

THE 'BLAME'

He elaborated on this at length, adding:

"We say that the black man is the first man in the sun, and then they take this and just change it around—that he is teaching supremacy. And that, we are not doing. We already know that we are inferior to you here in America. We cannot say physically or even mentally that we are equal. We can't do it because we're not. We have undergone such treatment that it has absolutely made us inferior to you, and therefore we can't be your equal; not, say, your superior, when it comes to actual physical or educational ability."

To my question whether this black supremacy charge was, then, a distortion of his teaching, he said, "Yes, in order to add to the charge of aggression."

He does, however, believe along with the Southern segregationists that integration is wrong and that intermarriage is evil and that segregated education is all right so long as the Negroes get the same textbooks.

"What are we going to integrate for?" he asked. "What do we want to marry a white woman for, when we are black men? That is going to ruin our family. We will spotty up our family. What does she want a black man for? Or what does the black man want the white one for? This is ignorant on both parts even to want to intermarry with each other. The very desire there is ignorant and evil. It's against divine law for either side to integrate in such a way.

"God made all of us as we are. We have black nations, brown nations, red ones, yellow and white. We have all these five major colors in races or nations. Why should they not remain like that? Why should they be thrown in like bones or birds into a pot to make soup out of?

"I don't blame the white man in the South for not wanting my people to marry with them. But I blame the South for mistreating him. Why don't the South let him go free? Why don't they teach him that, look here, Negro, I freed you a hundred years ago. Now come on, I'm going to put you on the road to freedom because I don't want you in my house as a member of my family. I don't want you sitting down at my table. Go make a table for yourself. Come on, I'll show you how to do this."

But "educational integration," that is good, Mr. Muhammad said.

"We should try to get the same education that is available to all other living people, and if the white man has it in his school, if we prove ourselves intelligent enough or decent enough to get in that particular class—we expect him to allow us to study the same courses he studies," he asserted.

"It doesn't have to be right in his own school if he doesn't want us in his own classes. Just give us the textbooks, that's all. Let us learn what is in the book where he is learning. We don't have to stand together in the class."

THE SCORN

The black nationalist Mr. Muhammad had only scorn for Negro leaders who sought the help of the United States Constitution to gain Negro rights because, he pointed out, "the Constitution was written up while the white man owned slaves, and he didn't have the slave in mind when he was writing the Constitution."

There always will be bloodshed over any Negro effort to gain equality with the white man, he said, as witness "the example in Mississippi and Alabama today while we are talking." Then he heaped scorn on Dr. Martin Luther King jr., head of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, of Atlanta, Ga.

"The head of this movement, Mr. King, is trying to force the white man in the South to do that which is against his will and nature, because some of the Northern parties of the white people, maybe in Washington, have said to him that it should be done, and you should have this in the Constitution and therefore you should enforce it, and therefore have it enforced by the government.

"But Mr. King has not learned as yet that the white man in the South is brethren to the white man in Washington, and the Washington white man is the brother to the Southern white man, that they are not going to go to war over the Negro and kill each other for the sake of the unlearned Negro—of the knowledge of self and others—to integrate into that which they don't desire him to be in. They are not going to kill themselves for the sake of a Negro.

"Therefore Mr. King is making a fool out of himself in the South, and acting like a dog around the house, where the master stands at the door and the dog wants something to eat and he just waddles all around the door, around the master's feet, whipping his tail on the ground and grinning and leaning his ears back on his neck to show that he is a good, peaceful dog; and that, master, give me a piece of your meat that you have there in your house. And this while there is plenty of meat for the dog in the bushes out there, if he would go out there and hunt for it."

It was only pity that Mr. Muhammad felt for James to help me against a white man, to allow me to come into his house or in the school or his restaurant, or anything else that he owns.

"If you tell me, I don't want you here, that's sufficient. I'm gone."

He said that "our people" would make room for the Muslims "but not for people like Mr. King and Meredith and other leaders who are yet ignorant of the knowledge of themselves."

"They will not accept them," he said, "because they don't have the knowledge of self, and therefore they hate self. They don't have as much love for self as they think they have; they don't have love for themselves if they want to let a strong people swallow them up."

Knowledge of self is a big aim in the Black Muslim teaching, and among other things it means to Mr. Muhammad a "cleaning up" of his people. He puts it this way:

THE MORALITY

"I am not so foolish a teacher to teach my followers to go and force the white man to allow us to become equal members of his society without cleaning up my people and making them self-respecting first. They must be qualified to demand even a black independent society.

"Therefore I start at the root of the matter. Go clean yourself up and show the world that you have self-respect, and seek education wherever you can get it, and make yourself equal with the civilized society of the earth, and they will accept you.

"Otherwise you are a dog in the society, or you are a rejected human being or beings in the society of the world, and I don't blame them. If you are not qualified and not their equal, stay out of it."

Cleaning up also means a rigorous morality characterized by modesty in women's dress and also by learning to eat the right foods, he said. He scathingly opposes the eating of pork.

I asked Mr. Muhammad how he felt about other Negro people who, though perhaps not leaders in the civil rights cause, were persons whom he knows or has dealings with in business and professional ways, even though they did not believe in his movement.

"We have respect for them and their professions and we try to treat them as we treat ourselves, for that matter," he answered. "We know they are not believers as we are, we know that.

"But as long as they tolerate with our faith we tolerate with them, and we treat them as brothers."

But what about the persons who are sometimes referred to by Black Muslims as the "Uncle Toms," I asked.

"That doesn't mean that we are in any way aggressive toward them and seek an aggressive act," he said. "We only just criticize them for being like that.

"I love all my people," he continued, "and I believe one day they all will be going to believe as I believe. If they don't, why then the prophets have lied, and we just can't make liars out of them."

I asked him what he meant exactly in referring to members of the white race as "devils," and he said that this is the white man's essential nature because he was made that way. He made it clear that he was not speaking rhetorically but in a theological sense—this was what God had revealed.

"It's what He revealed, and what He revealed is what I am teaching and believe in, and this term 'devil,' or name 'devil,' is applied to wicked people, people who are by nature wicked.

THE INDEPENDENCE

"They were made white, or different color," he said, "because they had been grafted out of the darker people, and therefore they have that color."

This conforms to the version given in Elijah Muhammad's Volume II of "The Supreme Wisdom," in which it is said that the history of the black man goes back to the beginning of creation, but that the history of the white race goes back only 6,000 years.

However, he explained to me that the only point about this that he is teaching is "that the person is the same by nature but he can be better than another one of the same family or race." I took this to mean that all whites have the devil-nature, according to his teaching, but that some can be better than others and that those who do a good deed "will be rewarded for their goodness and their time will be extended."

For his view of the white man in relation to the American Negro, he had this to say:

"This is the real trouble, the whites oppose us, the black people of America who were their slaves once upon a time, from ever becoming anything like self-independent. They want to keep them subject to themselves in a more educational and scientific way, other than their fathers'.

"Their fathers only used the common knowledge of enslaving our people. But today their children can use one of the smartest scientific ways against our people to keep them subject to them that ever was invented by a race of people since time was."

Without saying what this particular kind of knowledge is, he went on to assert:

"We want what you want today, and that is independence. We want peace, and whether you want peace or not, we want peace and security from you. You are our worst enemy. We have no other people who is an enemy to us but you, because we don't live in the country of other people. We live only with you, and we have been here for 400 years, and you say now that we are free, but yet you are doing everything to keep us from exercising the rights of or equals of a free people."

THE MONOLOGUE

Mr. Muhammad at this point was deep in his long monologue. His talk came flowing out as if from a self-replenishing wellspring. He declaimed his points in a tone of boundless grievance. Several times he was interrupted by his asthmatic cough; he begged pardon for the interruption and continued.

"This I want you to understand," he said. "We are tired of suffering, brutality, beatings, killings, just because you don't like us, and just hate us, and absolutely knowing that we are powerless to resist because you have every odd against us. You are absolutely the boss, and we have nothing. And we are asking to leave you, that's all we're something over there.'

I never hear what they're planning. [illegible]

"It's the white man's way of starting trouble. Breaking the peace of people by interfering with their peace. We're not sitting over there in that house planning anything, but are trying to plan peace for the house."

The Black Muslims, though forbidden by Mr. Muhammad to use weapons, are taught self-defense and to fight back if molested.

"In a case where the person will not accept this and he wants to fight, and he pounces upon us, sometimes without even warning us, we want our own men and women and our girls to learn to try to protect themselves the best they can in case of attack.

"But in the case of the so-called American Negro we have nothing to fight back with. If you come to the door shooting, we have no guns here to shoot back, so therefore the right is with God, as it is written in the Book. He will defend us if we believe in Him and trust Him, and we're not going to start fighting with any one to have Him to defend us. But if we are attacked we depend on Him to defend us because He has stripped us."

Mr. Muhammad's teaching about a separate territory for the American Negroes is open to negotiation, he indicated. He said, "They use this teaching of separation as something that we plan to make war, or cause insurrection in the country for even talking about it, and that it's out of place because we can't solve the problem by separation."

Here's what he says on that subject:

"The American white man is not going to move out of his estate to give to the so-called Negroes. We are not asking you to do any such thing. No, only unless you prevent our going to our own. If you are going to prevent us from going to our own, or back where we came from, where you found us, okay, then give us a place here to ourselves.

THE TERRITORY

"This has gone to too much talk about separation, and about our acting or demanding a territory here. We're not demanding territory in America. No, sir, we're asking America only if they don't allow us, or will not allow us to go back to our own people and to the country from which we came.

"Then give us a place to ourselves, as you know and we have learned through experience for 400 years we can't get along in peace together. You're not going to accept us as your equals and we know you're not going to do so. We disregard your promises because you are not going to live up to them because 100 per cent of your people will not agree with such. And we have proof today in the South."

In answer to a series of questions on this subject of a territory for settlement he told me that " I have in mind the place where I think it would be."

"But I will not say that until my people want to be separated, and until the government itself wants to separate them and give them such a place."

He indicated that the place for settlement, whether in this country or abroad, has not been decided on because it is altogether premature at this point.

He did suggest, though, that the Muslims would be glad to have the government make available to them right now land suitable for growing food.

"I don't think we should, many of us, work without a focus," he said. "If the government will give us the land to farm on, and it should give us some farm land to go and raise our own food. They can do it to us. But we will buy it if we have the money to buy it. If we don't have the money to buy it, we can't buy it, but the government should do so because the government has plenty of land according to statistics."

He said that if the land were made available the Muslims would begin work "tomorrow morning."

"You won't have to drive us to it, we would do that religiously, because we want our people to have something for themselves and to grow food for them and clothes."

In answering my questions about Black Muslim finances he said that no member is forced to give money but that if they want to buy a piece of property they agree among themselves how much each will give of his earnings toward the purchase price.

"It may demand $50 of each of us, and we buy it and we sacrifice ourselves to give that $50 out of our wages for so long a time, a month, two months, three months, four months, something like that."

I mentioned that I had heard that active members were required to contribute a total as high as $90 a month to the movement.

"Those who are able might give that much," he replied, "but he's not forced. But as I said, after we learn that you have an income of $100 a week we ask you how much of this do you have to pay out for the house rent, food, clothing, and other overhead expenses, and you tell us. And how much the government has to take out for taxes and whatnot. Then whatever is left, then you will tell me and you will tell me what you can give out of that. It's not for me to tell you. That's forcing you."

THE TARGET DATE

On the subject of using the power of the vote, Mr. Muhammad said this was all "future talk" at this point, but he indicated that there was a possibility that this might be used in the 1964 election. In order for a candidate to gain an indorsement, he said, "he would have to be in sympathy with us and he would have to have some knowledge of the aims and purposes of Islam in America."

"The aims and purposes of Islam here among my people," he added, "is to give them a knowledge of self and a knowledge of God, knowledge of their religion Islam and to separate them in time, that these 17 million or 20 million American dark people should go for themselves. This is the basis of the whole, it is to separate our people and put them by themselves."

Although he kept emphasizing that the voting idea was in a very indecisive stage now, I asked, if it should materialize as a Black Muslim policy, would that change the movement's position with respect to military service? At the present time it opposes military service and its members refuse to serve.

"If it became materialized, naturally military participation might take place, but I don't know yet, not as yet myself," he said.

Replying to the reports that he had set the date 1970 as the time when the Negroes would take over in the United States, Mr. Muhammad said this was misrepresented, and that what he actually had said was that "by 1970 all of my people, or most of them, at least 90 per cent of them will be believing in Islam—that's all that was said."

Asked about whether Fidel Castro was included by him in the group of "original men," he said:

"I am so concerned where the so-called Negro stands and what he should be and who he should try to join onto that I have no time to study the history of Castro and the Spanish people in the South."

The Black Muslim movement was started in the early 1930s by Wallace Fard of Detroit, who later disappeared. Mr. Muhammad, who was born Elijah Poole in Georgia 65 years ago, took over the leadership after the founder's disappearance.

I asked Mr. Muhammad about this. Is there, I asked, a mystery about what happened to him?

"No sir, there is no mystery of what happened to him," he answered.

Could Mr. Muhammad say what happened?

"He is just waiting for his proper time to deliver speeches."

Did Mr. Muhammad consider Mr. Fard (whose name he pronounces Farad) to be not only a holy man but actually a divine person?

"He is God Himself. He is the One that we have been looking for for the last 2,000 years to come. He is the One and His word bears witness to the fact that He is the One."

And you knew him, I asked?

"I do know him."

Is Mr. Muhammad in touch with him now?

"Yes, spiritually."

I asked him about a successor. Did he have in mind the identity of his own successor, since he himself is known as the inspired Messenger of Allah?

THE PUBLIC EYE

His answer to this was a swift one:

"No, that is not my job to do anything like that. This work that has been put upon me to do by the will of Almighty God Allah who has appointed me, there will be no such thing as a successor because everything will be guided according to the will of Allah and whatever that He reveals it will be carried out, and it is like today we have the moon and the sun and the stars up there, and they are not changed for others."

I mentioned that his minister, Malcolm X, was much in the public eye, and on the other hand his own children are active in the movement, too.

"All my family are believers," he said. "My sons and daughters and their children, all of them, their sons and daughters. They all believe and they all follow me. Now if you are referring to which one shall be the successor, that I don't know. I could not say that because I have not got a meaning of anything of the kind, and so therefore I could not say to you such and such a one will be the successor, even if I were to die this afternoon."

I asked him about the membership figure in his approximately 80 temples around the country, saying that law enforcement authorities seemed agreed that the hard core membership of the Black Muslims was between 5,000 and 6,000 members, with a less attached following of between 150,000 and 300,000.

"I don't even know that because we don't have a record showing that figure," he said. "That figure is only known with Allah."

TOMORROW: The president of the nation's largest Negro university answers a question posed by many white people: why don't Negroes do more to clean their own house—for instance, reduce crime among their people?

TEN NEGROES

As an educator he taught law for twenty years at Howard prior to his appointment as president of the university in 1960. He comes, moreover, from an Atlanta family of scholars who have made important careers for themselves.

Taking all these things together, he can afford a disarming affectation when he settles in his chair to talk. Dr. Nabrit discourses in the leisurely, round-about fashion of a crack-voiced country preacher—making, however, impressive good sense in every sentence. He smokes a cigar and waves it around as he drives home a point, and a half dozen spare cigars are stacked in a breast pocket.

"I say to my white friends," he continued, "you ought to understand that we Negroes aren't going to be better than American society itself. We're part of it. You're talking to me as if the Negro ought not to have any of these aberrations. But I say the Negro should mirror everything in American society—because he's part of it. That's why I don't get upset over the Black Muslim and over all these other things.

"I'm not pleased with them, but I am not made hopeless or led to feel that everything is going to collapse. Rockwell doesn't represent America, he just represents some people who have peculiar ideas."

Taking his time in circling around to the target question—Washington crime—Dr. Nabrit warned that if his blunt views and those of other equally frank speaking Negroes were printed here they would disturb many well-meaning whites who have come to feel a little self-righteous about the "progress" of the Negroes.

"But they ought not to be disturbed," he growled from his tilted back chair, "because this country was conceived and developed and built under a revolutionary set of principles—principles that agitated and stirred up all Europe and England and the Americas from the 1700s straight through to the adoption of our Constitution and since.

"The point is, some of the fire and enthusiasm and adventurousness and keen perception of all that has become blunted by an affluent society, and by the fact that we are in a leadership role in the free world. But if people in other countries don't think that the United States is big enough to embrace differences in people they're not going to accept the leadership of this country."

Howard University's campus is vibrant with the hum and life of students of many foreign nationalities, of varied skin colors, and diverse languages. Of the approximately 7,000 students, more than 1,000—more than any other university in the country—are from other countries all over the world.

Friend of Statesmen

Dr. Nabrit himself has sat, moreover, on international conferences in other countries and has a wide acquaintance with both the statesmen and the capitals of foreign nations.

He argued that if the race issue is "unsettling" to many white Americans it was the facing-up to such unsettling issues in the past which made this country great. He voiced a thought heard everywhere in Negro America, that time is running short in this country for redeeming for the Negro minority the vaunted promises of democracy. America does not have the time left that the Roman Empire, or ancient Greece, or even England, had to build and maintain world leadership, he warned.

"It seems to me that we ought to be grasping for the kinds of things that would make our leadership survive," he said. "And I think one such thing is tolerance and understanding and respect for people who differ from us.

"We Negroes will work out our solution in this country in any case, because we have more time than the country has. I don't mean we want the time—but psychologically and chronologically we have more time to work out our solutions than the United States.

"As for the country, we ought to set up as a pillar of our society the idea of aligning our nation with the philosophy that men differ in their backgrounds and thoughts and languages and colors—but they are all men."

Dr. James M. Nabrit jr. On a Recent Visit to New York

". . . I have lived in the South. There the Sheriff is the man. I don't care what people write in books, it's the Sheriff who has contact with the jury list, with the taxes and assessments, and all the legal and illegal activities going on in the county. He can make a person's life miserable by harassment—I mean white or black."

Negro in these counties in the South the image of America is the image of the Sheriff. This is what people don't understand. Many of the Sheriffs are good people, however, else the Negroes would not have survived.

"But the importance that this Southern Negro sees in the elections in the United States is not who is elected President, all he wants to know is who's going to be Sheriff. That's the person who's going to be on his back. I'm not talking about Negroes in the universities, I'm talking about the ordinary Negro whose life is just one risk after another."

Dr. Nabrit, who spent much time in the South working as a lawyer in behalf of these rural Negroes, spoke with pain and compassion in his voice.

"For people to talk about the trend in the United States being a trend toward equal opportunities, that's true enough—but this Southern Negro can't see it," he said. "He can't see any trend. The white people are not even talking to him.

"So if you asked him what the trend is he would say people are getting meaner and meaner, and he has taken all he can take. And he just has to do something about it. And this surprises the white people in the South."

Dr. Nabrit circled back on the crime-in-Washington question, offering a profound insight into this problem.

A basic difficulty is, he said, that the Negro masses are being asked by the whites to assume citizenship responsibility before they are allowed citizenship freedoms.

"My first answer to this crime problem is," he said, "that all of us need to work on the deficiencies of our society which prevent people who want to work from working. And which don't let people get the kind of education for life in society that they want. Now if we are willing to do that, I am willing to address myself not to what the Negro is doing in Washington about the crime matter but what terested in studying. They may have high I. Q.'s but they get talking to some fellow on the corner and he says I am studying electricity and you're foolish to try it because I can't get a job.

"Meanwhile, here we are trying to tell them, if you don't get an education you'll be lost, because you can't live in America unless you have the education that will fit you to deal with the machines and the techniques of today."

Dr. Nabrit said that to prevent hatred and violence in America three things are especially needed in society—"and for conformity to the basic principles of this country call for conformity to the basic principles of this country and a little moral leadership in places where it ought to be shown."

The three basics, he said, were:

"One, to do something about more evenly distributing education of citizens in all groups.

"Two, to enable people to live where they are able to live and where they have a desire to live.

"Three, to enable people to work and hold a job and get promoted on the basis of their ability."

The Howard educator, constitutional lawyer, and international figure spoke scornfully about the "depressing" statement made by a Southern Congressman a few weeks ago proposing that the Marines be called in to help clean up the Washington crime situation.

"The trouble is we are not dealing with the things that produce this situation," he said in summation. "But if we don't do something about it then in ten years we will have to have troops in all the big cities—because we'll have hundreds of thousands of people who will have no way to make a living and will be either on welfare or out with a gun trying to take something from society to live on."

and life of students of many foreign nationalities, of varied skin colors, and diverse languages. Of the approximately 7,000 students, more than 1,000—more than any other university in the country—are from other countries all over the world.

Friend of Statesmen

Dr. Nabrit himself has sat, moreover, on international conferences in other countries and has a wide acquaintance with both the statesmen and the capitals of foreign nations.

He argued that if the race issue is "unsettling" to many white Americans it was the facing-up to such unsettling issues in the past which made this country great. He voiced a thought heard everywhere in Negro America, that time is running short in this country for redeeming for the Negro minority the vaunted promises of democracy. America does not have the time left that the Roman Empire, or ancient Greece, or even England, had to build and maintain world leadership, he warned.

"It seems to me that we ought to be grasping for the kinds of things that would make our leadership survive," he said. "And I think one such thing is tolerance and understanding and respect for people who differ from us.

"We Negroes will work out our solution in this country in any case, because we have more time than the country has. I don't mean we want the time—but psychologically and chronologically we have more time to work out our solutions than the United States.

"As for the country, we ought to set up as a pillar of our society the idea of aligning our nation with the philosophy that men differ in their backgrounds and thoughts and languages and colors—but they are all men."

Meantime, he emphasized, Negro resentment at the disadvantageous position in which they remain a full century after slavery is running higher than ever.

"And one of the ways it is manifesting itself," he said, "is through those 300,000 people whom Elijah Muhammad has got in the Black Muslim movement. We ought to understand, though, that it is a marvel that more of this resentment has not been stored up within the Negro, that he has been able to take all he has taken without becoming absolutely anti-American, anti-white, anti-everything.

"It shows qualities which the Negro and America both ought to be proud about because, given the same circumstances, I don't know of another race that would have reacted this way over that period of time."

Coming around to the subject of Negro violence, Dr. Nabrit continued:

"Some of the Negroes do feel violent, of course. But we don't have anybody in the Negro group preaching that sort of thing in organized fashion except in the Black Muslims. And I would hope we would have fewer of those, because it's futile and destructive of everything that would make life worth having.

"We are trying to narrow the circumference around them, and to show the weaknesses of their arguments about separation and that sort of thing. But these people are shrewd. They can do some things that not even the churches can do. They can control their people.

A Consuming Hatred

"These Black Muslims don't drink, they don't smoke, they don't run around with other women. They stick with their families and pay their debts. Their people do a lot of things we would like to see everybody practice. So you have to watch them because of those things, to see that they don't capture people. Because the other thing is worse. It's a consuming hatred they have, and they may erupt in violence as they have already done in some places. All these things call for America to do something about these things that are wrong in our society."

The university president frequently referred to the good intentions of many white citizens, contrasting them with the harsh realities as seen through Negro eyes.

"I think this country would like to see us get an even break," he philosophized, "but the image which so many Negroes get from this country is not that at all. If you have been down in Mississippi or Alabama or Georgia—where I have been—you know that's not the image there.

"Their image is of fear, and bodily harm, and economic boycotts, and intimidation of all kinds. These are with the Negro every day. His fear is of getting less justice in the courts even if he shows the nerve and ability to get somebody to represent him.

"I have lived in the South. There the Sheriff is the man. I don't care what people write in books, it's the Sheriff who has contact with the jury list, with the taxes, and assessments, and all the legal and illegal activities going on in the county. He can make a person's life miserable by harassment—I mean white or black.

"Only a few white people in the county can do anything with him, and they work hand in glove with him. So to the is the image of the Sheriff. This is what people don't understand. Many of the Sheriffs are good people, however, else the Negroes would not have survived.

"But the importance that this Southern Negro sees in the elections in the United States is not who is elected President, all he wants to know is who's going to be Sheriff. That's the person who's going to be on his back. I'm not talking about Negroes in the universities, I'm talking about the ordinary Negro whose life is just one risk after another."

Dr. Nabrit, who spent much time in the South working as a lawyer in behalf of these rural Negroes, spoke with pain and compassion in his voice.

"For people to talk about the trend in the United States being a trend toward equal opportunities, that's true enough—but this Southern Negro can't see it," he said. "He can't see any trend. The white people are not even talking to him.

"So if you asked him what the trend is he would say people are getting meaner and meaner, and he has taken all he can take. And he just has to do something about it. And this surprises the white people in the South."

Dr. Nabrit circled back on the crime-in-Washington question, offering a profound insight into this problem.

A basic difficulty is, he said, that the Negro masses are being asked by the whites to assume citizenship responsibility before they are allowed citizenship freedoms.

"My first answer to this crime problem is," he said, "that all of us need to work on the deficiencies of our society which prevent people who want to work from working. And which don't let people get the kind of education for life in society that they want. Now if we are willing to do that, I am willing to address myself not to what the Negro is doing in Washington about the crime matter but what the citizens are doing about it.

"I was called into a meeting with very good white friends of mine recently when a white woman who was there, and who is a friend of mine, asked me what we were doing about this crime situation. She said she couldn't walk in the park at night.

"I said, this thing affects us all. You're not the only one who can't walk in the park at night. I told her we have had fear of walking in parks at night all our lives—but not for the same reason she had. After we got that straightened out we were able to make some headway in that meeting."

Dr. Nabrit moved to the heart of the Washington problem, saying:

"The Negro cannot assume the responsibilities of a citizen unless he understands what they are.

"I say in all my speeches that the Negro must assume the responsibilities before we get the rights. But that's all right for me to preach it—and I do try to convince as many Negroes as I can—but too many of these people I am talking about don't have this fine line of understanding.

"They can't see that. All they think is that they are not being treated like others in our society. So when we begin talking about what their responsibilities are it doesn't make any impression on them at all.

"Now I think this is one of the responsibilities of Negro leadership, to try to get this across, and I think Negro leadership is trying. I notice that Dr. Martin Luther King jr. advocates it in all his speeches, and the N. A. A. C. P. is advocating it. They all realize that there are citizenship responsibilities which free people have to assume, and if you're reaching for freedom you had better assume them. But that's not easy to get across to the Negro people as it is to sit here and discuss it."

Though Dr. Nabrit insists that the prevention of Negro crime is a task for all society and not for the Negroes alone, still he personally ordered the university months ago to initiate several different kinds of programs to improve Negro family life and living conditions in slum or run-down areas in the vicinity of the Howard campus. He keeps in close touch with these programs, and he was thinking of them when he said:

"If you went out and talked to families near the university where a white policeman beat up a Negro father of a family last week—a family that lacked food and heat—and if you spoke to them about what you and I are discussing right now, they would not know what you were talking about.

One Step at a Time

"I have to tell these people things one step at a time. I say, if you will do this first, then the policeman will not beat you up, then you will get heat. All the philosophy about citizenship responsibilities and freedom doesn't reach this man and his family at all. The family doesn't have anything you can hook into. It's like trying to hang up a suit of clothes in a closet without hooks. The clothes just fall right down on the floor.

"The lives of these people are a scramble for existence, and the rules we live by don't mean anything to them. It's as if the rules don't exist. Certainly, they would listen if you could hold them that long—then they'd go out and mug somebody. Or mug you."

Dr. Nabrit detailed the difficulties qualified Negroes have in getting anything but menial jobs in the big private firms and offices in Washington, and he spoke with deep feeling about discrimination in the important building industry in Washington against allowing Negroes into the various construction unions.

He himself was under attack by student groups at Howard this Spring because no Negroes were allowed to be employed in the construction of a new $4 million gymnasium on the Howard University campus. He told about the frustration he had encountered when he protested to contractors, unions and Federal agencies the (gym is being Federally financed). But still no Negroes were employed on the project.

Such discrimination has devastating effect on the motivation of youngsters who are studying, or would like to study, vocational skills such as electricity, he warned. Speaking of such youngsters from the Negro masses in Washington, he continued:

"They don't have any books in the home and they don't have enough food or clothing. They may have a radio or a television—that would be their only contact with our culture. The parents themselves are short of motivation and ambition, the whole family sees nothing behind them, nothing in the present, nothing in the future.

So the youngsters drop out of school. They're not in-get talking to some fellow on the corner and he says I am studying electricity and you're foolish to try it because I can't get a job.

"Meanwhile, here we are trying to tell them, if you don't get an education you'll be lost, because you can't live in America unless you have the education that will fit you to deal with the machines and the techniques of today."

Dr. Nabrit said that to prevent hatred and violence in America three things are especially needed in society—"and for conformity to the basic principles of this country call for conformity to the basic principles of this country and a little moral leadership in places where it ought to be shown."

The three basics, he said, were:

"One, to do something about more evenly distributing education of citizens in all groups.

"Two, to enable people to live where they are able to live and where they have a desire to live.

"Three, to enable people to work and hold a job and get promoted on the basis of their ability."

The Howard educator, constitutional lawyer, and international figure spoke scornfully about the "depressing" statement made by a Southern Congressman a few weeks ago proposing that the Marines be called in to help clean up the Washington crime situation.

NEGRO EDUCATOR'S SEARCHING LOOK AT OUR SOCIETY

By Robert S. Bird
Herald Tribune National Correspondent

In his cloistered office on a campus in Washington, D. C., a Negro university president distinguished with degrees and honors answered a bitter question that rattles in the minds of most white people in the nation's Capital.

Why don't the Negroes themselves do more to clean up crime among their own people?

Negro crime in Washington is becoming a global scandal as foreign diplomats in the Capital watch and wonder at the American failure in handling the peril of violence there.

But what about the Negroes themselves? Why don't they do something about policing their own people?

I asked the question of a number of Negroes in Washington and other crime-afflicted cities. But the answer of Dr. James M. Nabrit jr., president of Howard University, the nation's biggest predominantly Negro university, seemed to embrace most searchingly and vividly a viewpoint shared by all.

It was a little surprising to hear a noted educator from the academic world—even though a Negro one—speak almost as devastatingly about white America's failures in race relations as the Black Muslims themselves, while disagreeing utterly with their philosophy and what he called their hate declarations and talk of violence.

This is the second article of the ten-part series, "Ten Negroes," by the Herald Tribune's national correspondent Robert S. Bird on the Negroes' views of white America.

Herald Tribune photo by BILL SAURO
Howard University's Dr. James M. Nabrit jr.

But Dr. Nabrit insisted that the question needed to be put in perspective, and he gave it bluntly.

"Many of my white friends come to me from time to time to sympathize with me because of something the Negro has done or something some Black Muslim has said," he began. "They tell me they are very sorry about it. But I reply, don't come feeling sorry for me. You ought to sympathize with society. It is society which has all the aberrant personalities—the white ones as well as the Negro ones.

"I tell them that we Negroes don't indict the white race because of the John Birch Society or the Klu-Klux Klan or George Rockwell, the American Nazi leader, or any other persons who deviate from the accepted standards. We simply hold that these are persons who have broken off in some abnormal way within society. We think of them as belonging within the confines of the group."

Dr. Nabrit knows the Negro crime subject from first hand experience. He holds a law degree with honors from Northwestern University and an honorary doctorate in law from Morehouse College in Atlanta, where he got his bachelor of arts degree with honors in 1923. Sixty-two years old now, he was a practicing lawyer in both the South and the North before becoming a national authority on civil rights and constitutional law.

Martin Luther King Describes the Hurry

This is the third article of the ten-part series, "Ten Negroes," by the Herald Tribune's national correspondent Robert S. Bird outlining the Negroes' views of white America.

By Robert S. Bird
Herald Tribune National Correspondent

Dr. Martin Luther King jr.'s office in Atlanta is not much larger actually than some of the jail cells in which he has served time with what many people think has been honor and distinction.

When he is not in jail or out on the road protesting, preaching or lecturing, the 34-year-old Dr. King can usually be found in this cubicle-like office in the Southern Christian Leadership Conference Headquarters on Auburn Ave. in Atlanta.

This is where I interviewed him one day recently—before he went down to Birmingham to end up in jail again. For the thirteenth time.

THE PROBLEM

Dr. King had made an interesting calculation on the progress of school integration in the South, and he offered it to me as an explanation of why there seemed to be so much "hurry" by the Negroes for advancement of their civil rights.

"We face the frustrating problem," he said, "of having a Supreme Court decision that was handed down some eight years ago. Yet only 7.8 per cent of the Negro students of the South are attending integrated schools this year, a hundred years after our emancipation from slavery.

"This means we are barely making 1 per cent progress a year, and that if it continues at this pace it will take 92 more years to integrate the public schools of the South."

I made a fast calculation of my own. Adding 92 to 1963, I got the year 2055 A. D. as the one when—at that rate—school integration in the South would be completed.

"The shape of the world today just doesn't afford us the luxury of such slow movement," Dr. King said dryly.

THE URGENCY

As a Baptist minister in Montgomery, Ala., in 1955 he launched during the Negro bus boycott there the first history-making experiment in non-violence techniques and philosophy of creative protest against segregation. Since then the non-violence movement for Negro rights has spread around the country, and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC), which he heads as president, has become the principal co-ordinating agency for a number of affiliated non-violence groups.

Dr. King's own stature as a Negro rights leader is perhaps unsurpassed in the nation now, and he moves through a broader band of the spectrum than probably any other figure in the country. His name and his presence are powerful symbols among the 20 million Negroes of America.

In an interview which lasted almost two hours he was especially interested in explaining the sense of urgency that pervades the Negro world today.

"There is abysmal ignorance on the part of many,

TEN NEGROES

many white people, even those of good will, about progress being made in civil rights," he said. "There is a feeling that much more progress is being made than actually is being made."

Then he went directly into the essence of this sense of urgency, reinforcing in his own calm way the same thoughts I had heard from other Negroes with flashes of anger in their words. What he said furnished the answer to the question often asked by white people—what is it the Negroes want?

"Three simple words can describe the nature of the social revolution that is taking place and what Negroes really want," he continued. "They are the words 'all,' 'now,' and 'here.'

"That is, we do not want some of our rights, we do not want token handouts here and there—because that is one of the great problems we must deal with now, tokenism.

"We are saying that we want ALL of our rights, not some, and we are also saying we want all of our rights HERE.

THE MOOD

We want ALL of them.

"Now when I say 'here I am speaking of here in the United States and here in the South. The mood of the Negro now is very interesting in connection with this idea. My experience is that Negroes who live in the South are now saying we are not going to run from this thing but we are going to stay right here and struggle for our rights HERE.

"The mood of Negroes now is that we are Americans, and America is our home—we don't need any back-to-Africa movement. I still contend that the black nationalist movement will never appeal to the great majority of Negroes. It will appeal to some as long as the problem is with us, and it is symptomatic of the discontent and frustration and bitterness of many Negroes.

"The third word is 'NOW.' Here again I find that many people feel we have a long time, and that it will take time to solve the problem, and all that. Of course we realize that the problem can't be solved overnight. But all too often those who live with the myth of time have the idea that time is going to solve the problem.

"They fail to realize that time is neutral—and it can be used constructively or destructively, and the people of ill will have used time more effectively than the people of good will.

"And this is why I say that we may have to repent in this generation not merely for the vitriolic actions and words of the bad people, but also for the appalling silence and apathy of the good people."

THE BRAVERY

Whether addressing a couple of thousand people in an auditorium or talking privately in this little office at his somewhat cluttered desk, Dr. King carries immense conviction.

This comes partly from his background, for his father was a clergyman before him; and partly from the nature of his dedication and special mission. I had watched him risking his life around the clock in Montgomery eight years ago when that city was torn with strife and when dynamite bombs were being set off, and he's still exposing himself to danger in trouble spots in the South. This kind of bravery helps to convey conviction when he speaks.

Actually his office is a kind of communications center with the world. For he is in touch constantly not only with protest groups around the South but also with national and world figures all around this country and as far away as India, where he is a friend and, in a sense, a student of Prime Minister Nehru.

"So, I can sense in the Negro community all over this country," he went on, "a feeling of 'now.' That is, a feeling of wanting freedom not a hundred years or fifty years from now, but tomorrow morning.

"There is also a feeling that some progress is being made. In the South you can see real signs of progress, because here there is an overt, glaring system that has legal sanction. So you can easily see progress when you know that last year Negroes could not go to theaters in Atlanta and they can go today.

"You know that two years ago the Negroes could not eat at a lunch counter in downtown Atlanta but today they can. This is a breaking down of the system of segregation in a gradual way, but at least it's moving."

THE DANGER

But in one area, Dr. King emphasized, there is retrogression and danger. That is in the area of Negro employment. And here he calls on President Kennedy for executive action.

"We are retrogressing in this area rather than progressing, and I am sure that a lot of this is the result of automation," he said. "So the Negro has been limited to unskilled and semi-skilled labor, and because of discrimination in the South he has been refused apprenticeship training.

"Now these jobs are going away, the unskilled and semi-skilled jobs, and this makes a great problem in unemployment. The danger is that if something isn't done about employment discrimination and housing discrimination—then social problems will continue to mount, and juvenile delinquency will grow."

Shortly after Bird interviewed Dr. King for this article, the minister was arrested for the 13th time—a record probably unmatched by any holder of a doctor's degree in systematic theology. He has been shot at, stabbed, and bombed since he sprang to national prominence by successfully leading the Montgomery bus boycott in 1956, is now appealing contempt term.

FIGHTING FAMILY—Dr. King's family has played an important part in his fight for civil rights. His wife, the former Coretta Scott, received a sympathetic phone call from President Kennedy when Dr. King was jailed during the 1960 campaign. Some said the call tipped the nation's Negro vote Kennedy's way. His son, Martin 3d, 5, is pictured at left after being refused admission to a private school in Atlanta. Last August, Martin 3d, Yolande Denise, 7, and Dexter Scott, 2, visited Dr. King in jail.

Dr. King predicted what a number of other Negroes in various fields have told me.

"If something isn't done in a hurry and in a vigorous way, explosive situations will develop, particularly in the large industrial areas of the North, where you have great numbers of Negroes with these frustrations emerging."

As far back as a year ago in May he himself had urged President Kennedy to sign a sweeping executive order to end discrimination in the whole broad Federal areas where Federal funds are being used. Dr. King's idea was that this would end segregation in many places where it exists now, and would create an atmosphere for integration on all levels.

His view of the President is rather sharply pointed. It may be recalled that in the heat of the 1960 Presidential campaign Presidential candidate Kennedy made a telephone call to Dr. King's wife in Atlanta sympathizing with her over her husband's particular jail confinement at that time. This gesture was credited with securing for Mr. Kennedy the Negro vote of the country.

But the Negro leader made it eloquently clear to me that he feels the President could do a great deal more than is being done by him to advance the cause of integration. Still, he did not want to be represented as suggesting that the President lacks good will.

"I know he has problems and I don't want to overlook them," he said, "and I certainly don't want to give the impression that the President isn't a man of good will. I think if one compares what he has already done in civil rights with that of his predecessors, he has done more.

"But still I feel this problem is so grave now that it takes more than applying a little vaseline to a cancer—it's going to take a vigorous approach that really goes to the roots."

THE DECISION

In essence Dr. King proposed that the President make a great moral decision, an historic decision.

"Now certainly he would get a great deal of opposition from members of his own party," Dr. King said. "I mean the Southern members of his party. It would mean they would take a stand against other phases of his legislative program. But as I have said to the President in discussing this very matter, these men are going to vote against many phases of his legislative program anyway. They were against medical care for the aged, against his farm bill, and they are going to fight the tax cut.

"So I don't see the consistency here of saying that I need these men for my total legislative program, for my foreign aid bill, and this and that, and so we can't arouse their ire too much on civil rights because they are going to vote against most of it anyway.

"I think it is better for a man to go down taking a strong moral position than to go down anyway, and you compromise in the process. I believe it would be—I am sure it would be—the right moral decision. And every great decision that has been made by a great President in this area has brought opposition. But when we look back over it we see that it put the nation in the right direction from the signing of the Emancipation Proclamation by Abe Lincoln right on through."

The Negro leader summed it up in these words:

"I feel that ever and again in history you find those moments when that which is morally right is also politically expedient. And I think it would be politically expedient, for it would not hurt the President in terms of getting re-elected because it has been demonstrated that it is going to be in the large industrial areas of the North—New York, California, Illinois, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and some others—that one must think of winning an election.

"And in these communities you have enough liberal forces in the white community and enough Negro folks to turn an election. So I don't think it would be political suicide for the President. I think it would be a wise political action as well as one of great moral value. And it is very seldom that one has the opportunity to do that which is morally right and also that which is politically expedient."

THE UNTOUCHABLES

Dr. King had a couple of other points to make on the general worry to him of Negro employment. One is that the Federal government ought affirmatively to move out to help the depressed Negro classes in the same way the government of India has financially assisted the caste of Untouchables after discrimination against them had been outlawed by the new constitution of the newly independent nation.

"I remember when in India hearing Prime Minister Nehru make speeches condemning Untouchability on at least three occasions in six weeks," he said. "I think, rather frankly, that not even yet since 1954 has a President of the United States made a major speech or major statement really saying that integration was right and segregation wrong.

"It's always a 'we must do this because the law says do it' sort of thing. It never comes out that the purpose of the law is to establish justice, and that which is right, and that Mr. Meredith must go to the University of Mississippi not merely because the Supreme Court rendered a decision but because he is your brother and this is right, and that Mississippi will never come into its right relationships until this can be done in a natural and normal and moral manner. "But I saw this in India, where the Prime Minister constantly brought this out.

"But again another thing is, from the beginning of the date when the nation gained its independence it started out giving millions of rupees a year for the improvement and development of the Untouchables who had been discriminated against for thousands of years.

"When I talked with Nehru about that he said, we couldn't think of talking about refusing to discriminate against Untouchables without thinking somehow of doing something ourselves and taking some responsibility to lift the standards of the people whom we have exploited all these years.

"He said that might be a little discrimination in reverse, giving them something we don't give others—but this, he said, was our way of atoning for what we have done to these people for thousands of years. Well, the Negro has not had that help in America, and it's only natural that some of these problems of lagging standards will produce problems in the transition period."

The other approach Dr. King is undertaking toward helping Negro employment is through the "selective buying" campaign that is being pushed around various cities in the country against firms that discriminate against Negroes in employment. This, he said, will be a major program for this year.

Dr. King stands at the opposite pole from the Black Muslim leader, Elijah Muhammad, who scathingly criticized Dr. King in an interview with me. Dr. King, on the other hand, was critical of the Black Muslims.

"I think this Black Muslim movement is very sensational," he said, "and consequently it will excite and get a good deal of coverage. But the thing that amazes me is not how many Negroes have been willing to join this movement but that more Negroes have not joined it. When you think of the number who have given overt allegiance by joining, and those who somehow share the views of this group, it's amazing.

"Their membership really is almost less than one-tenth of 1 per cent of the Negro population. The FBI estimates its membership at perhaps 75,000 for the whole nation, but I would think many more would share its philosophy. I would think a great number of Negroes are at least in agreement with them on their statement of the race situation.

"But it seems to me that this other movement that is all around the country now, engaging in non-violent direct action, has appealed to many more people because they see a way out through this. You can channelize legitimate, healthy discontent through creative channels in the non-violence movement.

"The Black Muslim movement channelizes it through negative and bitter channels. The non-violent movement says that the anger I have is an anger that is almost inevitable in a situation I am in, but this discontent which is necessary for a change in the social situation can be channelized in a creative channel.

THE DISCONTENT

"You don't need to hate in the process, and when we talk about love at this point we are not talking about emotional bosh or sentimental affection. It's nonsense to tell an oppressed people to love their oppressors in an affectionate sense. But we're talking about something much deeper. Now this is why the Muslims can't get off the ground in cities where you have powerful non-violent movements.

"They've been in Atlanta three years and it was interesting that the Atlanta Constitution had a series of five articles on the Muslim movement, and at the end of the series they said that the Muslims had sixty-five members in the temple in Atlanta.

"In the non-violent movement we've had as many as 4,000 students participating at one time. But we've never had a series of articles on that."

Dr. King warned that grave elements of danger reside in the Black Muslim movement. This is because it appeals to people on the periphery of life, he said, and he added:

"I think that this is a danger. There is no doubt about it. If this movement grows and continues to grow it can create an atmosphere for a great deal of bitterness and hatred, and can bring about a nightmarish situation in any big city in the country. It has dangerous overtones, and no doubt about it."

I met Carver Neblett in about the same way you reach in and pull a number out of the hat. I dropped into what is called "Snick" headquarters in Atlanta and buttonholed for an interview the first typical, Negro Snick kid I found who was fresh off the firing line, so to speak.

Snick is the way they pronounce the initials of the Students Non-Violence Co-ordinating Committee—SNCC.

These are the non-violent, Negro and white student commandos who are risking their lives in the Negro voter registration drives in rural Georgia and Mississippi with courage not easy to understand.

And these drives to get for Negroes in the Deep South the tool of voting power to improve their lot is becoming this year the most important breakthrough of any in the struggle for Negro rights. SNCC is one of several organizations, including the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE), that are active in this turbulent and dangerous field.

"But we go into more hell than any of the others," Carver said.

Their headquarters is in a very small building off Hunter Ave. in the Negro section out beyond Morehouse College. When you enter the door you find yourself in a cramped little warren of small, connecting offices, all busy with the comings and goings of students in all kinds of dress—boys and girls, white and Negro.

At a desk near the door I saw a white girl with scuffy sneakers on her feet and owlish spectacles over a nice-looking face, and an air of supreme calm amid all the hurly-burly. She absorbed the explanation of my mission faster than I could say it.

"Follow me," she said cheerfully, and led me into the labyrinth of offices to a corner where two Negro youths were chatting. She pointed to one of them and said:

"He's Charles Neblett. He's been working in Greenwood, Miss., but he's leaving today to go on tour with the Freedom Singers. The other one's his brother, Carver. He's working on voter registration in Terrell County and he's just in from the field. Maybe he's the one you want."

So I ended up the following morning with an interview with Carver, trying to pry out of him something he couldn't quite put into words.

It was typical of this action-minded boy that as this is being written he has taken time out to make the walk from Chattanooga to Mississippi with the band of ten Negro and white youths commemorating the killing of Baltimore postman William Moore. Moore was shot on a lonely road in Alabama while on a lone demonstration march on this same journey.

The Snick youth is a tall, rangy lad with a somewhat loungey, off-hand manner and a low but quick way of speaking. He has very alert eyes. He was wearing a bright red sports shirt and black slacks of collegiate-slim styling, and he was feeling mighty good in them.

"Can't wear these things on the job in Terrell County," he said, fingering his red shirt and grinning. "You gotta wear work clothes there."

Whence Comes Courage?

What I was searching for from him and others was, what is the nature of the dedication and strength these students have got that enables them to stand up to prolonged strain of white hatred, threat, beatings, arrest, jail, and even shooting?

Carver Neblett is nineteen, and a sophomore at Southern Illinois University, who has been on leave for more than a year. He was born into a share cropper's family in rural Tennessee. The family moved North six years ago, to Carbondale, Ill., but he was not able to rid himself of the resentments he had felt in growing up as a segregated Negro boy in the South.

When he was in his last year of high school in Pulaski, Ill., in 1960, his brother Charles, now 21, wrote him from Southern Illinois University that he was joining in a SNCC desegregation "action" in Cairo, Ill., and why not come along?

Carver went to Cairo, promptly got arrested, and went on a hunger strike in jail. That was the beginning of his conversion to the non-violence philosophy of "creative protest," and to what he calls the "Snick way of life."

He learned the non-violent techniques in endless SNCC workshop sessions, and found himself greatly moved by the power of the non-violence philosophy and by the examples of SNCC leaders who had been through the fire.

Although he had become well embarked on his studies at the university, he decided to quit school temporarily and go South to throw himself into the most perilous "action" of all.

Telling how the first student workers to enter a new rural area go in with nothing but the clothes on their back, placing themselves deliberately on the charity of the frightened Negro community, Carver said:

"Usually they don't know who we are, except they think that we're dangerous to them. Most of them never heard of SNCC, but they have all heard the term 'Freedom Riders,' and they tend to think that's what we are. They have been told by the whites that if any Freedom Riders

ONE OF THE AROUSED COMMUNITIES—This is a recent scene outside City Hall in Macon, Ga., as Negroes line up to register to vote. Members of Snick—Students Non-Violent Co-ordinating Committee—have worked actively in this town to promote the rights of Negroes to vote in elections.

In all these areas, Carver said, the Negro community in general has a pervasive feeling that they cannot go down any lower, that the only place they can go is up. He continued:

"Gradually you start dealing with the Negro people on several different levels. You go to the night clubs. You go to the churches. You go everywhere that people gather and talk. And very slowly they begin to respect you and to look on you as symbols of the respect which they themselves want and should have."

The slowest to respond in many cases are the Negro ministers of the local community, and it is they who have always been "set up on a pedestal," Carver explained.

"In the beginning they shy away from us. I guess they are afraid of their position in the community and afraid that their churches will be bombed. But SNCC knows how to use a little psychology on them. We get things going, and pretty soon the idea of freedom is in the air, and we're having mass meetings and people are getting involved, and the doctor and the lawyer and the field hand and the servant girl are all going to jail together.

"Then it is that we have become part of the community ourselves, and everybody is knit together and the whole Negro group is ready to do anything—anything—to get their goal."

Carver was not able to express very well the quality of the peril that envelops such a Snick-invaded rural Negro community like a chill miasma. But older and more mature Negro workers who help to guide these missionary students on the scene did provide me with moving accounts.

His Car Shot Up

One was Randolph T. Blackwell, the Negro field director of the Voter Education Project, a law graduate and specialist in government and economic studies, who was in a car with SNCC workers that was shot up outside of Greenwood on Feb. 28.

"I don't know how these kids are able to stand up to the strain and danger," he said. "As for myself, it seems like being in combat, where you move through the town expecting anything to happen and looking ahead of you and behind you both at the same time.

"But I have learned that it is helpful if you have in mind an absolutely clear understanding of the nature of your opposition. One of the experts taught me that it's not too difficult to stay in such a community if you start with the following assumptions:

"No. 1, that there are a lot of white people in the community who will want to kill you and who will try. No. 2, that the police are hostile to you and not your friends. No. 3, that the courts are not going to be fair with you. No. 4, that a sizable portion of the Negro community up for the night and be careful in leaving because he was being followed.

He got back into his car with two other workers, Robert Moses and James Travis.

They drove to a near-by gas station, where they refueled the car and ate sandwiches. The white car with the three white men followed them and circled while they ate. Then, with Mr. Travis at the wheel, he headed his car out on the main highway toward Greenville, Miss., with the white car following them.

Attack Coming, but When?

All three were in the front seat. They knew they would be attacked. The only question was when. For a while there was too much traffic on the highway for the other car to come up beside Blackwell's. But they knew that when the white car began to pull up they could expect bullets.

Very soon that time came. The white car moved forward. Mr. Travis, at the driver's window, was in the most exposed position. Mr. Moses was in the middle and Mr. Blackwell at the right window. The car pulled up beside them. The gun appeared in the white car. One of the white men opened fire.

Seven shots were fired. Mr. Blackwell shouted to Mr. Travis to pull over to the right and stop. But Mr. Travis cried that he had been shot—in the neck, as it turned out. Mr. Moses grabbed the controls and pulled their car to a safe stop while the white car sped away.

The bullets had smashed both side windows in front and the left side window in back. They found succor at a near-by Negro vocational school and Mr. Travis was removed to a hospital, where the bullet was taken from his neck and the wound closed. He recovered. The others were not hit.

Carver Neblett assured me he is prepared to take any risk whatever, fortified as he is by his non-violence philosophy and spiritual feeling, though up to now he has not been shot.

"No matter what happens to me I am going to participate in the movement for as long as possible, even when I go back to school," he said, simply. "I was not always non-violent"—he laughed at the thought—"but we won't go into that.

"I was brought up—all Negroes in the South are—with a fear of jail. But I don't care about jail now. Sometimes I get lonely there, or frustrated, but I think of our freedom song, 'Paul and Silas were bound in jail, had no money to go on bail, keep your eyes on the prize, hold on—' Or I think of what that poet said, about bars do not a prison make if a fellow's soul is free, and that gives me content. And I pray."

Some of the things that Carver was not able to explain helping greatly to produce a kind of mood for freedom in these Deep South areas. Freedom is not a word that is ever quite defined by them, but it is their mood.

"Another thing, since these are a very religious people they have a deeply religious idea of the fullness of time, a period when time does have meaning, when everything clicks. We almost have the feeling that this is the time in Mississippi."

It was this same Rev. Young, a co-worker in the movement with Dr. Martin Luther King jr., who made this interesting observation:

"The only place that the students are afraid to work is at Sen. Eastland's plantation. You can shoot at them in Greenwood or harass them anywhere else, but they're afraid to set foot on Eastland's plantation. They're almost sure they'd be murdered. I don't know—Sen. Eastland doesn't actually run it. And that's the problem with the plantation—they're run usually by lower classes of whites, low-mentality whites who are effective disciplinarians.

"But the thing about the students which makes them sure they'd get killed is that they wouldn't back down if they were confronted. They wouldn't run. If asked a question, they would answer it directly.

"You can be nearly beaten to death in Mississippi for not saying, 'Sir,' and this has become one of the students' silent forms of protest—to get away from this whole subservient attitude of the Negro. They sing all the time, 'Before I'd be a slave, I'd be buried in my grave.'"

Carver Neblett talks a little awkwardly about his feelings of spirituality, and I felt it was because he hesitated to commit to words things he feels as deeply as the spirituality of the non-violence philosophy.

'Amounts to Conversion'

Still he tried to explain it, and this is what he said:

"I don't believe in approaching a person and asking him to accept non-violence as a way of life. It's something you have to come to yourself. But if you are on the demonstration line, the opposition will start engaging in things that are so unpleasant that you really have to use non-violence in order to survive.

"You see, we believe we can overcome hate with love, overcome violence with non-violence. And this is a tremendous force. It amounts to a conversion to a new attitude toward life."

Many Carver Nebletts are working today in the brooding rural countryside of the Deep South, where the War Between the States and the days of Negro slavery seem very close.

Some of the rural Negroes they are trying to rouse to a reaching and grasping for citizenship rights are almost childlike in their view of themselves and their world. These student workers are bringing them among other things

"But in any of these rural areas you are going to find a few dynamic Negro persons who will take you in and understand the situation. That's how we get the first toehold. These few members of the community give us food and a place to stay, and they know that we are doing nothing wrong but are working for the betterment of the Negroes.

What's to Lose?

"So what do we have to lose? The ordinary people at first think we are crazy in a funny way, that we are absolutely fearless, sort of inhumanly brave. We have to get that idea out of their head fast and make them understand that we are completely human, though not fearful in the way they are.

"How do we do this? In different ways. One is to persuade a frightened Negro family to let one of us sit in the living room with them and watch the television some evening. You don't say much but by the end of the evening they've got the feel of you and they begin to look on you as human beings like themselves."

No. 3, that the courts are not going to be fair with you. No. 4, that a sizable portion of the Negro community will not understand what you're trying to do at first.

"And No. 5, that it will require great persistence and continuation of effort before the nation will wake up to the point where it will call on the Administration to live up to its national responsibilities."

Here is how the strain of peril falls on both Negro and white workers in such a danger area. It summarizes the account given to me by Mr. Blackwell:

On Feb. 28 Mr. Blackwell drove in a rented car to the SNCC office in Greenwood, arriving at 1 p. m. He noticed a white car with no license plates parked in front of a Negro cafe near the SNCC office which later was burned down. Three white men were in it. Just sitting. They were still in the car, still sitting, at 2 o'clock, at 3 o'clock, at 4 o'clock, at 5 o'clock, at 6 o'clock.

At 6 o'clock they switched on their lights and stayed there, just sitting. They were still sitting in the car at 7 o'clock, at 8 o'clock, at 9 o'clock. At 9:15 p. m. Mr. Blackwell, fully aware that trouble was in the offing, got into his car and prepared to leave.

The white car instantly pulled away and drove around the block, coming in behind Mr. Blackwell's car as he was leaving his parking place. It followed him, and so he drove around the block, returned to the office and warned the eight or nine student workers in the headquarters to close up for the night and be careful in leaving because he was being followed.

He got back into his car with two other workers, Robert Moses and James Travis.

They drove to a near-by gas station, where they refueled the car and ate sandwiches. The white car with the three white men followed them and circled while they ate. Then, with Mr. Travis at the wheel, he headed his car out on the main highway toward Greenville, Miss., with the white car following them.

And I pray."

Some of the things that Carver was not able to explain about the spirit of people in these aroused communities—unable to express them because he is so totally immersed in "action" itself—were explained to me by a young minister of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference. He is the Rev. Andrew Young, who is active in the program for teaching citizenship to the largely illiterate rural Negroes.

"The predominant mood of the masses of Negroes in Mississippi is religious," he said. "It's impossible not to see the religious parallels that have always been made since slavery days—'Let my people go.'

"The whole struggle of the Old Testament Hebrew people in the midst of adversity is continually quoted and is the foundation of their thought. Mixed now, however, with the new freedom songs.

In Spite of Fears

"You have the feeling that while these people do not get completely free of fear when we come in with outside help, they will go along in spite of their fear. And the lower classes are not nearly as controlled by their fears as the middle classes of Negroes. They are the ones who have been most successfully brain-washed by the segregationist whites.

"Then there are the ones who had got away for a while and had a taste of freedom in the Army. They are helping greatly to produce a kind of mood for freedom in these Deep South areas. Freedom is not a word that is ever quite defined by them, but it is their mood.

"Another thing, since these are a very religious people they have a deeply religious idea of the fullness of time, a period when time does have meaning, when everything clicks. We almost have the feeling that this is the time in Mississippi."

Some of the rural Negroes they are trying to rouse to a reaching and grasping for citizenship rights are almost childlike in their view of themselves and their world. These student workers are bringing them among other things the rudiments of citizenship education.

In the Southern Christian Leadership Conference's "Citizenship Workbook," below sections on "New Words to Study" and "Be Polite," is a section on "Our America." It tells what all this voter registration business is about. It says in part:

"The Supreme Court building, where the Justices decide legal disagreements, is the symbol of law. The Capitol, where our Senators and Representatives make the laws, is the symbol of free, representative government.

"The White House, where the President lives and his Cabinet meets, is the symbol of our country in world affairs. We accept the results of elections and abide by the rulings of the courts.

"We in America know that voting is important for good citizenship, but we know that educating our children so they will vote wisely is a part of good citizenship, too. They have to know how to stand up for their rights.

"In America we want law and justice.

"We love our land—America!"

Only Family At Pocantico Noon Nuptial

Gov. Rockefeller and Mrs. Margaretta Fitler (Happy) Murphy were married yesterday.

The marriage, which could have a significant impact on Mr. Rockefeller's chances if he seeks the Presidency next year, took place at the home of the Governor's brother, Laurance, on the Rockefeller family estate at Pocantico Hills, near North Tarrytown, N. Y.

It ended months of speculation and rumors—and "no comments" from the Governor—about the romance between the 54-year-old Mr. Rockefeller and the 36-year-old Mrs. Murphy, both of whom were divorced recently.

Mr. Rockefeller and Mrs. Murphy were married in a noon ceremony attended by a few immediate members of their family. Only Rodman Rockefeller, one of the Governor's four children, and only Laurance, one of his four brothers, attended.

One source near the family said the other children stayed away from the wedding—not out of vindictiveness toward Mrs. Murphy—but because of their affection for their divorced mother. "It is a very deep, sad day for the family," the source said.

A SMILING COUPLE—Gov. and Mrs. Rockefeller after their marriage in Pocantico Hills.

At Pocantico Noon Nuptial

By Richard L. Madden
Of The Herald Tribune Staff

Gov. Rockefeller and Mrs. Margaretta Fitler (Happy) Murphy were married yesterday.

The marriage, which could have a significant impact on Mr. Rockefeller's chances if he seeks the Presidency next year, took place at the home of the Governor's brother, Laurance, on the Rockefeller family estate at Pocantico Hills, near North Tarrytown, N. Y.

It ended months of speculation and rumors—and "no comments" from the Governor—about the romance between the 54-year-old Mr. Rockefeller and the 36-year-old Mrs. Murphy, both of whom were divorced recently.

Mr. Rockefeller and Mrs. Murphy were married in a noon ceremony attended by a few immediate members of their family. Only Rodman Rockefeller, one of the Governor's four children, and only Laurance, one of his four brothers, attended.

One source near the family said the other children stayed away from the wedding—not out of vindictiveness toward Mrs. Murphy—but because of their affection for their divorced mother. "It is a very deep, sad day for the family," the source said.

It was reported last night that Mr. Rockefeller's first wife was in Williamsburg, Va., with one of the Governor's brothers, John D. Rockefeller 3d and his wife.

The Details

Announcement of the marriage came at 3 p. m. in a news release distributed simultaneously to the newspapers and the wire services.

The Governor and his bride will leave this morning by plane for a honeymoon at the Rockefeller plantation, Monte Sacro, near the town of Chirgua, Venezuela. The announcement did not say how long they would be gone.

On their return, they will make their home at the Executive Mansion in Albany and at the Governor's home in Pocantico Hills, the announcement said.

Mrs. Murphy won a divorce last month in Idaho from Dr. James Slater Murphy, an associate at the Rockefeller Institute in New York. They had been married 14 years. They have four children: James, 12; Margaretta, 10; Carol, 7, and Malinda, 3.

Mr. Rockefeller was divorced in March, 1962, from his wife of 31 years, the former Mary Todhunter Clark. They had five grown children: Rodman, Steven, Mrs. Robert L. Pierson, Mrs. William L. Strawbridge jr. and the late Michael C. Rockefeller, who was lost on an expedition in New Guinea last year.

The marriage ceremony was performed by the Rev. Marshall L. Smith, of the Union Church of Pocantico Hills. The announcement said the bride wore a pale blue dress of silk shantung, of straight line with a small bow at the neck. She wore natural-color shoes and white gloves and carried a bouquet of spring flowers.

Mr. and Mrs. Laurance Rockefeller were hosts at a luncheon following the 15-minute double-ring ceremony in the living room of their white-painted brick mansion.

Tammany, Fulbright And Jews

By Jo-ann Price

The executive director of the American Council for Judaism, Rabbi Elmer Berger, disclosed yesterday that Tammany Hall leader Edward N. Costikyan tried to prevent Sen. J. William Fulbright, D., Ark., from speaking to the group yesterday.

He said the New York County Democratic Chairman asked John M. Bailey, Democratic National Chairman, in a letter a month ago, to do what he could to persuade the Senator not to speak to the controversial anti-Zionist group, implying his appearance might cost Jewish votes throughout the state next year.

Mr. Fulbright went ahead anyway with the speech to the council's 20th anniversary conference at the Savoy Hilton Hotel, arriving late in the Battle of Birmingham Rages On

By United Press International

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.

Rock-and-bottle-throwing Negro racial demonstrators fought hit-and-run battles yesterday with Birmingham police, who used high-pressure water hoses to disperse the crowds screaming through the streets.

Police, backed up by firemen wielding the hoses, broke up a demonstration of 3,000 Negroes early in the afternoon, but hundreds of the demonstrators regrouped at a church and there was another encounter.

Carefully avoiding hitting the church with the streams of water, the firemen pointed the nozzles directly at the group.

But the Negroes retreated a short distance and suddenly began raining rocks and bottles at authorities.

It was a hurled rock that touched off the first clash earlier in the day. The object landed a short distance from City Commissioner Eugene (Bull) Connor, who ordered the hoses brought into play.

President Kennedy was reported "dismayed" by the events, and the Administration sent in two Justice Department trouble shooters in hopes of working out a truce.

When the second clash broke out near the church, Police Chief Jamie Moore advanced alone toward the rock-throwing Negroes, but the demonstrators, numbering in the hundreds, fled to another section. The encounter, in which the bottles and rocks were hurled, lasted only a minute or two.

Other groups of Negroes began forming over a six-block area centering around a park where the 3,000 Negroes were dispersed earlier in the day.

Groups of 100 to 300 Negroes gathered during the afternoon, following a "lie down" demonstration by 30 Negro youths in the morning demonstrations. They fled as they were hit by the water blasts.

At least one firemen was injured when he was hit on the side of the face by a brick.

The clashes marked the third consecutive day of massive racial demonstrations here. More than 1,000 Negroes have been arrested, including 50 taken into custody yesterday. The midday temperature was 77 degrees.

TEN NEGROES

THIS is the fifth article of the ten-part series, "Ten Negroes," by the Herald Tribune's national correspondent Robert S. Bird on the Negroes' views of white America.

By Robert S. Bird
National Correspondent

Photographs showing police setting dogs on Negro citizens in Mississippi and Alabama produced in the Negro world a kind of feedback reaction which white people can scarcely realize.

White America looked at the pictures and undoubtedly deplored the action as savage and wrong. But Negroes felt within themselves that the hour has long passed for looking and deploring, and that the white world's good will has been smothered by the hypocrisy prevailing in the nation.

The feedback reaction was against sacred American institutions—the American system of justice, for example, for those men with dogs wore the uniforms of an arm of the law; and the Church, which many Negroes believe has failed in moral leadership.

A confrontation of race crisis now challenges the country, and danger looms.

This is the calm but worried appraisal of an eminent Negro social psychologist and educator who is one of the country's most perceptive observers of racial tensions.

He is Dr. Kenneth B. Clark, professor of psychology at City College, co-director with his psychologist wife of the Northside Center for Child Development, director of the newly started "Haryou" youth program in Harlem, and author of the classic study of race "Prejudice and Your Child."

His research for the book was cited by the United States Supreme Court itself in it epoch-making, 1954 school desegregation decision.

"America is confronted with a stark crisis in race relation and it is no longer verbal and no longer academic," Dr. Clark told me. "From Greenwood, Mass., we saw pictures of police dogs attacking not criminals but human beings who were asking only for elementary rights as American citizens. Asking not for complex things such as social relations but only for the right to register to vote.

"It recalls to my mind those indelible pictures I saw just before the war of men in Nazi uniforms in Germany forcing old Jewish men to scrub sidewalks.

"Seeing people in uniforms who, in this case, were not Nazis but American police with dogs, unleashing them not on persons who were violating the law but on those who were seeking to have the law upheld—that is one example of the present crisis.

"Then there are the jailings of scores and even hundreds of Negroes in Birmingham merely because these people are insisting upon their unqualified rights as American citizens, that is another example of the nature of the present crisis.

"The crisis has now reached a point of confrontation, and I borrow a phrase in saying that it is an eyeball-to-eyeball one, this present situation in race relations in America."

Dr. Clark, a friendly, professional man not given to undigested thoughts and statements of alarm, has been searching deeply into what he believes may be a very basic shift in Negro attitudes in this country, and one with foreboding possibilities.

He discussed this with me at considerable depth, starting in his office in the "Haryou" project at the Harlem YMCA, and later during a drive up to Kent School, the boys' preparatory school in Connecticut, where I was invited to sit in with a group of students on a race-relations seminar conducted by Dr. Clark. His son, Hilton, is a recent graduate of the school.

"The perspective that dominates my thinking now is the problem of increasing alienation of a substantial part of the American Negro population from the American—well, I was going to say the American 'mystique,' but let's say the American habit, or the American perspective, or way of looking at things.

"Two years ago I felt, and said, that the American race problem would have to be resolved within the context of the fact that the American Negro is American.

Despair

"I said that his insistence upon his rights as an American citizen is his attempt to establish beyond doubt that he is an American, and he will settle for nothing less than the rights that the American Constitution and the American creed and American ideology grant or guarantee for other American citizens. This was the basic rationale of his push.

"I have not shifted this position totally yet. I have not reversed it. But it is certainly being modified.

"I say this because, as I read the things which Negro intellectuals are writing—James Baldwin and others—and as I watch the relationship between that and the black nationalist movements, I sense a stronger undercurrent of alienation and despair among the Negro people.

"This is not too clearly articulated yet except in the black nationalist and Black Muslim movements, where we find a total rejection of the American pattern as being incorrigibly hypocritical and corrupt and therefore unworkable in terms of a meaningful change in the status of the Negro. They seem to be coming into a terrifying and frightening thing."

I was talking with Dr. Clark at this point in his office at the YMCA, and I asked him to develop his view a little more deeply.

"If one dares to look for the common denominator of into many areas of the American scene, including into politics.

Nor did he except Negroes from this affliction. He described New York's Negro Congressman, Rep. Adam Clayton Powell, as an exponent of "political slicksterism."

"He could become a symbol of a cynical disregard of any meaningful value system in the larger society by his exploitation of the prevailing hypocrisy, by his deliberate use of it," Dr. Clark said. "This seems to me to be the major contemporary danger in the country, and all the more dangerous because it is reflecting certain fundamental realities.

"Chief among them is the reality that the susceptible people in America have settled for racial hypocrisy and have been, in fact, for centuries parties to the perpetuation of these things."

Speaking about Congressman Powell, Dr. Clark said, "His greatest strength is that he can always make himself stronger simply by shouting, 'The whites are picking on me because I'm a Negro!' "

The psychologist pin-pointed a trend which other Negro men of affairs also had emphasized to me in these interviews—that Negro leadership today is in a crisis position along with race relations in general. He said:

"The confrontation now is clear, and what is required of the Negro leadership now is clear—namely, thrust and the push for full citizenship rights now. Responsible Negro leadership must dare to take the risks which they must take in order to achieve significant breakthroughs—not tokenism any longer, because tokenism is a part of what is precipitating the present alienation.

"If responsible Negro leadership is battle-weary and not able to mobilize itself and make the war significant—the movement in this direction of breakthroughs—then the result will be chaos as I see it.

"Chaos either in terms of overt social confusion, or what to me would be even worse—quiet dry rot. From the point of view of the national image, I think the latter would be worse."

The same points which Dr. Clark made on the need for a harder push and the greater insistence by Negroes that they be accepted as "human beings" also was emphasized to me by another Negro professional man. Dr. Clarence B. Jones, lawyer and general counsel for the Gandhi Society for Human Rights, Inc., a legal aid organization headed by the Rev. Martin Luther King jr., had said to me during an extended interview:

Frustration

"Negro demands are greater now, and the Negro wants . . to be accepted now as a man, completely, in our American . . society. He wants to be able, really to be able, to walk down . . the street as if a big burden had been relieved from him—to be able to walk into a restaurant here in New York and know that the only consideration is whether the menu is good, and he has the money to pay. Not to feel that he is walking in and suddenly there is a concern that this is a of racial controversies or crises. The bigots, the flagrant segregationists, alone could not be held responsible for a system of flagrant injustice and cruelty which seems to permeate our society. They, in order to have their way, would have to have the silent consent of our Christian churches. They need the alliance and the conspiracy of our labor unions and our labor leaders.

"They need and generally get the polysyllabic rationalizations of educators. They need the cynical connivance and conspiracy of our elected officials, North and South."

Cynicism

Analyzing the ways in which the Negroes have undertaken to meet the growing mood of despair and hopelessness, Dr. Clark said they have stepped up their traditional techniques of protest within the democratic processes, they are still lobbying, and their organizations are still trying to improve the plight of the Negro in America.

"But I think we ought to face the fact that our courts have been subverted and their edicts cynically evaded, ironically, even by those who have been sworn to uphold our laws. Negotiations have not worked in any effective way except in a few individual cases."

Saying that the traditional techniques have, however, been pushed aside lately for "more direct action techniques," dramatizing the injustices and bringing them to world attention, Dr. Clark discussed the Rev. Martin Luther King jr. in some detail.

Though praising Dr. King's efforts generally, the psychologist called Mr. King's "philosophy of love of the oppressor" as "psychologically unrealistic" and "guilt-producing" and "too close to the stereotype of the Negro for comfort, really."

His appraisal of the Black Muslims was that their philosophy is pure "racism."

"This is the mirrored image of the racism of the White Citizens Councils. It's a dangerous doctrine because the basic premises are true. I think this is the essence of the danger of the Black Muslim movement, the fact that they are not inventing nor for that matter are they even exaggerating or distorting the basic fact.

"White America has permitted a system of cruelty and barbarity to be perpetrated and perpetuated on citizens of dark skin color and the Muslims are very effective in saying this over and over again. They have the effectiveness of the simple target—statement of an undesirable fact. And they are dangerous also because hatred is an emotion that can be manipulated in the masses.

"Not just the Negro masses but one needs look at only recent history of the world to see how effectively hatred can be used to build powerful movements. There is no reason to believe that American Negroes are any more immune to the seductive lure of racial hatred than are other human beings."

Crime in Washington

Malcolm X On a Mission

By Sue Solet
Of The Herald Tribune Staff

The second in command of the Black Muslim movement will return to Washington this week in a campaign to reduce crime among Negroes in the Nation's capital.

Malcolm X, deputy of Muslim leader Elijah Muhammed, said he would arrive in Washington on Thursday or Friday. He will initiate a "revival-type grogram" aimed at eliminating "the deteriorating moral condition of our people in Washington."

Mr. X accused police of breaking into Muslim mosques in Rochester, N. Y., and Newark, N. J. In Newark, he said, police tried to enter the mosque "on the pretext that there was a bomb in there." Muslims refused to let them in. "You could have had one of the worst race riots in Newark," he said.

"You will have a nasty situation from here on in," he said, "in any case where police try to break into our sanctuaries. It won't be like in Birmingham, Ala.—turn the other cheek. You won't have that with us."

In the 1960 census, Negroes comprised 54 per cent of Washington's population of 765,956. Police figures show that Negroes made up about 80 per cent of all arrests of adults last year.

Members of the Black Muslims sect are pledged not to drink, smoke, or carry weapons.

In Washington yesterday, Deputy Police Chief George R. Wallrodt said he had not spoken to Mr. X and did not know what his plans are. "We have a Black Muslim mosque here," he said. "In previous years they've held many meetings there. We've never had any trouble with them in this city."

Prepared For Campaign

Mr. X made his plans known from Los Angeles, where he is attending the trial of 14 Black Muslims accused of attacking police in a disturbance last April. He said he had been in Washington from last Sunday to Wednesday to prepare for the campaign.

"The government seems unable to correct the situation," Mr. X said. "Negro and also by Negro leaders does nothing to solve the problem."

The Black Muslims, he said, speak "directly to the Negro in the community."

"Our goal is eliminating the frame of mind that makes us turn toward alcohol, dope, gambling and crime. We will spread a message among our people."

The campaign will be centered at "Mosque No. 4," the central Washington temple of the Black Muslims. The building, at 1519 4th St., N. W., holds 400 to 500 persons, Mr. X said.

Leader Ordered Him to Capital

Sunday revival meetings may also be held at a hall in the WUST radio station building at 815 V St., N. W. That auditorium holds an estimated 1,000 persons.

Mr. X said he would stay in Washington until Mr. Muhammed tells him to leave. He said the Muslim leader had ordered him to go to the capital.

The Los Angeles trial began on Tuesday. The 14 defendants are charged with assaulting police officers who stopped a car to question two members of the sect. In fighting that followed the incident, one Muslim was killed and two severely injured. Several policemen were badly hurt.

Mr. X said that he will give the facts of the trial to foreign correspondents and the five Negro Congressmen in Washington. "The deed that was committed out here the problem of increasing alienation of a substantial part of the American Negro population from the American—well, I was going to say the American 'mystique,' but let's say the American habit, or the American perspective, or way of looking at things.

"Two years ago I felt, and said, that the American race problem would have to be resolved within the context of the fact that the American Negro is American.

Despair

"I said that his insistence upon his rights as an American citizen is his attempt to establish beyond doubt that he is an American, and he will settle for nothing less than the rights that the American Constitution and the American creed and American ideology grant or guarantee for other American citizens. This was the basic rationale of his push.

"I have not shifted this position totally yet. I have not reversed it. But it is certainly being modified.

"I say this because, as I read the things which Negro intellectuals are writing—James Baldwin and others—and as I watch the relationship between that and the black nationalist movements, I sense a stronger undercurrent of alienation and despair among the Negro people.

"This is not too clearly articulated yet except in the black nationalist and Black Muslim movements, where we find a total rejection of the American pattern as being incorrigibly hypocritical and corrupt and therefore unworkable in terms of a meaningful change in the status of the Negro. They seem to be coming into a terrifying and frightening thing."

I was talking with Dr. Clark at this point in his office at the YMCA, and I asked him to develop his view a little more deeply.

"If one dares to look for the common denominator of such seemingly different forms of Negro protest one gets dangerously close to identifying this as the rejection by the Negroes of the American promise."

"The Black Muslims state it categorically that way. In fact, they re-state it with such vehemence that it is easy to disregard the significance of it.

"But when you re-read what Baldwin was saying as he reacted to the Lumumba affair—on what was the meaning of the prompt attack on Ralph Bunche when Bunche attempted to apologize for the Negroes who disrupted the United Nations session—you found a 'Oh, the hell with you polite Negroes now' sentiment.

"You found a 'You had your chance to negotiate, to use the democratic processes, to use the courts, to use lobbying, legislation, and where has it gotten you? It's gotten tokenism, it's gotten moderation, it's gotten a new form of the same hypocritical adjustments that were standard before the Supreme Court decision. But it's gotten you no substantive change.' The conclusion is suggested that no substantive change is possible within the present power structure."

As to where identification with this kind of thinking is leading Negroes, the psychologist said:

"It could lead to lots of things. I am looking very hard at the possibility that it might be leading to increased forms of quiet, personal deterioration, despair and apathy."

Having noted evidences of this alienation of the Negro from the American "habit" among the intellectuals, and again among the masses at the bottom, who are giving most attentive ear to the Black Muslin preaching, I asked Dr. Clark about the Negro middle class which is growing in size.

"It is paradoxical," he said, "that although the Negro middle class is an expanding group, reflecting expanding prosperity and some advances in housing, still this trend of thinking in that group is not only not excluded but it's more profound there.

Primitivism

"It is true that on the surface the expanding middle class seems to be much closer to the middle-class American norm. But the irony is that this sense of alienation and despair seems to me as profound in this group, if not more so, as they approach closer to the so-called white norm.

"But its manner of expression is different. For example, you don't find this group with the Muslims. You find them, to the extent they take a stand at all, against the extremism, emotionality, fanaticism, primitivism, of the stark black-white approach of the Muslims.

"What you do find in your better-educated, middle-class Negro group is a confused, complicated despair of a different form. In a sense, the bigot is right when he says that to give the Negro anything merely makes him more impatient and insatiable for everything.

"As your middle-class Negro group approaches more equality, what remains to be done is more difficult to get done, because these include the areas of strongest defenses on the part of the more privileged status quo people. This includes housing and such things as total acceptance of the Negro as a human being in terms of his humanity rather than in terms of his skin color.

"If a man says to you, 'All right, you can come to this school,' that's not the whole battle, you know. When am I a man, just as another man, to this person? Or when is he constantly seeing me as a Negro with all the past inferences that go with this view of me?"

Dr. Clark turned to the failure of the Church, explaining that he was brought up as an Episcopalian and had served on the altar as a boy, but that when he got to college he began to sense a "hypocrisy" in the Church in its attitude toward Negroes and the race question.

In recent years, he said, "the hierarchy of the Church has been trying to get me back into policy discussions on this matter of race, and I've been working with the Department of Christian and Social Relations, analyzing the Church's position on it.

"I have reviewed and summarized a report, which I submitted to the Presiding Bishop, on the hypocrisy of the Church and the fact that the Church had been accessory to the Black Muslims by cutting the ground from under more responsible Negro leadership. This was done by its helping to perpetuate the hypocrisies which the Black Muslims exploit so effectively."

Later, in talking to the students at Kent, Dr. Clark said:

"Certainly the Christian Church has defaulted in its role as custodian of moral and ethical values and is now no longer relevant or significant as a factor in the amelioration of American racial tensions."

He spoke to me vigorously about American hypocrisy, saying that a kind of "slicksterism" is spreading insidiously

Negro men of affairs also had emphasized to me in these interviews—that Negro leadership today is in a crisis position along with race relations in general. He said:

"The confrontation now is clear, and what is required of the Negro leadership now is clear—namely, thrust and the push for full citizenship rights now. Not to feel that he is walking in and suddenly there is a concern that this is a Negro, a black man, who is walking in. To be accepted as a man, that's it."

As to the urgency of the Negro demands, Mr. Jones had said:

"There is nothing inconsistent in my saying that the Negro wants his freedom now more than he wanted it yesterday, because there has been a passage of time between yesterday and today. And so he will want it even more urgently tomorrow than today because he didn't get it today."

In the seminar at Kent School, Dr. Clark summed up his picture of the present race crisis in there words:

"The crisis, I think, is a reflection of the profound frustration, despair, and the growing sense of hopelessness among Negroes that they can ever obtain justice, equality and democracy within the American system.

"There is a deep bitterness and disillusionment over recognition of the fact that white Americans can settle for the hypocrisy of tokenism as the price of social and racial peace. And awareness that the alleged gains in race relations within the past three or four decades are more illusory than real.

"Negroes are still segregated in schools, both in the North and the South. Job discrimination is still rampant and normative in the American economy. Indeed, the discrepancy in the economic status of the average white and the average Negro family is greater today than it was during the depths of the depression.

"Not that the Negro has not gained economically, but in terms of relative position with the whites the latest census material shows that there are much larger gaps.

"By all meaningful indices, the Negro is still and unquestionably of the downtrodden, disadvantaged group and he is systematically being robbed of his dignity as a human being, not only in the South but in many regions of America. And the major indictment here is that all of this is being done with the knowledge, and at times with the connivance, of respectable, moderate people who are not overtly bigots or segregationists.

"They are people who really want peace and don't want to be disturbed by direct involvement or knowledge

"But I think we ought to face the fact that our courts have been subverted and their edicts cynically evaded, ironically, even by those who have been sworn to uphold our laws. Negotiations have not worked in any effective way except in a few individual cases."

Saying that the traditional techniques have, however, been pushed aside lately for "more direct action techniques," dramatizing the injustices and bringing them to world attention, Dr. Clark discussed the Rev. Martin Luther King jr. in some detail.

"This is the mirrored image of the racism of the White Citizens Councils. It's a dangerous doctrine because the basic premises are true. I think this is the essence of the danger of the Black Muslim movement, the fact that they are not inventing nor for that matter are they even exaggerating or distorting the basic fact.

"White America has permitted a system of cruelty and barbarity to be perpetrated and perpetuated on citizens of dark skin color and the Muslims are very effective in saying this over and over again. They have the effectiveness of the simple target—statement of an undesirable fact. And they are dangerous also because hatred is an emotion that can be manipulated in the masses.

"Not just the Negro masses but one needs look at only recent history of the world to see how effectively hatred can be used to build powerful movements. There is no reason to believe that American Negroes are any more immune to the seductive lure of racial hatred than are other human beings."

Justice and equality for the American Negro must either come now "or we must gird ourselves for a kind of disaster which I think is too horrible to contemplate," Dr. Clark said.

And Fanaticism

"By horror I mean not that there would be civil war in America, but I think it could be worse. I think we could have in America an American version of what happened in Nazi Germany."

Later, Dr. Clark told me that it was his belief that the Black Muslims would not win mass converts to the movement, "but almost for irrelevant reasons."

"It would be extremely disturbing to me if the Black Muslims were flexible enough to modify an aspect of their program which, so long as they keep it the way it is, tends to block a mass following.

"These people are austere, humorless, rigid, fanatic in their basic style, in their approach. The Negro masses are not fanatic in this literal, rigorous sense.

"The Negro masses are flexible. They've had to be in order to survive, for one thing. They are people whose love of life has been deep enough for them to be able to survive in the face of overwhelming oppression and cruelty and barbarity, and almost a death-wish apparent among whites has been countered by a life-wish among the Negroes."

Negroes are not puritanical, but want to smoke, eat well, and drink, the psychologist said, and this is the opposite of the qualities which the Black Muslims try to mold in their converts. The Black Muslims say, "No, you must be more virtuous than Caesar's wife," he added.

"As long as they keep saying this, I don't think I would worry about their mass attraction," Dr. Clark said. "I'll start worrying when they modify their demands on the Negro members and make these demands more consistent with what the Negro is able to respond to. Then I'll really worry about the Black Muslims."

comprised 54 per cent of Washington's population of 765,956. Police figures show that Negroes made up about 80 per cent of all arrests of adults last year.

Members of the Black Muslims sect are pledged not to drink, smoke, or carry weapons.

In Washington yesterday, Deputy Police Chief George R. Wallrodt said he had not spoken to Mr. X and did not know what his plans are. "We have a Black Muslim mosque here," he said. "In previous years they've held many meetings there. We've never had any trouble with them in this city."

Prepared For Campaign

Mr. X made his plans known from Los Angeles, where he is attending the trial of 14 Black Muslims accused of attacking police in a disturbance last April. He said he had been in Washington from last Sunday to Wednesday to prepare for the campaign.

"The government seems unable to correct the situation," Mr. X said. "Negro leaders there also seem unable to correct it. The constant criticism by outsiders tered at Mosque No. 4, the central Washington temple of the Black Muslims. The building, at 1519 4th St., N. W., holds 400 to 500 persons, Mr. X said.

Leader Ordered Him to Capital

Sunday revival meetings may also be held at a hall in the WUST radio station building at 815 V St., N. W. That auditorium holds an estimated 1,000 persons.

Mr. X said he would stay in Washington until Mr. Muhammed tells him to leave. He said the Muslim leader had ordered him to go to the capital.

The Los Angeles trial began on Tuesday. The 14 defendants are charged with assaulting police officers who stopped a car to question two members of the sect. In fighting that followed the incident, one Muslim was killed and two severely injured. Several policemen were badly hurt.

Mr. X said that he will give the facts of the trial to foreign correspondents and the five Negro Congressmen in Washington. "The deed that was committed out here against us was so illegal and atrocious that they're afraid to tell the facts," he said.

Javits Predicts End To Racial Injustice

Sen. Jacob K. Javits, R., N. Y., predicted yesterday that injustices to American Negroes will end, and end in a measurable period of time, for America will not tolerate it."

Mr. Javits was guest speaker at ta meting of the New York City Central Labor Council in the Hotel New Yorker.

Even segregationists, he said, must be aware that a better day is coming for the Negro, although now "the conscience of America must be deeply troubled by what is going on in Birmingham."

The Senator also criticized the Kennedy administration for not doing more to promote civil rights. He said he would "rather have a filibuster on the floor of the Senate and have it out rather than to have dogs at peoples' throats in Birmingham, Ala."

The purpose of the meeting, attended by some 600 delegates, was to discuss problems of youth and the aging in industry, as well as unemployment, public welfare and other issues.

Mr. Javits said that labor, management and government must join in a concerted effort to increase the nation's productivity as a means of ending "persistent unemployment."

He also said that the President's tax reduction plan was inadequate to meet the problems of unemployment, underused production facilities and inadequate growth.

"If we cut taxes without taking other important actions, the effect on the economic growth rate could be negative," he said.

"There is an added dimension which makes this so imperative—staggering manpower challenges face us during the current decade. More than 26 million new young workers will be coming into the American labor force by 1970—40 per cent more than during the 1950s.

JFK Dismayed as Battle of Birmingham Rages On made a building-to-building check in military fashion, clearing out pockets of resistance.

The demonstrations started shortly after noon and reached a climax when police brought up fire hoses and cordoned off the park where most of the Negroes had gathered.

There was a standoff for 15 minutes while the crowd jeered police and taunted Mr. Connor with shouts of: "Hey, Bull, where's your water?"

"Let 'Em Have It"

The hecklers referred to the use Friday of powerful streams of water to break up groups of segregation protest marchers.

Police answered the jeers by shouting over a megaphone: "All you people disperse. If you don't want to get drenched, you'd better get back."

Finally a rock came sailing through the air and landed at Mr. Connor's feet.

"Let 'em have it. Get that water on them," he barked.

Woman Knocked Down

Two pumping units then began methodically spraying the crowd. Some ran for the other side of the park. Others stood their ground and waved and shouted at police.

One Negro woman in a white nurse's uniform stood squarely facing the hose. Firemen turned it on her legs and the force of the water knocked her down and sent her skidding along a sidewalk.

Negroes, whooping and shouting, stood behind trees and threw soft drink bottles, bricks and stones at the firemen.

Trapped by Hoses

Four more hoses on the fringes of the park were brought into play, and the Negroes, trapped between torrents of water, grabbed each other and tried to keep standing in the face of the pressure.

One brickbat from the crowd rolled by Mayor Art Hanes.

"Get that one," he shouted, and the firemen turned their hose on a Negro standing behind a tree.

"Those Negroes are about as non-violent as a whirlwind," Mayor Hanes said.

Attack From Building

While firemen were busy hosing the demonstrators in the park, there suddenly came a rain of stones and bricks from the upper stories of a building adjoining the park.

Firemen swung their hose at the three-story building, causing the plate-glass windows to crash under the pressure. They played their hoses on all three floors of the building and adjacent parking lot for three minutes.

A police officer then walked into the building and emerged later with a Negro man held in an armlock.

After working over the area with hoses for more than an hour, firemen turned off the water and stood aside while police cleared the park by marching slowly forward with six police dogs.

The demonstrators retreated to the steps and building of the 16th St. Baptist Church, but firemen followed them and hooked up hoses to a hydrant across the street.

They were standing aiming the nozzles at the church only 30 feet away when the Rev. James Bevel stepped into the street in front of the firemen and in a voice shaking with emotion said:

"Police Want Riot"

"Don't shoot the water. I'm going to move them."

Then Mr. Bevel and other Negro leaders set about to clear the idewalks in front of the church.

They drew considerable argument from a group that wanted to "met force with force." But Mr. Bevel pleaded with them to go home.

"They (police) would like to have a riot," Mr. Bevel argued. "By them coming this close to the church, it shows they want to start a riot. We won't give them this satisfaction."

"Let them (the police and firemen) come. Go home. They don't even want us standing at our church.

"How far do you want us to go?" someone shouted at Mr. Bevel.

"Go as far as Bull Connor says until the Federals get here," Mr. Bevel replied.

The Justice Department, in announcing it had sent in Burke Marshall, Assistant Attorney General in charge of civil rights, and Joseph F. Dolan, an assistant to the Deputy Attorney General, said their mission was to try to bring about a peaceful solution of the present racial troubles. The two are considered Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy's top aides in the civil rights field.

The Attorney General himself canceled a speaking engagement today at the University of Virginia Law School in order to remain in Washington so he could keep in close touch with the Birmingham situation.

Meanwhile, 10 "freedom marchers," under almost constant harassment during their anti-segregation march through northern Georgia, discovered that the heckling didn't end with their arrest at Fort Payne, at the Alabama border.

Tossed into cells on breach-of-peace charges, the bi-racial group underwent further verbal abuse by the jail population. "The other prisoners have been aggravating them something awful," said one jail guard.

Six of the group were put in one cell and the other six, including two officials of a group that sponsored the walk, were in separate cells.

The guard said the group caused "no trouble at all. Not even any singing."

At least one of the marchers, under $300 bond each, tried to call a lawyer. Authorities said they might be tried tomorrow. If they are released on bond, the jailer's office said, and try to resume their walk "they'll be arrested again."

Carver Neblett, one of the Negroes held in the Fort Payne, Ala., jail, was the subject of an article in Friday's Herald Tribune in Robbert S. Bird's series "Ten Negroes."

IN THE NEWS THIS MORNING

[FROM THE HERALD TRIBUNE'S WORLD-WIDE SOURCES.]

TOPIC A—

¶Middle East. New Arab threats against Israel foreshadowed violence, perhaps war. Israel looked to the U. S. for support, including cutting off aid to Egypt (of the UAR). The Kennedy administration found itself in the middle—a hot spot. Washington spokesmen ("speaking privately, of course") deplored pressure for anti-Nasser action. Reasoning: This only would antagonize the Arab states, would not help Israel. Behind-the-door: President Kennedy may wind up in a pro-Nasser role, could be hurt politically in big cities in next year's election. Said U. S. officials (openly): Israel is in no peril, has enough weapons, forces and friends "including the U. S."

IN THE WORLD—

¶Hitler. Out of the ashes of the past, the specter of Nazi Dictator Adolf Hitler flared briefly—the Russians Claimed they recovered the burned body of the German tyrant at his Chancellery bunker in Berlin 18 years ago. It was a turnabout in the official Soviet position that Hitler may have escaped to Spain or Argentina. Latest claim: Identification was by dental means.

¶Flying housewife. Mrs. Betty Miller, 36, was on the second leg on her solo flight across the Pacific from California to Australia. From Hawaii her flight plan: 13 hours, 30 minutes, 1,700 miles.

¶Air crash. The wreckage of a four-engine DC-6 Air Afrique passenger plane, was found on Mt. Cameroon (near the Nigerian border). Death toll: 54. Lone survivor: A U. S. diplomatic courier, badly injured.

IN THE HEMISPHERE—

¶Caribbean crisis. The Dominican Republic's pocket military force prepared openly to invade neighboring Haiti on the island of Hispaniola they share in the Caribbean only 60 miles from Communist Cuba. A British Navy frigate moved into position off Haita (where U. S. task force units have been steaming to protect U. S. citizens).

¶Venezuela. Gov. Rockefeller and his bride arrived in Caracas, journeyed to the Rockefeller ranch for their honeymoon. Within hours after their arrival, pro-Castro

AND SO GOV. NELSON ROCKEFELLER introduced his bride of a day to reporters and photographers as "someone you've been looking for for quite a while." The place was Idlewild Airport at 8:45 a. m. yesterday. The beaming new First Lady, dressed in brown and blue, parried reporters' questions—"I'm very happy. I know you'll understand that I'm slightly overwhelmed." And then they dashed aboard a jet for a four-hour flight to Venezuela and a second plane ride that took them to their honeymoon haven at the Rockefeller farm at Monte Sacro. ¶Venezuela. Gov. Rockefeller and his bride arrived in Caracas, journeyed to the Rockefeller ranch for their honeymoon. Within hours after their arrival, pro-Castro terrorists started a half-million-dollar fire in an American-Venezuelan cardboard box factory in Caracas. Authorities said the fire was not believed connected with arrival of the Rockefellers.

IN THE CITY AND STATE—

¶Death penalty. New York has repealed the mandatory death sentence for first-degree (premeditated) murder and kidnaping. The Empire State was last in the nation to abandon the mandatory "supreme penalty" (effective July 1). However, a jury (in a second proceeding after a trial) still may recommend death.

¶No parking. Traffic Commissioner Barnes is battling another branch of the city's government—Mayor Wagner's site selection commission, which must approve the selection of land for off-street parking areas. Barnes said he submitted 18 proposed locations two weeks ago and no action has been taken. His complaint: "No one wants us to relocate a single family or business or touch a blade of grass."

¶Taxes. Budget Director Shea said a city income tax would be "fairer" than a sales tax—but officials had been informed that Gov. Rockefeller would not approve the plan. Result: They must proceed with the Mayor's present tax program, which includes the sales tax.

¶Birth control. Msgr. George A. Kelly, director of the Family Life Bureau of the Archdiocese of N. Y., said that although Roman Catholic opinion against birth control is in the minority, "evangelists of contraception have not won their day as completely as they would like." His point: The U. S. has one of the highest birth rates in the Western World, even with artificial birth control.

IN THE NATION—

¶Racial. About 2,000 singing and chanting Negroes marched past police lines to a small (Negro) park across from Birmingham (Ala.) jail, held services for hundreds of racial demonstrators behind bars. Police and firemen (under Commissioner Eugene (Bull) Connor) had high pressure fire hoses ready, did not use them. Connor's explanation: "I said OK. It's their park anyway."

¶White House view. President Kennedy said he is "astonished as President to see how difficult it is" to pass "progressive legislation" (aid to education, assistance for jobless young people, aid to mass transit). Kennedy spoke to the Machinists Union, made no mention of their coming May 10 vote on a contract with Boeing, a major aircraft-missile firm.

IN THE LIVELY ARTS—

¶American triumph. Metropolitan Opera tenor Jan Peerce brought tears as well as cheers to a capacity audience of 2,000 at the Tchaikovsky Conservatory in Moscow. The New Yorker moved some to tears when he sang four Jewish songs. Note: Reports have indicated anti-Semitic action in the Soviet Union.

IN SPORTS—

¶Our teams. The largest baseball crowd of the season (53,880) watched the Mets and San Francisco split a doubleheader at the Polo Grounds. The Giants won the first, 6-3, the Mets rebounded, 4-2. The Yankees lost to Minnesota 4-1.

Hitler's Death: Soviet Finally Opens the File

BACK ON V-E DAY, the Herald Tribune carried the first eyewitness report in the West on the fall of Berlin. Delayed through military red tape and censorship, it finally slipped through as reported by then-Trib war correspondent, Seymour Freidin. Now a mystery in the Berlin ashes is sifted and cleared up.

THE STORY NOW

By United Press International

MOSCOW.

The Russians have broken 18 years of silence and admitted they recovered Adolf Hitler's burned body when they smashed into Berlin at the end of World War II, it was disclosed yesterday.

Up to now, the official Soviet position has been that Hitler may have escaped to Spain or Argentina.

The Soviet admission was made by Marshal Vasily Sokolovsky to Cornelius Ryan, American author of "The Longest Day," who has completed a two-week study of top secret archives of the Red Army's final assault on Berlin, in connection with a book he is writing on the fall of Berlin.

[In Paris, Mr. Ryan said upon his arival from Moscow, that the Russians had told him they secretely disposed of Hitler's body. The Associated Press reported. Asked where and how, he answered: "I'm saving that for my book."]

THE STORY THEN

By Seymour Freidin

Executive Editor, Foreign News

Even for the end of April so far north, the day was raw and the mid-afternoon light was fitful. Great gusts of wind tore words out of your mouth and hurled them into the cacophony of exploding shells, staccato automatic fire—and death by violence.

It was dying Berlin, a little over 18 years ago. The Red Army had stormed past the approaches. Russian soldiers, medals bouncing on their tunics, rooted out last-ditch Nazi defenders. They tore into bunkers and entrenched positions with guns erupting wickedly from concrete-reinforced slits just above ground.

Above the awful roar of battle, you could hear the wheeze that rends a building before it collapses with a crunch. It's a soughing sound, but you never forget it. This was a latter-day German Gotterdaemmerung.

MOSCOW.

A tearful and wildly cheering audience welcomed Metropolitan Opera tenor Jan Peerce back to the Soviet Union last night at a recital that included Yiddish and Hebrew songs.

A number of Russians in the audience, however, refused to applaud any of Mr. Peerce's songs. Why they even attended the concert was not made clear.

Mr. Peerce, last here seven years ago, captivated the capacity audience of 2,000 at the Tchaikovsky Conservatory with arias and songs in Russian, English, French, German and Italian.

But some of the warmest applause came during his rendition of two Hebrew songs and two encores, both in Yiddish. The audience seemed delighted at the rare chance of hearing Jewish music sung professionally in Moscow's best concert hall.

Dozens of men and women in the audience daubed their eyes with handkerchiefs and hummed softly as Mr. Peerce sang music filled with emotion and memories of childhood. In the audience were two

TEN NEGROES

This is the sixth article of the 10-part series, "Ten Negroes", by the Herald Tribune's national correspondent Robert S. Bird, on the attitudes of Negroes toward white America.

By Robert S. Bird

National Correspondent

An Angry Young Man of the 1920s, a Williams College man who took his master's at Harvard, was arguing with another Angry Young Man of the 1920s, also a Williams man who had taken his doctorate at Harvard—both Phi Beta Kappa—that things really haven't changed much in 40 years despite all the dramatics on the current scene.

It was a wonderful conversation to listen in on because it was so rich in wit, irony, insight, contradictions, affection and nostalgia.

And because it dealt with a most serious subject, one usually filled with rancor—race relations in America. The two men were Negroes.

Sterling B. Brown, author, essayist and poet, and one of the giants in literary scholarship on the Negro, was the Angry Young Man of the 1920s who was trying to convince his friend—who needed no convincing whatever—that the supposed young "New Negro" of today is no different from the one of four decades ago. Nor are many other aspects of the race situation.

The two men were talking on two or three levels at the same time, having fun with each other and fun with me, the interviewer, but all the while getting across to me some serious and deeply-felt points.

Mr. Brown is professor of English at Howard University in Washington, D. C., the biggest predominantly Negro university in the country. Among his serious points were:

¶That the Negro youngsters of 40 years ago were

Political Fight On Red, Arab Aid Brewing

THE LIKELIHOOD NOW of a violent storm sweeping the Middle East disturbs men-of-state and policy-makers. It would engulf Arabs and Israel and, sooner than later, the great powers. A great debate on the neuralgic state of the Middle East is building in Washington. Answers aren't easy, and passions won't vanish.

By Fred Farris

WASHINGTON.

The question of war and peace in the Middle East—created by new Arab threats against Israel—is stirring up a major controversy in Washington, and the Kennedy administration finds itself unwillingly in the middle. This became clear yesterday as the White House proclaimed its good intentions toward Israel, while increasing pressure came for more positive action to prevent Arab aggression.

The Kennedy administration's attitude toward Israel was indicated by a White House aid who said the U. S. is committed to Israel's integrity and did not intend to sit on the sidelines if it were under threat.

Myer Feldman, deputy special counsel to President Kennedy, said the U. S. would continue large-scale economic aid to Israel, as well as furnishing Hawk anti-aircraft missiles.

At the same time, Sen. Jacob K. Javits, R., N. Y., announced he would introduce a Senate resolution this week recommending that the Administration go on record again in declaring that Middle East borders must be inviolable, and that Washington push negotiations toward a Middle East mutual defense treaty.

In other developments:

The American Israel Public Affairs Committee wound up a conference by declaring the U. S. must give a "firm security guaranty" to prevent any aggression in the area, and must grant arms aid to Israel "to ensure an arms balance." The United Arab Republic has publicized its rocket-weapons program.

Israeli Prime Minister Ben-Gurion called for a joint U. S.-Soviet guaranty that Israel's borders will not be breached. As an alternative, he suggested a joint U. S.-Israel defense treaty.

A UAR Embassy spokesman, Mohammed Habib, said that "historically" Israel "has al-

Birth Control Dispute

Birth control — for and against—has crystallized as a passionate, partisan sociological issue.

It was held high this way yesterday to public view and debate by two important channels of opinion whose impact is made locally and nationally.

One was religious—against—from a Roman Catholic.

The other—for—represented more than 60 prominent personalities in government, arts, education and business.

Presumably, their assessments were co-incidental. The timing was the same. For example:

Msgr. George A. Kelly charged that advocates of rigid separation of State and Church were the same people who favored "departments of welfare subsidizing fornication and adultery."

Unaware that Msgr. Kelly, director of the Family Life Bureau of the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of New York, so scathingly denounced birth control, the American Assembly:

Adopted a report calling for a Presidential commission that would report on the broad problems of demography in this country and overseas.

"Parents everywhere," said the report, "should be free to animated by the same high spirit of revolt and demands for Negro rights as those of today.

¶That it is "the times" rather than the young people which have changed.

¶That even though race conditions are being improved steadily in the country, certain basic problems remain exactly the same.

¶Above all, that the Negro youngsters of today tend to be too impatient for speed in race advancement, and they need perspective as to what the Negro has done during the last four decades and more.

"Nobody does his homework any more on the literature and history of the Negro in the past, and on what we were doing in those days," Prof. Brown said.

Angry Old Men

His friend, who couldn't agree more, is also a titan in the world of scholarship—Dr. Rayford W. Logan, professor of history, author of many books, articles and scholarly papers dealing with historical aspects of the Negro in America.

Prof. Brown explained that he and his friend are really Angry Young Men who have become Angry Old Men. People call them "conservatives," he said, because they believe in a slower but more realistic approach than the "all," "here" and "now" demands for speed which Dr. Martin Luther King jr. is advocating in the civil rights field.

I got the impression that the professors don't mind being called conservatives because they stand for a more gradual approach, but they don't want to be called "moderates."

"My position in the 1920s was that I knew that segregation couldn't be changed swiftly," Prof. Brown said. "I knew the South. I didn't need any talk about 'all deliberate speed'—although I think it has been too deliberate. But I couldn't conceive of anybody believing that it could be ended just like that—." He snapped his fingers.

"I knew enough sociology for that. So I didn't see why there should be a radical-to-moderate viewpoint in this matter. My point about the 'moderate' view was—and is—that, if the door is open, either you go in or you stay out. I don't see anybody standing in the middle of the door, just standing.

"The Meredith case at the University of Mississippi is an example of what I mean. There you had extremists on both sides at work. One group wanted Meredith out of the university, another group of extremists wanted him in.

"I didn't see any moderate position there. What do you do as a moderate, leave Meredith standing in the hallway? I can't conceive of the moderate position. The mob says, stay out, Mr. Meredith, and President Kennedy and the NAACP says, get him in. If the 'moderate' says he knows it won't happen over night, I don't know of any Negro with any sense at all who believes it will hapen over night."

"That's my criticism of some of these Angry Young Men of today," interjected Prof. Brown's friend, Dr. Logan. "When they say, we want it now, that's nonsense for they're not going to get it now."

Going on to Dr. King's strategy in the demonstrations in the South, Prof. Brown continued:

"Dr. King can't say to the public that these things will come later. You see, he's engaged in demagoguery in a good cause—he's not a social scientist. And to get all those people stirred up, he can't go telling them that 'time will take care of these things.' He's got to keep them feeling this sense of urgency, and that is the way these youngsters here at the university feel, too."

"Will you pin that point down, Sterling?" asked Dr. Logan. He is a short, round-faced man in contrast to Prof. Brown, who is tall, erect and large-framed. "This is the role, I think, that we Angry Old Men should play."

Firm Stand

"Yes, this is the role we've got to play in the presence of men who are saying things which privately I don't think they believe themselves," the English professor answered. "One of us has got to take the position, and state it publicly, that you cannot do it now."

accounts for the widely held belief that what individual organizations are asking for 1963 is being asked for for the first time.

"To be specific, I don't believe that anyone has stated any better than Dr. W. T. B. DuBois at Harper's Ferry in 1906 what the Negro wants. He said at a commemorative gathering there:

" 'We will not be satisfied to take one jot or tittle less than our full manhood rights. We claim for ourselves every single right that belongs to a freeborn American, political, civil, and social, and until we get these rights, we will never cease to protest and assail the ears of America.' "

Something New

Prof. Brown listened with absorption as Dr. Logan enunciated, almost with declamatory effect, those words.

"I am impressed, Rayford, you have actually memorized that," he said. "I will have to second the things you have said. The times are new and people can get more now than did the youngsters I taught back 30 years ago. But those other youngsters had the same drive, even if not the organization. Nor was the world ready to take them, nor was the Herald Tribune as ready to publish our interviews. This is all something new."

Turning to a consideration of the agonized writings of James Baldwin today, Prof. Brown said:

"Baldwin is writing with passion, and Baldwin has a big following, but even he is saying nothing that Prof. E. Franklin Fraser has not said, that Dr. Rayford Logan has not said, that I have not said—except that Baldwin says it in his style, and it is an excellent style.

"The point is, Baldwin is THE Negro writer of the moment. The New Yorker magazine wouldn't take an article by us. The magazines wouldn't trust a college professor, he's too stuffy. Baldwin will admit this. Nevertheless, Baldwin knows from whom he has learned. I think he's a very skillful propagandist.

"My resentment is that some of the critics talk as if they came upon this Negro problem last night. They know nothing of the whole literature of the '30s and '40s."

Dr. Logan took over at this point to pay a compliment to Prof. Brown.

"A lot of the so-called original literary criticism in 1963 has been all too frequently taken without credit to Prof. Sterling Brown, who wrote it in his books years ago."

One book to which both these professors had contributed they particularly wanted me to have. That was because of the theme and title, "What the Negro Wants," thanked the participants "for expressing their real opinions and making this book possible."

I asked about students' attitudes today, apart from their "hurry" to advance. Dr. Logan made an interesting point in contrasting the students of his day and those of today.

"We came from a community which was not rich but which had standards of respectability that did not result in the kind of problems which are all too common in Washington today," he said, referring to high crime rates and racial tensions. "We came from the best Negro high school in the United States, the old M. Street High School in Washington. Most of us went to New England colleges; Sterling and I to Williams, others to Amherst, Harvard, Bates, Wesleyan, Colby, and so on.

"But many of the students of Howard today are graduates of inferior schools in Washington, and you know the reasons why they are inferior. The Congressional people are just not giving the schools the money to construct the necessary facilities, to provide the teachers, and all the rest.

"But many of the students in the inferior schools are inferior students, comparatively speaking, because there have been three separate migrations of Negroes from the South into Washington. Many of the students today come from families which have suffered greatly in previous generations from the inequalities and inequities in the South.

"What amazes me is the fact that, despite these handicaps, many of our students perform very well. Some go off and get their doctorates at the best universities in the country."

I looked out the big bay windows of the study where we were sitting, and into the gathering dusk, and saw Dr. Logan and Prof. Brown, old warriors both, on a distant scene—one described in a paragraph in Prof. Brown's reminiscence in the volume, "The New Negro 30 Years Afterwards":

"Gay with youth, heady from attention, caught up along with much of America in ballyhoo, flattered by influential creators, critics, and publishers who had suddenly discovered the dark world at their doorstep, many Negroes helped to make a cult of Harlem. They set up their own Bohemia, sharing in the nation-wide rebellion from family, church, small town, and business civilization, but revolt from racial restrictions was sporadic. Rash in the spurt for sophistication, they typified one phase of American literary life in the '20s. A few magazines such as Fire and Harlem flared like rockets; good experiments jostled against much that was falsely atavistic and willfully

Powell Invites Muslim to Lead Capital Negroes

Special to the Herald Tribune

WASHINGTON.

New York Rep. Adam Clayton Powell welcomed Malcolm X's forthcoming trip to the capital yesterday with an invitation to the Black Muslim to take over leadership of the Negro community.

"Malcolm X is moving from New York to Washington because there is no leadership here," Rep. Powell told an audience gathered to honor C. Sumner Stone, editor of the Washington Afro-American.

"Even those (Negroes) who occupy high positions do not represent the Negro Community," the Congressman told the rally at the Shiloh Baptist Church. "I shudder to think what Washington, D. C., would be like if the voice of Chuck Stone had been silenced."

Congressman Powell warned "objectively and calmly . . . that this town is going to be the scene of one of the worst race riots in the history of America unless two things happen.

"First, that the social factors which produce racial tensions are removed; and second, unless the Negro community, particularly the upper and middle class group, arouses itself to a new involvement with its less fortunate, economically exploited and emotionally deprived black brethren."

Rep. Powell used statistics usually employed by white racists when he pointed out that in Washington "80 per cent of the people on welfare are Negroes; 70 per cent of the illiterates are Negroes; and 90 per cent of the crimes are committed by Negroes. Unemployment among Negroes is three times that of whites."

The Congressman put much of the blame on the Washington Board of Trade. "The rate of school dropouts continues to escalate, and there is no place for the dropouts to find jobs if they are black. Industries and businesses controlled by the Board of Trade refuse to employ Negroes.

"I ask this question and demand an answer, or the white community stands self-convicted of the greatest crime: What is the Board of Trade doing to help solve the problems of unemployment, racial discrimination in housing and employment, crime and the rehabilitation of welfare recipients?

The Congressman said "Negroes are not excited about one Negro graduate who gets a Phi Beta Kappa key at the University of Georgia. What they want are hundreds of thousands of black boys and girls to go to the same schools and get the same quality of education as their peckerwood, rednecked neighbors' children do."

Finally, he warned:

"If nonviolent action does not bring the results, then there will be no way to channel this massive force of the black man."

Apartheid Enters the White Home

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP).

South African whites are to be limited to one African domestic servant living on their premises, Michiel Botha, Deputy Minister of Bantu (African) Administration and Development, told a national party meeting yesterday.

Many white families now have two or three servants, some more. The new legislation is part of the government's plans to move as many Africans as possible away from white living areas.

that, if the door is open, either you go in or you stay out. I don't see anybody standing in the middle of the door, just standing.

"The Meredith case at the University of Mississippi is an example of what I mean. There you had extremists on both sides at work. One group wanted Meredith out of the university, another group of extremists wanted him in.

"I didn't see any moderate position there. What do you do as a moderate, leave Meredith standing in the hallway? I can't conceive of the moderate position. The mob says, stay out, Mr. Meredith, and President Kennedy and the NAACP says, get him in. If the 'moderate' says he knows it won't happen over night, I don't know of any Negro with any sense at all who believes it will hapen over night."

"That's my criticism of some of these Angry Young Men of today," interjected Prof. Brown's friend, Dr. Logan. "When they say, we want it now, that's nonsense for they're not going to get it now."

Going on to Dr. King's strategy in the demonstrations in the South, Prof. Brown continued:

"Dr. King can't say to the public that these things will come later. You see, he's engaged in demagoguery in a good cause—he's not a social scientist. And to get all those people stirred up, he can't go telling them that 'time will take care of these things.' He's got to keep them feeling this sense of urgency, and that is the way these youngsters here at the university feel, too."

"Will you pin that point down, Sterling?" asked Dr. Logan. He is a short, round-faced man in contrast to Prof. Brown, who is tall, erect and large-framed. "This is the role, I think, that we Angry Old Men should play."

Firm Stand

"Yes, this is the role we've got to play in the presence of men who are saying things which privately I don't think they believe themselves," the English professor answered. "One of us has got to take the position, and state it publicly, that you cannot do it now."

"If these people who are being told they should have it now don't get it tomorrow, then they become desperate and run to the Black Muslims."

Dr. Logan nodded affirmation, saying, "This is very important, because we have it in Washington right now—the kind of disillusionment which makes for converts to the Muslims and to Communism."

We were gathered in the old 19th Century former residence of Howard University presidents, and a heavy rain was beating down on the campus outside our pleasant study. It helped to pull a curtain down around us and made it easier to go back 40 years in reminisence.

"I started out as a young fellow teaching at Virginia Seminary in Lynchburg in the 20s," Prof. Brown recalled. "Many of my students were young ministers who played on the football team, and they made trips on which they came to resent segregation more than ever.

"They would steal the signs, 'Whites' and 'Colored' for waiting rooms and bring them back to the dormitory rooms. They would try being surly to conductors on the trains. But they didn't have any discipline or organization such as CORE and SNCC give the students of today.

"There is a new behavior now, I must say, but the spirit is not new. You fought in those days and you fought alone. I'm not a belligerent person but I have had a gun pulled on me."

Rambling back through the years, Prof. Brown, who is 62, and Dr. Logan, 65, lingered with a mixture of bitterness and relish over their recollections of sleeping and eating in Pullman dining cars in the old days. There they were, distinguished scholars with degrees from leading colleges, gingerly kept out of sight in the railroad cars as if even the glimpse of them would be offensive to members of the "superior" white race.

"There was a compartment at one end of the train and the railroad company would give a Negro the whole compartment for the price of one ticket and one berth," Dr. Logan recalled. "But to keep up the fiction of inferiority, we were not permitted to close the door. The berth would be made up with the curtain hanging down just as if it had been in the open car. This was always called 'Lower 13.

"Then we could go back and eat in the dining room after the third call, not at the first call or the second call. But, you see, those white folks who lingered over their coffee at the end of the second call, who would have been, presumably, outraged at a Negro passenger coming in to eat, had to suffer our presence at a table when we came in after the third call.

Injustices

"But World War II did away with the third call for Negroes—only because there was too long a line, sometimes stretching out to another car. That's when the railroads decided to put up with us.

"They reserved two tables for us and we could go in any time. But the two tables were at the pantry end of the diner, and a green curtain was suspended from the ceiling to the floor around these tables so that the white passengers in the dining car couldn't see us eating."

"Do you remember, Rayford, the waiting room in the railroad station in Louisville?" asked Prof. Brown. "There were two doors side by side leading into the waiting room, one marked "White" and one marked 'Colored.' We had to go in the 'colored' door. But both doors led into the one waiting room and when you got inside you bought your tickets at the same window and mingled and rubbed shoulders with the white people.

"I was entering the waiting room with a white friend and he had to go in his door and I had to go in mine and just inside we joined up and continued our conversation. Oh, it was fantastic."

Both professors agreed that the full story of past injustices needed to be retold to the present generation which is so angry at even lingering traces of the commonplace mistreatments of yesteryear.

The idea of the "New Negro" was coming into first flowering in the 20s, they emphasized, and they gave me a 1955 booklet to which each of them had contributed an article commemorating the late Alain Locke's "The New Negro: An Interpretation," published in 1922. Howard's division of social sciences got out the paperback volume entitled "The New Negro 30 Years Afterward," in which distinguished Negro contributors re-created the yeasty ferment of the Negro Angry Young Men of those days, including the bursting new bohemia in New York's Harlem.

"There is practically nothing being asked for, or urged, or demanded by Negroes today that was not asked for, urged and demanded many years ago," Dr. Logan said. "The failure to realize this is a result of ignorance of the history of the Negro in a very large measure, and this cease to protest and assail the ears of America.'"

Something New

Prof. Brown listened with absorption as Dr. Logan enunciated, almost with declamatory effect, those words.

One book to which both these professors had contributed they particularly wanted me to have. That was because of the theme and title, "What the Negro Wants," and because of the fact that the publisher, W. T. Couch of the University of North Carolina, "disavowed" it in his introduction.

The volume was published in 1944 and Mr. Couch apparently thought that the editor, who was Dr. Logan, and most of the contributors, including Prof. Brown, were reaching too far.

"While I disagree with the editor and most of the contributors on basic problems," the publisher had written, he school in the United States, the old M. Street High School in Washington. Two scholarly, urbane and charming men who are pleased to call themselves Angry Old Men, and ought to be allowed that right.

QUIET SUNDAY—Negro teenagers seized in Birmingham as demonstrators relaxing, in custody, yesterday.

By United Press International

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.

Thousands of singing, chanting Negroes marched past police lines to the Birmingham Jail yesterday and sang and prayed for hundreds of racial demonstrators held there.

Police and firemen under the personal command of Commissioner Eugene (Bull) Connor had high-pressure fire hoses trained on the marchers for part of the six-block route, but did not use them despite taunts of "Turn the water on, Bull."

"We don't want to ruin their Sunday clothes," the police officer said.

The demonstration was the closest thing to a victory the Negro community here has won in a month of racial strife that has resulted in nearly 1,500 arrests. Many of those in custody are elementary school

"Lord, Lord, Lord"

About 2,000 of the demonstrators—dressed in their Sunday best—streamed from the New Pilgrim Baptist Church shortly after 7 p. m. (E D T) and marched singing and laughing down Sixth Ave. toward the jail.

Mr. Connor, standing in a tangle of fire hoses before a barricade of pump engines and policemen, halted the marchers about a block short of their destination. The Negroes fell to their knees and began to pray. One husky Negro woman yelled, "Lord, Lord, Lord," and keeled over in a faint.

One of the Negro leaders, the the Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker, held a brief conference with Mr. Connor. The commissioner motioned the marchers through, and a lusty roar went up from the crowd.

"They asked us to let 'em go to the park and hold services," Mr. Connor said. "I said OK. It's their park, anyway."

The Negroes assembled in the small park designated for Negroes across from the jail and sang "Above my head I hear freedom in the air."

The song and prayer service lasted about 15 minutes, and the Negroes then headed the half-mile back to their church.

Police kept the entire section of Sixth St. cordoned off during the demonstration.

Yesterday's action indicated a softening of the attitude of police toward the demonstrators who were dispersed by police dogs and fire hoses on two earlier occasions.

Kings Sees Victory

Dr. Martin Luther King jr., leader of the movement, predicted in Atlanta earlier yesterday that the Negro demands for an end to segregated lunch counters, better jobs and establishment of a bi-racial committee to work out a timetable for further desegregation soon would be met.

"The power structure of Birmingham is disturbed," Dr. King said. "In a few days we will have everything we are asking for and more."

Earlier yesterday Negroes attempted kneel-ins at 14 white churches. They were accepted at four and turned away at 10.

The Rev. Andrew Young of Atlanta and the Rev. James Bevel had announced that the mass march would be made on the jail after the meeting in the Negro church.

Mr. Young said Negroes were determined to let their children stay in jail until all are released at once. He conferred at the fairgrounds with Chief Deputy Sheriff Raymond Belcher.

Burke Marshall, Assistant U. S. Attorney General in charge of civil rights, remained in town over the week end and was reported conferring with public officials. He kept his activities secret. Negroes said he had not contacted them.

Mississippi Store Blast: Bias Bomb or Lightning?

By The Associated Press

CLARKSDALE, Miss.

Sheriff L. A. Ross said yesterday his investigation indicated lightning—not a bomb—tore a hole in the roof of a drugstore owned by Negro integration leader Aaron Henry Saturday night. He is sending fragments and other evidence to the FBI laboratory in Washington.

Mr. Henry, state president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said the blast felt "like a concussion." Molotov cocktails damaged his home last month.

"I'm suspecting nitroglycerin," he said. "I don't think it was lightning. However, if it was, I'd like to know how he (the sheriff) accounts for windows being blown out 30 to 40 feet away.

During a lightning and thunderstorm and heavy rain, Sheriff Ross said, eight to ten people in Mr. Henry's drugstore escaped injury when a blast dipped a hole reported as 14 inches in diameter in the roof.

B'nai B'rith Urges Kennedy Act in South

The Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith urged President Kennedy yesterday to act with all his strength to protect Negro rights in the South and to exert moral leadership "to bring the nation to an understanding of the evil that is abroad in our land."

A telegram to the President signed by Dore Schary, the league's national chairman, and Paul H. Sampliner, chairman of the national executive committee, said the greatest tragedy in the current Birmingham, Ala., turmoil is that "these incredibly brutal measures taken against citizens have not yet stirred the profound anger called for by our whole history and moral commitment."

The message added:

"When ferocious dogs and high pressure hoses are turned loose on citizens in peaceful pursuit of their fundamental constitutional rights, law and order have become a mockery."

TEN NEGROES

This is the seventh article of a 10-part series, "Ten Negroes," by the Herald Tribune's national correspondent Robert S. Bird, on Negroes' views of White America.

By Robert S. Bird
National Correspondent

Who wouldn't wish for Eloise Calloway happy days and blessings true, golden joys and fortunes bright, and a heart that's ever light?

In most ways she already has nearly everything the average girl would want except a million dollars.

She's conspicuously attractive, has impeccable taste and a flair for dress. Her figure is superb with health and grace. Her voice is warm and her almond eyes lovely and upsetting. Her smile is radiant, and she hasn't a mean thought in her styled-hairdo head. She's 27, regularly dates several interesting men, and has a good secretarial job in lower mid-Manhattan.

She is also a Negro. And she is deeply discontented.

This you would never know unless she confided in you, for her mouth is framed in a gay greeting to the world. Miss Calloway believes that this deep-down-inside feeling of dissatisfaction comes from her profound urge to travel and live abroad. Not to live abroad permanently but, say, for a couple of years at a time. Then a spell back here at home, then more time abroad.

She is not just day-dreaming about this. Several years ago that deep restlessness impelled her to get a job with the foreign service, and she lived in Israel for two years as a secretary with a Point Four mission in the United States Embassy in Tel Aviv.

During those two years, her discontent vanished completely. She felt she was living in paradise. Then, after two years, the mission was phased out of Israel, its job accomplished, and she had to return to New York. The old feeling descended on her again when she got off the plane at Idlewild Airport a year and a half ago. And now, beneath the surface of her life, it bothers her more than ever.

I interviewed Miss Calloway at great length for this series on insights into Negro thinking and feeling, because I had known, when living in Israel myself, something of her popularity and happy times even though I was not acquainted with her personally.

My thought was that she would be able to draw an interesting contrast between the experience of an "average" nice, American Negro girl living in another country and living here in New York. Though it turned out that she was not able to appraise the difference, she was able to discribe it vividly to me.

We were sitting in a restaurant in Greenwich Village one evening recently when she recounted to me her unforgettable experience of arriving in Israel—she's a sensitive and refined girl brought up in Harlem, educated in an integrated high school, with a year of study at City College.

She had high expectations from the start but it was a long trip, that 7,000 miles from New York to Tel Aviv, and it was 2 o'clock in the morning Israeli time when she arrived at the airport in Lydda, near Tel Aviv.

"It was in January and it was lightly raining but quite warm, and a group of people from the mission had come to the airport to meet me," she said. "I was introduced around to everybody and made to feel I was one of them right from the start. But I was terribly tired as well as happy, and it was a long drive from the airport to my apartment. I had never had an apartment of my own before.

"But I hardly had time to think about that then, I was so tired. All I wanted was to lay down my poor, tired, body and go to sleep—and that I did. I was told that I would have breakfast the following morning with one of the girls who worked at the mission.

"And then I woke up in the morning. At first I didn't know where I was—then it hit me, I was in Israel. I jumped out of bed and saw there was a balcony right outside my bedroom.

"I slipped into a negligee and went out on the balcony into a bright, sunny day, a gorgeous day. There were flowers everywhere. Everything was so green. It was a Sunday. I thought, 'My God, what a beautiful place.' I remembered about how far away I was from home, and it was a joyful feeling. I suppose that was because the sun was shining so brightly and everything was so green and beautiful and it was just, you know . . ."

Her voice trailed off in ecstatic silence just thinking about it. It was much later in our conversations that Miss Calloway mentioned to me that all thoughts of race and race problems had on that morning dropped away from her for the first time and were gone from her mind for the next two years.

I asked her how fast or slowly her social acquaintance began in Israel, and she indicated that it had started with a rush.

"As a matter of fact, it started the next day, on Monday, when I became very friendly with a white girl employed in the mission. She invited me to her apartment for dinner, and then one of the men in the mission invited me out. And they introduced me to Israelis, and Israelis invited me out.

"Very quickly I was going out on dates, going here and going there, to parties, to dinners—I didn't have a free night."

Miss Calloway's life in Israel was completely interracial, and largely international in the sense that her friends were both white Americans and Israelis.

I asked Miss Calloway to tell me what she enjoyed most in this life abroad, and she made it clear that it was this free social life and the joy of travel—for her diplomatic passport made it possible for her to move freely with her other American friends from the embassy staff across the borders into the nearby Arab countries. And these were unforgettable experiences, too.

But the key thought this Harlem girl offered in contrasting life in a foreign country with life in America was this:

"I guess mainly the thing when I was away was that I didn't come in contact with the racial problem. As a matter of fact, I'm not really in contact with that sort of thing now. I mean, I just read about it.

"But while I was away I didn't experience any of this racial—" she didn't complete the sentence. "I just sort of forgot about the whole thing, sort of left it behind. And I was treated on an equal basis along with the whites in Israel, and there was no such thing as discrimination. You were accepted as a human being.

"Then after I got back home, then I realized—I guess it just hit me much harder than it did before I went away."

She looked at me solemnly and thoughtfully for a

So when she returned to New York and to her old inner discontent she took up her former, familiar life in Harlem, but in the new job with the Air Force.

The girls do not double date. As a matter of fact, her roommates tell her she is too choosy about her men friends.

"I think I AM choosy," she said complacently, "I know what I want when I date a man. I like the ambitious type, well-educated, interested in lots of things, a man who knows where he is going."

From the complete inter-racial social life of Israel, she now dates only with Negro men. I asked her if it bothered her that she doesn't have more of an inter-racial social life now.

"Oh, no, no, no," she said. "It doesn't bother me at all that I am dating only Negro boys. It isn't that I want to date white boys in particular—as a matter of fact it doesn't make any difference what color they are. Color does not make the difference. If I feel like dating a white boy I will date one. It's not that I want to date one as badly as all that."

'Forgot I Was,' 'Negro'

"I have never been discriminated against, I don't think, except once or twice when I was looking for a particular job. I did experience discrimination in that field—but working on the job, I have never been discriminated against. It's not a feeling of discrimination that I have in New York. I don't know how to explain it but when I went away I completely forgot that I was a Negro, more or less.

"In Israel I was treated as something special, I guess, and when I came home I became an ordinary individual."

Why, I asked her, is she not married? She smiled brightly on that one.

"I don't know, i'ts just that I don't think I am prepared to get myself bogged down in married life yet. I certainly want to travel some more. My social life was far more interesting abroad than it is here. I had a much better apartment, I could entertain, I imagine I could get a nice apartment here, too, but it would be much more expensive."

She is currently dating three men regularly but is not involved in heavy romance with any of them. Nor do they konw each other. She did not want to discuss them except to say that she enjoys going out with all of them, and all of them treat her very nicely. One is a dentist, one a real estate broker, and one a police officer.

It is very evident that when Miss Calloway goes out for the evening she goes with a certain amount of style. She dresses exquisitely, and she has innate dignity.

On her dates she often goes to prestige restaurants downtown, she said, but even more often drops into one of the Harlem places—Carl's Corner, Small's Paradise, the Red Rooster, and places of that kind. She and her "date" have cocktails and dinner and talk mostly about the theater, entertainment subjects and such chit-chat, with occasional conversations on racial matters which are in the news. But not much of that.

"I like nice people around me, a nice decor, an intimate atmosphere and some entertainment or dancing, because I love to dance," she said.

On my own workaday date with Miss Calloway at the restaurant in the Village she was wearing a soft gray suit of genuine distinction and a black, armless blouse. She had a turquoise necklace and a turquoise ring on her finger and a gold bracelet. She can carry all this without seeming to be a bit overdressed.

I asked her about the origin of her jewelry. She said she had bought the ring in Cairo, the bracelet (made of small, thin gold coins) in Turkey, and the necklace came from Iran.

She does her shopping in Fifth Avenue stores, she said, and her intellectual reading fare consists of a national news magazine, the morning paper and the Atlantic Monthly magazine.

She has no intellectual pretensions but she visits a museum exhibit occasionally, likes good movies, and goes frequently to the theater and ballet with her "dates." As to marriage, that's a subject she always shrugs off as something for the future—after more travel.

I had in the back of my mind as I talked with Miss Calloway a thing which Dr. Kenneth B. Clark, City College

Calloway mentioned to me that all thoughts of race and race problems had on that morning dropped away from her for the first time and were gone from her mind for the next two years.

I asked her how fast or slowly her social acquaintance began in Israel, and she indicated that it had started with a rush.

"As a matter of fact, it started the next day, on Monday, when I became very friendly with a white girl employed in the mission. She invited me to her apartment for dinner, and then one of the men in the mission invited me out. And they introduced me to Israelis, and Israelis invited me out.

"Very quickly I was going out on dates, going here and going there, to parties, to dinners—I didn't have a free night."

Miss Calloway's life in Israel was completely interracial, and largely international in the sense that her friends were both white Americans and Israelis.

I asked Miss Calloway to tell me what she enjoyed most in this life abroad, and she made it clear that it was this free social life and the joy of travel—for her diplomatic passport made it possible for her to move freely with her other American friends from the embassy staff across the borders into the nearby Arab countries. And these were unforgettable experiences, too.

But the key thought this Harlem girl offered in contrasting life in a foreign country with life in America was this:

"I guess mainly the thing when I was away was that I didn't come in contact with the racial problem. As a matter of fact, I'm not really in contact with that sort of thing now. I mean, I just read about it.

"But while I was away I didn't experience any of this racial—" she didn't complete the sentence. "I just sort of forgot about the whole thing, sort of left it behind. And I was treated on an equal basis along with the whites in Israel, and there was no such thing as discrimination. You were accepted as a human being.

"Then after I got back home, then I realized—I guess it just hit me much harder than it did before I went away."

She looked at me solemnly and thoughtfully for a moment or two, and then she brightened up as if determined not to spoil my enjoyment of my chicken pie by talking killjoy talk. But I had heard often, in my weeks of interviewing, other Negroes also say they wanted to be treated as human beings.

The Explanation

"Exactly what does that phrase, being treated as a human being, mean to you," I asked Miss Calloway.

"The feeling that I got was," she explained, "that the fact I was a Negro—my color—made no difference to them over there. I felt freer. It didn't matter to them that I was a Negro."

As a matter of fact, Israeli friends told me that Miss Calloway was one of the most popular American girls among the younger set of any in Israel.

But in her reminiscence, it seemed to me that what Miss Calloway felt most of all was an atmosphere, an enchanting atmosphere which was certainly real but which may also have been in the nature of an escape.

"I used to love to sit at the cafes on Dizongoff Circle and watch the people pass back and forth," she said. "It was just wonderful."

But what, I asked, was so wonderful about it (although I knew it was wonderful)?

"I don't know," she answered with a faraway look in her fresh-as-morn eyes, "just watching, I guess. Watching the people walking up and down. Sometimes you'd see the same faces three or four times, passing back and forth. Oh, that carefree air about the Israelis, laughing and talking and meeting with their friends, and then sitting at the cafe themselves.

"They would sit there for hours and hours and sip their coffee or their soft drinks as if they didn't have a care in the world. Such a relaxed feeling! It made me feel good, it really did."

From time to time, members of the mission would plan excursions for week ends to Beirut in Lebanon, to Damascus in Syria, to the fabulous Old City of Jerusalem through the Mandelbaum Gate into Jordan, and once she went on a tour lasting for more than a week into Egypt, visiting Cairo and Luxor and the other fabulous places.

Everywhere she went she felt free and happy and very much alive.

But there was a nagging thought away in the back of her mind. She was attached to a dying mission. It was under directive to phase out of Israel by degrees, and even from the time she first went there the mission was in process of slow liquidation.

"I often did not have enough work to do and I felt useless. I often thought why don't I just request a move to another mission. But I liked Israel too much, and I never made the request. I just thought as each day came along, maybe it will get better. But it got worse and in December, 1961, I found I was leaving Israel."

It was far more difficult for Miss Calloway to explain how the matter of race has affected her now that she is back in New York—because she does not feel any specific, personal discrimination against herself.

What she feels is more the atmosphere of race distinctions, race troubles, and race outrages on the general scene. This atmosphere is all around her again. And it seems as if she has become, after her return, a kind of unwilling, indirect participant in a problem which is very unpleasant—for even her younger, student brother at Clark University in Atlanta is joining in race demonstrations.

It is evident that her life is much more circumscribed here, and that she is more of a "loner" than in earlier years before she went away.

In fairness to her, she did not say these things directly but this was the interpretation that I got from what she did say.

Although Harlem-born, her mother was careful to see that she got as much education as possible in integrated schools—first the Joan of Arc Junior High School on 93d Street, then the Washington Irving High School at 16th St. and Irving Place. She made many white friends in these schools and they did a lot of socializing while they were in school, but over the years they have lost contact with each other.

And her parents moved out to Long Island about eight years ago, leaving her faced with a choice to make about her own life and career.

She decided to stay in Harlem because she was "used to it," and she joined with two Negro girl friends in setting up an apartment together in lower Harlem. It is a big place with a bedroom for each girl, a living room large enough for all, and a working-size kitchen with a well-stocked larder. The girls have got along together fine for eight years—with time out while she sojourned in Israel.

I had in the back of my mind as I talked with Miss Calloway a thing which Dr. Kenneth B. Clark, City College profesor of psychology, had said to me. He is an outstanding Negro psychologist himself.

Dr. Clark had said:

"Among the complexities of the American racial problem is the fact that problems of personal adjustment and personal difficulties which would be true for individuals without regard to race, we Negroes have complicated even more in this overriding racial problem of ours.

"It becomes extremely difficult at times to tell where one begins and the other ends in trying to understand the role of a particular person."

I repeated this view of Dr. Clark to Miss Calloway and asked her if she thought she was seeking an escape from the fact that she was a Negro girl.

She smiled and said in her gentle and lovely voice:

"I don't think so. I want to travel for very real reasons. I love travel. Take my trip to Egypt. I had read as a child about the pyramids and the Sphynx and riding on camels and all those wonderful things. And then I went to Egypt and I saw them, and I rode on a camel. And it was all much, much more wonderful, even, than imagining them when reading about it. Isn't that good enough reason for wanting to travel?"

I answered truthfully that I couldn't agree with her more. This much is certain: She will make some husband a wonderful traveling companion, and she will enhance the scenery wherever she goes.

TEN NEGROES

THIS is the eighth of the 10-part series, "Ten Negroes," by the Herald Tribune's national correspondent Robert S. Bird, on Negroes' views of white America.

By Robert S. Bird

The growing horde of semi-literate and largely unemployable Negro youngsters who are being released from city school systems as "drop-outs" is being cited on all sides as a tragedy and peril for this country.

The problem is especially aggravated in the District of Columbia—in the heart of the nation's capital—where an unending debate centers on the situation.

One day recently I visited a high school in the slum-ridden and racially troubled part of Washington that lies just to the west of Howard University, scarcely 20 minutes' drive from the White House.

My idea was to talk with the Negro principal, Dr. Bennetta B. Washington, about the human side of her 1,700 pupils—avoiding altogether the morass of arguments in the vast, endless abstract debate that is going on.

that looks like any of a hundred big city high schools built between the two World Wars.

It stands with a dominating look of importance in the neighborhood, which is itself not at all a noisome tenement area but a place of shabby single, double and multiple-family houses, many with their own tiny porches, lawns and yards. Rows of trees along the sidewalks attest to its former better-class status.

Dr. Washington is a warm, slightly plump woman whose high reputation as an outstanding school principal was described to me by several Negro educators and professional men who are worried about the general situation.

She is one of those extraordinarily busy women who are somehow able to make time for a visitor. She made me comfortable in her office near the front door of the school, ordered coffee for us both, and plunged right into the problem.

'Pathetic Despair'

"We have about 163 of the 450 ninth-graders who are below the fifth-grade level," she said. "They are products of the overcrowded educational situation. They have such despair it's just pathetic. And when we look into the community we find a great lack of jobs, broken homes, and parents who just don't think that education is the answer to their plight.

"The consequence is there is a lack of aspiration among the children, and we find a kind of acting out in the behavior of some of them—hostility toward other children and teachers—and among others a quiet acceptance, a withdrawal and a passive resistance.

"This is a real challenge in the field of education, the ability to understand and perceive the problem of these youngsters. And it is hard to expect this from a great many of the Negro teachers who come from middle class backgrounds.

"Some of these teachers who have come out here simply cannot relate to it because it's too close to them. Some Negro people can't handle it. It's too agonizing. Such teachers often feel that what they see in the school is just too symptomatic of the larger problem.

"Why is the pupil acting the way he is acting? Why doesn't he have respect for school? What are the things against which the child is being defensive? Such teachers understand all right, I think, but they identify with it personally and find themselves unable to face up and work through the problem."

Dr. Washington's high school is what is called a comprehensive mid-city school devoted to the development of students from a cross section of the city's population. She herself is an authority on problem youngsters. Author of "Background Factors and Adjustment," she earned her bachelor's and master's degrees from Howard University and her doctor of philosophy from the Catholic University of America. She is the wife of Walter E. Washington, and is the mother of a teen-age daughter herself.

The great part of the pupils at this school are in the two middle "tracks" or courses of study—the general track which can prepare pupils for college if they measure up, and one which brings them to a terminal point in their education and gives them skills for business jobs.

A lower track gives "basic" education to children who, though not necessarily below normal in ability or aptitude, are nevertheless functioning on the basic level.

But the study courses which seem to excite Dr. Washington the most, and are intensely "human" to hear about, are the Honors course for exceptionally talented youngsters from the Negro slums, and a course aimed at enticing potential male drop-outs to stay in school a little longer so as to become, at least, employable in the outside world.

'A Work-Study Course'

This last course in effect prepares boys to become maintenance men—janitors—but not ordinary ones. Rather knowledgable ones who are able to say how a particular floor covering ought to be cleaned and how one kind of paint differs from another.

Actually, this is an experimental work-study course for boys who are retarded in reading and mathematics. These are indicators which help to measure the youngsters handicapped in many ways by their background environment. They carry an extra load of subjects and are supported all the way through by the teachers in maintaining the highest morale. There are currently about 25 students in the Honors program, Dr. Washington said:

"The same teachers work with them right through their course—and these are teachers who like kids, who don't look down their noses at them, who expect the children to learn, and who are able to stimulate a response in the youngsters. For despite his despair, every child has an urge to learn.

"Also, underneath all a parent's problems and excuses, every parent is concerned about his child's education. He just doesn't want to be blamed for the obvious problems. And this is why we try to work with the parents, too.

"In the Honors program we provide a complete orientation job. We give support to scholarship talent. We work with the American Association of University Women in special programs to acquaint the youngsters with the theater, the art galleries, museums, and to learn about the colleges.

"Beyond the regular school counseling, many of these women holds teas in their homes to establish a rapport with the youngsters and to introduce them to the college idea.

I asked Dr. Washington to tell me more about the background aspects of these children.

"In some ways their background is distinctive," she said. With these exceptional pupils, there has not been the same kind of distorted childhood as with many of the other children. These are children who have experienced some success. Somewhere along the way they experienced a positive constructive relationship with some adult who was close to them. Everything wasn't hatred in the household.

"It was not necessarily a parent, but some one within the family, even if it was a broken family. Some adult—perhaps an adored grandmother—held the child to a high level of expectation, and this helped to produce the high motivation which the child has today."

A White Teacher Talks

The principal had telephoned to an Honors course teacher, inviting her to tell me a little about these bright pupils, and soon there appeared in the office Mrs. Joan Wofford, a young white teacher. It didn't require much more than a look at Mrs. Wofford to see that she must be practically perfect as a teacher for a bunch of brainy young kids from underprivileged backgrounds.

Mrs. Wofford has a built-in, upbeat grin; eyes that are so alert it seems surprising that they are also filled with warmth and enthusiasm, and as quick a mind as any one I ever talked with. She is married to a young Rhodes Scholar lawyer, and she was teaching in an upper-class white suburban high school in the Boston area when Dr. Washington persuaded her to come to Cardozo.

"Many of these youngsters are not caught up yet to the point where my pupils were in the white school," Mrs. Wofford said, "but they are every bit as bright and three times as excited. It's a thrill to work with them.

"They're not in the slightest bit blasé, as they were in my white school, and they are not hampered by the same preconceptions. In my other school they started out with a bias against Shakespeare, certain that he was boring. But these youngsters never heard about Shakespeare until they got into this program.

"Really, it's a thrill to see them react. I suggested to some of them that they try reading Plato, and a few days later I came into the classroom and found them all arguing heatedly, passionately, over Plato's ideas. Remember, they're only ninth-graders.

"These are unusual kids in another sense, considering the backgrounds of most of them. Somewhere they got the idea early in their school life that books could be interesting. Maybe there was a book or two at home, or perhaps somebody in the home was a reader, or a parent was terribly strict and made the child read.

"Even at this age level it is not too late to pull these children up to college level. But we don't have half enough money for books. They have a hunger for books. They're reading like mad. I buy paperback books for them, but we really need lots more books.

'A Work-Study Course'

This last course in effect prepares boys to become maintenance men—janitors—but not ordinary ones. Rather knowledgable ones who are able to say how a particular floor covering ought to be cleaned and how one kind of paint differs from another.

Actually, this is an experimental work-study course for boys who are retarded in reading and mathematics. These are indicators which help to measure the youngsters who have a high degree of absenteeism from school and are heading for the swelling multitude of drop-outs starting out in adult life unable to find jobs for themselves.

"The idea of this course," explained Dr. Washington, "is to give these boys a good training in building maintenance and along with that to give them a positive concept of themselves. It is to lure back into classes for this kind of special training boys who were coming to school only sporadically or not all.

"We are already able to see a great change in many of these boys who have come back to learn the job of maintenance—the composition of different materials, how to clean windows, and practical things like that.

"As they learn from this course a new respect for the vocation of maintenance work, we see in them a new neatness in the way they dress. Most of them are doing part-time work. We are teaching them how to operate on a budget, and we have a school bank. It's amazing to see the change in them."

Actually, Dr. Washington's enthusiasm is based on the measure of what, potentially, can be done with these youngsters rather than on any mass program to help solve the larger problem. This is only experimental, and at present not more than 20 boys are taking the course. But it points in a hopeful new direction.

"We have two goals for potential drop-outs," Dr. Washington said. "Either to return them back into the main school life and try to get them to finish high school, or to enable them to make the transition from school to an actual job.

"In support of this employment effort we are writing to prospective employers in a beginning effort at job placement, we are teaching the pupils how to talk to people, and we are giving them needed help in reading. A few boys have responded enough to go back to taking four subjects in the regular school."

In the middle track groups, special encouragement is needed for pupils, too, according to this understanding principal.

"The average student in the college course track does not have high enough motivation and is not well book-oriented. Nor do they recognize the scholarship opportunities. So they need to be constantly stimulated and taught that college is achievable for them, that it is not beyond their grasp.

"Those who want to go from high school into business also have to be stimulated, and we really work hard to ease the transition for them from school into business jobs. Our aim is to make them acceptable for Grade 4 clerk-typist jobs in government, and to equip them for the Civil Service examination they would have to take."

But there is still another course of study in this school —and this is the one that is yielding the most spectacular results of all. More than that, it emphasizes in the most human terms possible the tragedy in neglect of these young Negro children from broken and impoverished homes.

The course is the top one in the school—the Honors course, now in its second year. For this, Dr. Washington has found it most important that the pupils have an integrated staff, and her teachers in this course are exceptionally well trained. This is for exceptional children, pupils who, though they may come from an environment of poverty, have an unusually high I.Q. and unusually high motivation .

These youngsters are top-notch college material, though special programs to acquaint the youngsters with the theater, the art galleries, museums, and to learn about the colleges.

"Beyond the regular school counseling, many of these women holds teas in their homes to establish a rapport with the youngsters and to introduce them to the college idea.

"They are so interested and so unsophisticated that they will read anything—from Chaucer's Middle English and Shakespeare's poetry to 'To Kill a Mockingbird.' All of it is exciting to them."

The principal and Mrs. Wofford emphasized that these young people in the Honors course were simply picked right out of the general body of pupils.

"I can't believe that we couldn't up the number of kids of college caliber by one-third," Mrs. Wofford said. "But we would need money, books and counseling."

The Teacher Problem

Dr. Washington discussed the teacher problem in a school such as hers, where many of the pupils have fear and hostility. Washington public schools are reported to be plagued with physical violence by the pupils. But this principal says much of the trouble occurs when teachers fail to understand that the children have no way of curbing their anger, and the teacher responds with "power" instead of understanding. Instead of understanding the child, she said, these teachers speak back and exacerbate the situation.

"Everything depends on how the teacher handles her power," she explained. "Some teachers act as if the kids were a captive audience, held there by force. The teacher parades her power. The child recognizes this power and in turn tris to exhibit his own power, and the two get into a power struggle.

"A better way for a teacher to act would be to take the attitude, 'I accept you as a person, I value your worth, but I don't accept your behavior.'"

Having in mind the slum environment of these children in Cardozo High School, I asked, altogether separately, a professor of sociology in Washington, Dr. J. Franklin Edwards, about the effect of environment on the pupil.

"Many of these youngsters live under the most adverse conditions emotionally," he said. "Broken families, tense situations, poverty. Also, many of them are not getting enough to eat. A study was made on this here in Washington and they found that in the kindergarten and first grades, pupils who were not doing well had low hemoglobins.

"They just didn't have enough hemoglobin, and so they didn't feel well. But more than that, they had all kinds of emotional problems. They drooled and they cried easily. They were hypersensitive, they slept in their chairs. These were youngsters who should have been in the third grade, but were still in first grade."

In one aspect of home environment, Prof. Edwards agreed completely with Dr. Washington and Mrs. Wofford —that cultural poverty was handicapping these youngsters, and one sign of it was that they just didn't get to read early, and they went on through the grades increasingly handicapped.

"The 1,700 youngsters in this school," Dr. Washington told me, "do and must represent every facet of the general population. We have some superior pupils, and it is up to us to devise a program to try to identify these and give them as stimulating a course of study as possible.

"We must try to enrich academically their backgrounds and raise their sights. And this means working with the wamilies. Until the community can give this support to the school, until it can do this kind of thing, the problem will remain."

Besides wanting their full civil rights and equality with white Americans, most Negroes would like to have —just as most white Americans would—mink coats for their women, beautiful automobiles, lushly decorated homes, talented careers, fascinating friends, trips around the world, castles in Spain, and all the rest.

Negroes are by no means excluded from this life of grandeur but, as in the case of the white population, only a small fraction of them manage to scale the heights.

The rest read about it and enjoy it in articles and pictures in Ebony, a slick-paper, prestige magazine for Negro readers modeled after the format of Life magazine.

The world depicted in Ebony is primarily a Negro world, but also an interracial world of glamour and achievement. Basically it is a real world for those who have reached it, although somewhat prettied up for presentation to the readers.

TEN NEGROES

prestigious world is John H. Johnson, president of the Johnson Publishing Co. of Chicago. He and his wife created Ebony, and they, together with his mother, own and publish it alnog with three other magazines for Negroes and a new but expanding list of book titles.

It seemed to me, in seeking peepholes into Negro thinking and feeling, that the man who published Ebony might nave some interesting viewpoints, and I arranged to talk with him in his quietly sumptuous office in Chicago.

He is an impressive man of 45, brimming with physical and mental vigor, good cheer and friendliness. And he displays a frank simplicity of manner which invests him with special dignity and distinction.

He obviously enjoys his success. At the same time he seems to have forgotten nothing of his impoverished boyhood in rural Arkansas, and nothing of the early years in Chicago when he and his mother, a domestic who never got beyond the third grade, were on the relief rolls there. That was for a short time in the 1930s.

This gives him a real sense of identification with Negro youngsters who are at the threshold of their own careers, and he talked to me at length about it.

But before I touch on that, Mr. Johnson's view of the Negro world of glamor as depicted in his magazine Ebony, in articles and pictures about successful and interesting Negro people, ought to be given first.

"I think that all of us ought to devote all our effort toward improving the community and the world we live in," he said, "but I think at some point the Negro ought to have a right to be a human being in the fullest sense of the word. He ought to have the right to give a party, go to a country club if he likes, buy a mink coat for his wife if he has the money, take a skiing trip somewhere, visit the Riviera.

"Now I don't think the Negroes who are able to do some of these things are made alien to other Negroes, nor does it put them apart from the others. This is just another way of expressing his interest in being a human being.

"And I want to say this, I don't picture this world as a separate world. What we depict are Negroes who, through their own efforts, or by birth or accident or some other means, are able to acquire what all other people want. And it is exactly the same in the white world, where the majority enjoy reading about the people at the top.

"What I think I am doing is showing the readers that we have all strata in our society as in the general society. We're showing Negroes that some of us are able to make it. One of our most widely read sections is called 'Speaking of People,' and it deals with employment, really—new jobs that people have found for themselves."

Mr. Johnson's office is in the superbly decorated Madison Avenue executive style, with quiet-toned carpet and fabrics, richly upholstered furniture, inviting book shelves, a spate of foliage plants, and plenty of space for pacing up and down, which he likes to do as he talks. per cent now.

The World of Achievement

"If you examine my magazine you'll find not so much a world of glamor any more as a world of achievement," he world of glamor but we have gradually become more in- continued. "What happened was, we started out with the terested in people's achievements."

I asked him what proportion of the Negro population was represented in the glamor-achievement world of Ebony, and he answered:

"Oh, I would think it's perhaps 10 per cent. I know years ago Dr. W. T. DuBois used to talk about the 'talented tenth,' and I think that even if he said that many years ago it still holds true. I mean by that, about 10 per cent of the Negro people are those who are able to enjoy many of these advantages we're speaking about. I think the proportion is increasing as time goes by, but I would hold it to about 10 per cent now."

"That glamor world is not my world," he said, in answer to my question. "I think my world is a more realistic one. But it's true, we try to find the glamor side in our magazine even though not all the people we glamorize believe that this is all their world either.

"We are like the movies—just as they tend to embellish and adorn the normal, I think we do the same. This is not to misstate the truth but simply expresses the search for something that will capture the imagination. And this is not the whole world of the people who like to read about it, ber of a highly respected Negro family in Selma, Ala., where her father was a physician. She became his beautiful and talented wife and co-worker and he left the company to launch Ebony.

In 1945, on a cash capital of $500 borrowed on his mother's furniture, Ebony made its appearance with 25,000 copies. Today its circulation is over 800,000.

After the magazine was well toward success, several years after it was started, Mrs. Johnson quit active work to devote herself to the home. The couple adopted two children, John jr. and Linda, and the family live in an integrated residential section of Chicago in a large and richly furnished apartment. Mr. Johnson owns the apartment house. He refuses to live in the country because, he says, he does not want to be reminded by too much landscape of anything from his rural Arkansas past.

'We Need All These Voices'

Getting down to a discussion of race problems, Mr. Johnson answered a question of mine about whether he feels personally integrated in the civic and business world of Chicago.

"No, I don't think so," he said. "I think integration encompasses the total activities of an individual, if you think of them in the broad sense. I get into these groups in the white world pretty much as a representative of the Negro community, even though I might not be identified as such. I don't think I am in there because I am a successful publisher. I think it's because I am a successful Negro publisher."

Speaking of the diversity of Negro organizations and personalities driving for diverse Negro goals, Mr. Johnson said:

"I think we need all these voices. We are living in an age of diversification. Even business is not able to make out with only a one-product development. The same way about the race relations problem. I feel there is no one way to do it. I don't think we can identify any one kind of leadership as the only one. Nobody quite understands why this is so, and nobody understands why a certain cola company that used to put its drink out in one size bottle now has to market in several sizes.

"There is something in the air that requires diversification of effort toward any accomplishment, and in the Negro field we need all of these people, even at the risk of appearing—well, whatever you want to call it. I think the Black Muslims are making a contribution to racial equality by simply challenging in a different kind of way. Obviously no thinking person who truly believes in democracy—and I believe in it—would follow a policy of hate, although the Muslims deny this policy. But the point I am making is, as James Baldwin points out, we have got to get white people to listen before we can convince them.

"I believe that the Muslims in their approach, despite the fact I don't approve of them are helping to get people to listen. If they get people to listen to us, then they make some kind of contribution.

"And if we must be critical of the Muslims then we must also realize that we, meaning the white population, are responsible for the conditions which created the Muslims in the first place. And the best way to get rid of them is not to criticize them but to improve the conditions of the black man, and make a mockery out of what they say by bringing about a real conversion to democratic practices.

"They are not going anywhere. They are going to keep preaching their philosophy as long as what they say is true, and as long as what they say is true it's going to grow."
